The situation of my family has been such since my return as to put out it of my power to prepare such a statement of my trip as I have desired. I will write further in a few days.

I am yours with great esteem,

CHURCH EXTENSION IN OUR MISSIONARY FIELDS.

In immediate connection with the preceding letter on Minnesota, we insert the following from Rev. J. G. Riheldaffer, bearing more particularly on Church Extension in the west. His remarks apply with equal force to every part of our widely extended missionary fields. Could our Church Extension Fund be greatly increased, by timely and adequate assistance rendered to young and struggling churches in erecting their houses of worship, hundreds of dollars would be saved to our missionary fund: for so soon as the house of worship is finished, the pews are let, the income for the support of the minister increases and very soon he needs no further aid: his church becomes self-sustaining.

St. Paul, M. T.

Rev. C. C. Jones.

Rev. and Dear Brother;—I fear that my letter may prove sometimes an unwelcome tax upon your precious moments; but knowing that you have at heart the spread of the kingdom of Christ, and that you will not despise the opinion of a brother obscure in the church, if that opinion have anything of merit in it, I make bold to write. If I magnify one department of the church's work above another, you will, I trust, pardon me, when you remember that it is that one to which my attention has been turned, more than to any other. The establishment of healthy Presbyterian churches in all the growing towns and cities of this great valley is, I confess, an object nearer my heart than any other on this earth. If we are to influence the multitudes who are rushing into this great valley, like the gathering of many waters, we must occupy the central points of influence. For this we have the example of the Apostles. In order to do this, it seems to me that two things are essential, so far as means and instrumentalities are concerned. 1st. Such a support of the men to be employed as will not prevent the procuring of the most efficient men in the church. There are men of experience who could be had to occupy such points if they could be supported.

2d. A second thing which is indispensable to the speedy growth of a church in a town or city, is the immediate erection of a respectable house of worship. When a minister is sent to such a place he should have the means at once to build such a house; it should be one of the very first things done. Such a course would at once give the people confidence, and impart a vigour to the movement which would enlist the feelings of the community, and secure their attendance upon the means of grace.

An infant church in a growing and ambitious community, sustains an injury by a manifestation of weakness. When we first enter a town and begin to preach, and propose to build a church, there are many who will flock around us, and an interest is easily awakened, which, if taken in time, may be used to great advantage. But if the undertaking drag and come soon to a stand-still for want of means, the Church assumes a sickly appearance; many who looked with favour upon it at the first, lose confidence, and only the few Christians whose hearts are in the work, will stick by it through the night of darkness that must inevitably follow. We may safely undertake to exert a controlling influence in any new town where we can build a good house of worship, and support a faithful pastor.

Suppose that the Presbyterian Church were to build ten churches in as many important towns every year, worth $4,000 each, in addition to the natural growth of the Church in cities where it is already established, and in communities able to form churches and build for themselves, would it not tell more upon the growth and efficiency of the church, than twice the amount of means necessary to do this would, if expended in simply keeping a larger number of feeble churches alive, and would it not add to the zeal and qualifications of the brethren employed in these enterprises.

As I have no doubt but those who have the oversight of the Church's work in this department of Christian enterprise, often consult as to the best means to be used, I have thrown out these hints at what I deem of such vast importance, with the view of asking whether it is not possible for the proper authorities of the Church to take some measures which will look more directly towards a vigorous Church extension in the West. Could there not be such a course taken as would bring into the Church Extension Committee the coming year $50,000.

I hope you will pardon the freedom I have taken in writing you upon such a subject. My apology is that I feel these things, have no brother to talk with about them, and have no Presbytery to attend. Praying that God may give that wisdom which is profitable to direct, I am,

Very truly yours in Him,

J. G. Riheldaffer.

SANTA CLARA, CALIFORNIA.

Brother R. McCoy, who has recently returned from California, gives us a description of Santa Clara as a field for an active missionary; may it meet the eye of some one who, possessing every suitable qualification, will say, Here am I, send me.

My opinion is, however, that notwithstanding the crowding of other denominations, one of our good self-denying young men, of respectable talents, can be sustained there without teaching, and raise funds to build a commodious house of worship. He would at first have a very small audience, but in a few years the population of the town and surrounding country will fill all the churches in the place. There is probably not another spot in the Union that will sustain a denser population than the region around that village; and no place in California affords a more desirable place of residence. I do hope, therefore, that the Board will send some young brother there without delay. I do not mean that he must be unmarried. One with a wife only, a good wife, need not be the least afraid of starving. But, as the building of a house in Santa Clara is indispensable to success, and will be a very heavy undertaking for the few who feel an interest in the matter, it would perhaps be better to send an unmarried missionary there.

LETTERS FROM MISSIONARIES.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Real and efficient working.

A brother in North Carolina gives us briefly the manner in which he has set out to build up a Presbyterian Church. If his life is spared to pursue the work, so happily begun, there can be no doubt of his success.

I have charge of two churches. I am generally visiting among my people three days, or a part of three days of each week. I have during the quarter paid sixty-five visits or more. As I believe that the best means of building up a Presbyterian church is to instruct the children and young people in the congregation in the Bible and Catechism of our Church, I have undertaken to teach them the catechism, and will in a short time have them studying the Scriptures. I have forty-four or more studying the catechism. I have about twenty classes in different families which I visit and instruct at home. I visit the families in my congregation and instruct the children at home. This is very laborious, as the families are often from one to six miles, or more, apart.

Ordination, &c.

"The Presbytery of Lake, according to adjournment, met here on the 15th of June, and ordained and installed me pastor of the Presbyterian church here. It was the first ceremony of the kind witnessed by the people, most of whom were in a great degree unacquainted with Presbyterian order; and the impression was exceedingly favourable.

"Yesterday was observed as our second communion since I came; and I have to report eight additions. Two by profession of faith, both heads of families, making our number now thirty-five. The Church is evidently growing in grace and inward strength as well as in numbers. Our weekly prayer-meetings and lecture are well attended, and very interesting and refreshing to the souls of God's children. A female prayer-meeting is also established and well sustained, and is felt to be a means of great grace.

"I know no more promising field than this just now, to our church. The hearts of the people are turned towards us, and if by the grace of God we are enabled to do all things and to stand, I am sure we will grow to be 'a city set on a hill.'"

VIRGINIA.

A warning to Sabbath-breakers.

"God, in his providence, has just given this whole community a most solemn and impressive warning, which I trust will not be lost upon them. Yesterday evening, a party of young men, not remembering the Sabbath-day to keep it holy, went out to bathe, and one of them, a student attending the Academy, was drowned. His parents reside in an adjoining county, and had sent him here to prosecute his studies. He was an amiable and pleasant youth, and doubtless knew that it was wrong to spend his Sabbath thus, for he was very unwilling to go, but suffered himself to be over-persuaded by his companions. Thus suddenly and unexpectedly has he been called to try the realities of the eternal world. Yesterday morning he was at church, and but little thought that he was listening to his last sermon."

MICHIGAN.

Light and Shade.

"There are now some inquirers for the way of life, and one or two of peculiar interest. Two men who have but just escaped a drunkard's doom, have been arrested by God's Spirit, and one of them entertains a hope that he has passed from death unto life. In addition to these tokens of God's mercy, I may mention the fact of a full attendance upon public worship, and an increased interest in our Sabbath-school. Our prayer-meetings have been well attended, especially by the female portion of our church. These things are encouraging. They present the bright side of the picture. But we are often cast down by reason of the coldness and lethargy of many of the members of our little church, and opposition from without. Besides the vast desolations all around us, the Sabbath is constantly desecrated. Multitudes go regularly to the woods to hunt, or to the lakes to fish, on this holy day. Iniquity seems to abound. But I would not complain. Our 'few sheep in the wilderness' will not be forsaken of God. During the past year our numbers have more than doubled. May God continue his blessings to us."

TEXAS.

The following extract closes quite a long and interesting letter from a missionary who has recently gone to preach the gospel in Texas. It breathes the right spirit. He there finds plenty of work to do, and looks for Divine assistance. Will not Christians pray for missionaries?

In conclusion I would say, I have not been disappointed either way in coming to Texas. I find things pretty much as I expected. I did not expect to find large congregations of attentive hearers, large churches of faithful and pious members already at my hand. But I came to try to do something to procure such a state of things, and I hope, if God has sent me here, he will make me an instrument of good to this people, or wherever he may call me to go. I feel that I am not my own, and that it matters not where I am, or what I do, so that I am where the Lord will have me to be; nor what I do, so that it be doing his will. Without him I know I can do nothing; and I have been made to feel this since I came here. When I see hundreds of people who will not come to God's house to hear the gospel, and will not read it; when I see those who do come to hear, listen as if they were not concerned, then I feel that except the Lord work, it is in vain for man to speak. Relying on his promises, however, I will labour, if God give me grace and strength in hope. The difficulty is in being able at all times to labour and to speak as if it were a case of life and death, which it really is. But the difficulty is in realizing this fact at all times. Pray for your missionaries! Tell the Church to pray for them.

GEORGIA.

Encouraging—Conversion, &c.

Dear Brother—In my last quarterly report I remarked that religion seemed to be at a low ebb. It affords me great pleasure now to state that we have been favoured with some cheering evidences of the presence of God among us, especially at the church some nine miles from town. There has been, on the part of some, marked attention to preaching; not only solemnity, but undoubted signs of religious feeling, and love to the truth as it is in Jesus. The truth through the mercy and power of God has taken some effect, and produced a sense of divine things which has awakened thoughtfulness, and led to a striving, as I humbly hope, after God and the great salvation. Blessed be his name, that he has favoured us with even a few crumbs from the Master's table.

Recently when the Lord's Supper was administered at that point, many of the communicants appeared to be deeply affected. One coloured man, about twenty years of age was admitted to the privileges of the church. The account he gave of his conversion before the session was altogether intelligent and satisfactory. Formerly I was much disheartened in reference to the success of my labours in that neighbourhood, but latterly I feel greatly encouraged. Another cause for devout gratitude, which I must state, is the unusual harmony and good feeling existing among the members of the church.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

OUR CHARACTER AND THE NUMBER OF OUR CANDIDATES.

The dearth of candidates is a fact in our history, affecting our character. The perfection of a Church consists in its efficiency to glorify God. The ministry is the chief instrumentality for the perpetuation and extension of the gospel; and a diminution of its power, either in nature or extent, necessarily implies defect. Our character must suffer among the allied tribes of Israel and before the world, by a failure to do our appointed work in the warfare of the kingdom. On a survey of our external condition, there is an appearance of order, discipline, and readiness for service; but no array of organization can compensate for the absence of leaders of the host, or for the lack of the true spirit on the part of the people. The decrease in the number of candidates is a serious injury to the character of a church; and character should be held in high estimation among Christ's people. Is there not an intimate communion between the body and the head, a sympathy of glory and of reproach, a close relationship identifying Christ and his elect in all the events of providence? The character of a church should be precious in the eyes of those who compose it. If an individual fail to exemplify the Christian graces and to perform his part in the work of promoting the Redeemer's cause, he not only sustains personally a loss of Christian reputation, but his guilty imperfections are reflected upon the whole body of believers and the common Lord of all. In like manner, the deficiency of Christian resources in propagating the gospel must bring reproach not only upon ourselves, but upon the church at large and upon Christ himself. In former times, the success of the Presbyterian Church in rearing up a large number of ministers gave her a position of true honour—of honour, because of influence and of capacity for usefulness. But now, the decrease of our students is marring the fame acquired in a long experience and is bringing us to the dust. Ah! did it but bring us to the dust! Then would there be hope. But there is scarcely a more deplorable condition than to suffer a loss of character, and yet to remain insensible to it,—an insensibility ordinarily visited upon religious declension. Arise, O Lord, upon our Zion, with the grace of thy Spirit, to make our low estate the subject of repentance and of tears!

A CALL TO YOUNG MEN.

"Wo is me, if I preach not the Gospel."—1 Cor. ix. 16.

It is a heavenly theme:
I hear a voice divine—no idle dream—
Calling to duty and to self-denial,
In face of many a stern and bitter trial,
Reverberating when the day is bright,
Soft whispering in the gentle hush of night;
Chiding, when earthly pleasures round me rise;
Soothing, when sorrows fill my weeping eyes.
Go, preach the Gospel, fly to every land;
Obey the risen Saviour's last command.

It comes with accent clear,
Like heavenly music to the listening ear,
With sweetest emphasis of love appealing
To conscious duty and to Christian feeling;
Or comes with trembling accent sad and low,
Like distant echoes from a world of wo,
Of millions perishing through lack of vision,
Chiding my unbelief and indecision.
Go, preach the Gospel, fly to every land;
Obey the risen Saviour's last command.

And I must answer true,
Full many an obstacle will rise in view:
Affection's voice will tempt me to forbear,
And softer labours to my hand prepare.
But No—a bleeding Saviour's love hath found me;
His everlasting arms have sweetly bound me;
I'll gladly follow where he leads the way,
Nor think of danger while I hear Him say,
Go, preach the Gospel, fly to every land;
Obey the risen Saviour's last command.

Selected.

RESPONSIBILITIES OF THE CHURCH.

The dearth of candidates is a fact involving many responsibilities. "To preach the Gospel to every creature" requires a hearty performance by the Church of her covenant obligations. Human responsibility is co-ordinate with the appointment of means; and God condescends to use means as the expression of his love, rather than the ally of his power. If the great subject of the ministry had been removed from the range of Christian obligation and action, what an amount of motives enforcing religious zeal, would have been lost to the Church! The perpetuation of the ministry is among the plainest obligations and rewards of Christian exertion; and the power of these motives should be brought into exercise by a survey of our deficiencies and of our wants in every quarter.

Would that more of our mothers made a prayerful study of the scene of Shiloh, when, three thousand years ago, a beloved handmaiden of the Lord stood before the tabernacle, with her young child. If any mother could have rightly plead for the indulgence of a son's presence and fellowship, it was Hannah with her first-born. But parental yearnings yielded to covenant engagements. Having solemnly dedicated her child to God as the best condition of his birth, her Christian purpose had no higher aims than to offer him as a prophet of the Most High. No less obligatory, surely, are the voluntarily assumed vows of Christian parents to bring up their children for the vocation in which they can do the greatest service for God. At baptism, the child is dedicated "to the Father, to the Son and to the Holy Ghost;" and the dedication implies a promise to fulfil its terms. The Board believe that heavy guilt is chargeable upon the Church for neglect of duty in training up children according to the baptismal covenant. Parental responsibility, adequately felt, and acted out, with a reliance on the Spirit, in the appropriate methods of Christian fidelity, would soon occasion a change in the aspect of our Church's affairs. Her present condition constitutes a forcible appeal to the whole body of Christian parents within her pale. God is warning us of neglect of duty and urging to the employment of the means suited by his grace to effect a reform. If our Church awakes not to a just perception of her responsibilities, the judgments of heaven must ultimately descend upon her in still more fearful visitations.

HINTS TO CANDIDATES.

NOT DOING ANY GOOD.

You say you do no good by preaching. This is talking weakly; I had almost used a harder word. Should you not be chided for it?—Orton.

"Why do you leave off preaching?" said Latimer to one. "Because I do no good," was the reply. "That, brother," said the Bishop, "is a naughty, very naughty reason."

My word shall not return unto me void (saith the Lord), but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it.

It may be demanded, what must be done, when the labours of our calling are in vain? Answer.—We must follow the command and calling of God, whether we have good success or no, and whatever comes of it. Though Paul feared his labour was in vain, yet still he laboured. Thus to do, whatever follows, is true wisdom and the fear of God.—William Perkins.

We are unto God a sweet savor of Christ, in them that are saved, and in them that perish.—Paul.

While I oversee the Church, Christ oversees me.—Polycarp.

Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life.—Jesus Christ.

I would rather serve Christ for nothing, than gain all the kingdoms of the world as the fruit of any sin, idleness not excepted.—Anon.

If the iron be blunt, then must he put to the more strength.—Solomon.

A quiet application to those duties, which are immediately necessary, though neither easy nor honourable, is of much more value than a long train of activity and zeal, in a sphere of action sweetened by applause.—Old Author.

If one won't, another will.—Matthew Henry.

AGED MINISTERS.

Like Samson in his old age, I continually forget that I am not what I once was. But when I take hold of the strength of God, I wonder at the result. —Anon.

O Lord, help an old man.—Thomas.

If I can set an example of cheerfulness and submission under the infirmities of old age, said one, it may be more useful than my best sermons.

Many hours and some whole days, I am quite laid aside as useless, and often in great pain and weakness. But, having obtained help of God, I continue to this day; and, blessed be his name, have some intervals of ease and cheerfulness, which I hope are employed to some valuable purposes. I read my good old books, in which there is a savor and suitableness to my case, which I find in few modern ones. I beg the continuance of your prayers for me, that I may be doing some little good while I am continued here, and be growing more and more meet for a nobler sphere of service, when my Master calls me hence.—Orton.

If I ever reach the kingdom of heaven, I think I will try to find the thief who died on the cross, and take him by the hand and say, Come, my brother, let us go aside, and see if we can find out which is the greatest debtor to the grace of God.—Spence.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A word spoken by you when your conscience is clear, and your heart full of God's Spirit, is worth ten thousand words spoken in unbelief and sin.

Prayer is more powerful than preaching. It is prayer that gives preaching all its power.

If Satan can only make you a covetous minister, a lover of pleasure, a lover of praise, a lover of good eating, then he has ruined your ministry.

Nothing is more needful in making a sermon memorable and impressive, than a logical arrangement.

Preach the word, the most essential parts of it especially. Preach as the word. I would humbly suggest for the consideration of all ministers, whether they should not preach more in the manner of God's word. It is certain the fathers used to preach in this manner.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION
IN SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

LET US INCREASE OUR SCHOOLS.

The most difficult department in the educational operations of the Church is undoubtedly that of parochial schools. And yet it is, in some respects, the most hopeful of all; for if there be any special promise attached to early training, religious schools for children must be considered of special importance. Care at the beginning, which is of the utmost value in every undertaking, is in none more so than in education.

The history of our efforts in the cause of Christian education for the last few years, is somewhat remarkable. Our church commenced in 1847, with resolutions that aimed simply at establishing parochial schools. This was rightly considered the starting-point of the whole work. The difficulties of the subject, partly real and partly imaginary, have retarded progress in the elementary department, although a considerable number of schools are now in operation. In the meantime, however, the conscience of the Church, being aroused on the general subject, sought other opportunities of action. The Presbyterial academies are about half as numerous as the parochial schools. A new impulse has also been felt in establishing colleges under the care of the Church. So that the principles of Christian education are germinating and fructifying on our soil; and our schools, academies, and colleges, in the beauty of apt arrangement, and in the vigour of educational growth, inspire much hope for the future.

Sessional schools need particular attention. Our Church should recur to first principles, and maintain them. Whilst we have been wisely employing our strength on every part of the work, disproportionate care has been exercised at the foundation. Our schools ought to be increased in number. Wherever one can be established, it ought to be set in operation without delay. The best working time for the church is the time of her opportunities; and work should be done where Providence shows it to be most needed. No deficiency of the age is more glaring than that of religious education. The want in Church and State, of family and school, for time and eternity, is very much concentrated in the defective training of the rising generation. One of the remedies is, the establishment of Christian schools. Religious education has its warrant in the Bible; and the Church that takes care of the lambs of the flock, shows a spirit which the good Shepherd will bless as kindred to his own. Let us increase the number of our schools.

TWO PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS.

There are two practical suggestions of importance, to be borne in mind in reference to the establishing of parochial schools.

First. Let no school be undertaken which has not a reasonable prospect, in Providence, of permanence. Transient excitements on education, as on most other subjects, are productive of evil. Schools suffered to become extinct, merely on account of contingencies to which all schools are liable, do much harm. They not only impair confidence in our general educational plans, but in the character of the local administrators, as efficient workmen. Whether these inferences are always correctly made or not, there can be little doubt that the fact of extinct schools brings reproach all around. The object of the Church is not to set up temporary, but permanent institutions; and although it would be irreligious to exclude the interpositions of Providence in causing some schools to cease operations, it would be probably untruthful not to admit, at least in many cases, the incompetency, the unfaithfulness, or the want of perseverance of the human agency. The difficulties of every undertaking should be fairly scanned; but in laying hold of the plough, there should be no looking back. Far better is it not to begin, than to begin and fail. If a religious school is worth a beginning, it is worth permanence. Its principles are true and ever-living. With a little more effort, the school, instead of being allowed to die out, might have been placed, with God's blessing, upon a permanent foundation. These remarks are not made to discourage effort, but for the very purpose of stimulating to it in the right direction. Presbyterianism and permanence have a natural alliance; and our institutions, like our principles, should be both scriptural and enduring.

Secondly. Another practical remark, bearing upon the cause of our schools is, that a small endowment would go far to promote their prosperity. In consequence of the free education, offered in our public schools, it cannot be expected that, in all cases, our religious schools can sustain themselves. There must, frequently at least, be resources to supplement the deficiency in the salary of the teacher. Where resources can be relied upon from year to year, in the form of donations from the friends of a school, the purpose is answered. But sometimes an annual application of this kind begets dissatisfaction or weariness, even among friends; and at the death of one or two patrons, the existence of the school may be endangered. The benefits of a small endowment for every school—say from $1000 to $3000—would be that it would provide for the deficiency in the salary of the teacher, and provide for it in a sure manner from year to year. The wealth of the land needs channels for its distribution; and of all claims of permanent endowment, it is generally conceded that those of the institutions of education stand pre-eminent. Endowment is the policy of our Church in reference to the higher institutions; and the same reasons exist for its application to schools and academies. The certainty of an endowment inspires a confidence of permanence; and without this confidence no institution can long survive. It cannot be doubted that there are in many of our churches individuals who, by legacy or otherwise, will assist in establishing such local funds for school operations. If one person cannot do it all, he may do a part. Fifty, or a hundred, or five hundred, or a thousand dollars, from one donor, may stimulate others to complete the work. And it must certainly be no small gratification to a man of competence, or of wealth, to know that a portion of his worldly substance may thus be the means of perpetuating the choicest blessings of education from one generation to another.

The Board gratefully report to the Assembly a donation of $5000, from one of the ruling elders of the Church, for the support of parochial schools during the present year, if that amount may be found necessary. The following is the modest letter, tendering the sum.

NEW YORK, Dec. 24th, 1852.

Dear Sir—I agree to furnish for the use of establishing and sustaining Parochial Schools in the Presbyterian Church, during the year 1853, any sum that can be advantageously used, not exceeding five thousand dollars, ($5000,) at such times as it may be wanted—the Board giving a few days' notice.

I remain your's truly,

Such an appreciation of the great cause of Christian education affords encouragement beyond the value of the gift itself. It stimulates the Board to put their confidence in God for the supply of resources adequate to their wants, whilst it will encourage many a feeble church to commence a school for the religious training of children. Already twenty-three churches have applied for aid to this fund; all dating their efforts to establish schools to the encouragement held out by this donation, which is as munificent as it is unostentatious.

Light is dawning more and more upon our school operations. The movement, commenced under God by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, is yet to be felt with power upon the religious condition of the country.

The following are interesting statements concerning some of the schools.

LINDEN WOOD FEMALE COLLEGE, MISSOURI.

Linden Wood Female College is to be located near the city of St. Charles, Missouri. It originated in the wisdom and liberality of Major GEORGE C. SIBLEY, upon whose place the College is to be located, and who designs leaving a very large portion of his valuable property, as a means of its ultimate endowment. Other subscriptions are needed, and needed immediately, to secure the erection of buildings, and in order to put the institution into speedy operation. We give the charter of the institution, the organization of the Board of Directors, and the action of the Presbytery of St. Louis, under whose care the institution is placed.

AN ACT TO INCORPORATE THE LINDEN WOOD FEMALE COLLEGE.

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Missouri, as follows:

SEC. 1. Archibald Gamble, Samuel J. P. Anderson, Thomas Watson, Jr., Samuel B. Smith, Charles D. Drake, Joseph Charless, Charles F. Woodson, John J. Johns, Achilles Brodhead, J. G. Chiles, Samuel S. Watson, Samuel B. McPheeters, Robert P. Farris, James A. Lyon, and Joseph F. Fenton, and their associates and successors, are hereby constituted a body corporate and politic by the name of "The Linden Wood Female College," and by that name shall have perpetual succession, and be capable of taking and holding, by gift, grant, devise, or otherwise, and of conveying, leasing, or otherwise disposing of, any estate, real, personal, or mixed, annuities, endowments, franchises, and other hereditaments, which may conduce to the support of said College, or to the promotion of its objects: and all property of said corporation shall be exempt from taxation, and the sixth, seventh, and eighteenth sections of the first article of the act concerning corporations shall not apply to this corporation.

SEC. 2. Said College shall be located at the place of Major George C. Sibley, called Linden Wood, adjacent to the city of St. Charles.

SEC. 3. The management of the affairs of said corporation shall be vested in a Board of fifteen Directors, and the persons above named as corporators shall constitute the Board, until their successors shall have been appointed in the manner hereinafter prescribed. At all meetings of the Board, five members shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

SEC. 4. Said Board of Directors shall be divided into three classes, of five each. The first class shall vacate their offices on the first of May, eighteen hundred and fifty-three, the second class on the first day of May, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, and the third class on the first day of May, eighteen hundred and fifty-five. The vacancies in the Board caused by the expiration of the terms of service of each of said classes, shall be filled by the Presbytery of St. Louis, of which several of the above named corporators are members, and which is connected with the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, usually styled Old-school. The appointment of Directors by said Presbytery shall be made at the regular meeting thereof next preceding the first day of May in each year; and one-third of said Board shall be appointed in each year; and the persons so appointed shall hold their places for three years, and until their successors shall have been duly appointed; and from year to year, as the term of service of a class of Directors shall expire, others shall be appointed by said Presbytery, who shall hold their places for the period aforesaid.

Sec. 5. The Board of Directors shall have power to appoint the professors, teachers, and other officers of said College, and to prescribe the course of study therein, and to establish and enforce all needful and proper regulations for the government thereof.

Sec. 6. This act shall take effect upon its passage.

Approved, February 24, 1853.

ORGANIZATION OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

A meeting of the Board of Directors of the Linden Wood Female College, named in the charter of that Institution, passed by the General Assembly of the State of Missouri, February 24, 1853, was held at the residence of Major George C. Sibley, Linden Wood, St. Charles County, Missouri, on the 22d day of March, 1853.

After prayer by Rev. Samuel B. Smith, the Board was organized by the appointment of Mr Samuel S. Watson, President, and Charles D. Drake, Secretary.

A certified copy of the "Act to incorporate the Linden Wood Female College" was laid before the Board and read, and on motion was unanimously accepted.

The Board was then, in pursuance of the terms of said Act, divided by lot into three classes. The term of service of the first class will expire on the first day of May, 1853; that of the second class on the first day of May, 1854; and that of the third class on the first day of May, 1855.

Ordered, That the Secretary communicate to the Presbytery of St. Louis the Act of incorporation of this Institution, and the names of the Directors whose term of service will expire on the first day of May next, in order that that body may fill the vacancies.

Ordered, That a committee of two in St. Charles, and three in St. Louis, be appointed to obtain, in person or through others, subscriptions in money, building materials, furniture, or whatever may be needed, for the purpose of proceeding, as soon as practicable, to the construction and equipment of suitable buildings for the Linden Wood Female College:—and that in addition to direct and unconditional subscriptions, said committee be authorized to receive subscriptions on the following plan, viz: That the amount subscribed by any individual shall be credited to him on account of expenses of board and tuition to a pupil or pupils named by him, in the Institution, until the whole amount be reimbursed to him; Provided, that any subscriber shall not be permitted to have reimbursed to him, in any one year, more than one-third of the amount of his subscription.

S. S. Watson and J. J. Johns, of St. Charles, and Rev. S. J. P. Anderson, Rev. S. B. McPheeters, and Rev. R. P. Farris, of St. Louis, were appointed said committee.

Ordered, That direct and unconditional subscriptions for less than three hundred dollars, be payable in six, twelve, and eighteen months, and those over that amount in six, twelve, eighteen, and twenty-four months, from June 1st, 1853; but the committee shall be authorized, in cases which in their judgment require it, to change the times of payment.

Ordered, That reimbursable subscriptions be payable in six months from June 1st, 1853.

Ordered, That the proceedings of this meeting be published in the "St. Louis Presbyterian," "St. Louis Intelligencer," and "St. Charles Chronotype."

Board adjourned to meet on the Tuesday next after the fourth Monday of May next.

S. S. WATSON, President.

ACTION OF THE PRESBYTERY OF ST. LOUIS.

A report from the Board of Directors of the Linden Wood Female College, together with a communication from Major George C. Sibley and wife, the act of incorporation of the said College, and the minutes of the said Board of Directors, were presented to Presbytery by Rev. S. J. P. Anderson, and read; and on motion they were referred to a special committee, consisting of Rev. Messrs. Anderson and McPheeters, who submitted a report, which was unanimously adopted, as follows:

The Presbytery having received a communication from Charles D. Drake, Esq., Secretary of the Board of Directors of the Linden Wood Female College, enclosing the act of incorporation of said institution, by the Legislature of Missouri; also a certified extract from the last will and testament of Major George C. Sibley, accompanied by a statement of Major G. C. and Mary E. Sibley, his wife; also the action of the Board of Directors of said College, organized at Linden Wood on the 22d of March, 1852. Therefore,

Resolved, 1*st*, That this Presbytery gratefully acknowledge the noble and enlightened liberality of said donors, and do hereby accept the trust confided in them.

Resolved, 2*d*, That Rev. S. J. P. Anderson, Rev. Robert P. Farris, Charles D. Drake, Andrew King, and Benjamin A. Alderson, be appointed Directors to fill the class whose term of office expires on the 1st day of May, 1853.

Resolved, 3*d*, That the whole matter of the endowment of said College, the preparation of building, taking up subscriptions, together with such arrangements as may be necessary to carry out the object of said institution, be referred to the Board of Directors, with the full sanction of the Presbytery, to act in the premises within the bounds of this Presbytery.

ALEXANDER COLLEGE, IOWA.

The Synod of Iowa at its meeting in April last, after nearly three days of conference and discussion, resolved, almost unanimously, to institute a new Synodical College, to be known by the name of Alexander College, located at Du Buque, in Du Buque County, Iowa. The property of Des Moines College was handed back to the Presbytery of Iowa, to be by them reclaimed and used for educational purposes, save the philosophical apparatus which is referred to the direction of the Board of Education.

The proposition of Du Buque for the College, confirmed by a formal bond well secured, was to donate to the Synod a site of three acres of ground, for College buildings, and to erect thereon, forthwith, an edifice worth at least ten thousand dollars. This is considered a very eligible site, and when improved will overlook the city, and "the father of waters" for miles below. Fairfield was the leading competitor for the College, but was fairly outdone, and cheerfully yielded.

To man this new Institution, Synod elected the Rev. Joshua Phelps President, Rev. Thomas H. Dinsmore, Professor of Mathematics, and Rev. A. H. Kerr, Professor of Languages.

The Rev. Joshua Phelps, President of Alexander College, was installed pastor of the Presbyterian church at Dubuque, Iowa, on the 19th of June, by the Presbytery of Cedar. The Rev. James D. Mason preached the sermon, the Rev. J. B. Hadden delivered the charge to the pastor, and the Rev. John Crozier the charge to the people.

We understand that the prospects of the new College are quite encouraging. The preparatory Department was opened on the 20th of June with thirty-three students, and the organization of one or more College classes is contemplated in the autumn.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST.

All that the Board deem it important to furnish is their corporate name, viz.

"The Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

Any person, disposed to leave a legacy to the Board of Education, is requested to insert the right corporate name. The State laws differ so much that no one Form will answer in all the States.

The following form may be used in Pennsylvania.

I give and devise to the Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, the sum of ——— dollars, to and for the uses of the said Board of Education, and under its direction.

[When real estate, or other property, is given, let it be particularly described.]

SCHOLARSHIPS.

The sum of Seventy-five dollars forms a scholarship to assist a student in the collegiate course, and the sum of One Hundred dollars in the theological course.

HONORARY MEMBERS.

The sum of Fifty Dollars constitutes a person an Honorary Member of the Board of Education. A copy of the Annual Report is sent to all the Honorary members every year.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,

No. 23 Centre Street, New York.

REV. J. LEIGHTON WILSON.

The appointment of Mr. Wilson as a Corresponding Secretary of the Board was mentioned in our last number. It gives us pleasure to state now, that he has accepted this appointment, and will enter on the duties of the office in a few weeks.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

Mission House, July 13, 1853.

India.—We have received letters from Lahor, May 6; Lodiana, April 30; Agra, May 4; Futtehgurh, May 14; Mynpurie, April 19; Allahabad, April 15. It is with much regret that we learn the death of Mrs. Seeley, wife of the Rev. A. H. Seeley, on the 9th of May. Her death was unexpected, but her mind was full of peace, and she departed this life in the enjoyment of a good hope through grace. She was a woman devoted to her work, and much endeared to her companions in the mission. Doubtless, she has entered into the joy of her Lord.—The people at Akutganj continue to manifest a pleasing interest in receiving Christian instruction, and have subscribed about seven hundred rupees for a small church in their village.—Mr. Munnis had reached Allahabad on his return, with health much improved.—Mr. Warren was on a tour to Hardwar and the hills, partly for health, and chiefly for missionary labour.—Mr. and Mrs. Janvier had gone to the hills for the hot season, on account of Mrs. Janvier's continued feeble health. Mr. Janvier would be able to perform missionary duty among the Hill people.—Mr. Forman had been unable to engage in his usual labours for a month, by reason of sickness, but was again at his post, with restored health. A site for a mission-house had been purchased near Lahor, on which an old mosque was standing. This has been fitted up for a residence. The location is considered a very good one, and the expense (about $1200 for the whole) was considerably less than the mission expected to pay for a house—which was much needed, and at the same time hard to be obtained.

Siam.—Advices have been received from Bangkok to the 4th of March. Twenty-two scholars were in the schools, of whom seven were girls. With more strength in the mission, the number of scholars might be increased. Mr. Mattoon adds: "In our other labours, we have nothing new to report. There appears to be a little more than usual attention to the truth on the part of a few, but we can speak of no decisive and manifest change in any."

China.—Letters have been received from Ningpo, March 15; Shanghai, April 12; Canton, April 30. At Canton and Ningpo all was quiet, but at Shanghai much alarm was felt in view of the progress of the rebellion. Our brethren at the two northern cities, in common with all foreigners, had met with much difficulty in obtaining pecuniary supplies, the interruption of commerce having cut off the sale of bills of exchange. In any event, they would not probably be exposed to much personal danger, being able to take refuge on board of American vessels. Mr. Culbertson says, "In case of attack [at Shanghai] most of the mission property, lying without the limits of the foreign settlement, must be sacrificed." Most persons in this country seem to anticipate that the success of the rebels would prove favourable to the spread of the gospel in China. Of this, however, not much that is satisfactory can yet be known. The result is in the hands of God, who may have purposes of judgment in view before his mercy is displayed.

Chinese in California.—A letter of the Rev. W. Speer, of June 15, has been received. He continues to be encouraged in his work. A lot of ground, 44 feet by 37 in size, had been secured, in an eligible location, on the corner of two streets, for mission buildings. This lot cost $3000, and about $8000 more would be required to put up premises suitable for a school, chapel, and family residence, with a basement store-room to be rented. The greater part of the money for this property, it was expected, would be obtained in San Francisco, but some aid is requested from the Board.

Africa.—Letters have been received from Corisco to the 6th of May. The number of boarding scholars was twelve, of whom a good report is given. They are under Mrs. Mackey's charge. In the day-school, under Mr. McQueen's care, 77 scholars had been entered, but the average attendance was only 37. The reports of these schools will be published in our next number. Mr. Mackey writes as follows on a subject of much interest: "We are in our usual health. Mr. McQueen has suffered scarcely at all from the climate. The slight attack of fever which he had a few weeks after his arrival, did not confine him to bed a single day. We feel still highly encouraged in regard to the healthfulness of our location here. I have been living on this island now nearly three years, and have not seen one case of severe fever which was contracted on the island during that time. The only two cases of severe fever which I have seen during my stay here, were those of masters of English ships. While procuring cargoes for their vessels, they had both been exposed on the main land. Both were considered dangerous cases, and were brought to the mission house on Corisco to receive medical aid, and they rapidly recovered.

"I know not whether fear of the climate has deterred brethren from joining us here, but true it is that the mission has not been strengthened as some of the warmest friends had hoped, and had reason to expect at its commencement. There is no other point on the coast where there is as much likelihood of white men enjoying health as on Corisco and the other two inhabited islands of this bay. These islands are each several miles distant from the main land; they have an enterprising, though not a large population, not exceeding perhaps two thousand in the three islands. But there is a large coast population in reach from them. The main educational operations of the mission, the translating, and printing, might be done here; and if a residence on the main land should be found prejudicial to health, here is a healthy place at hand to recruit; and further, were our numbers sufficient to allow us to prosecute any extensive explorations, we have as fair a prospect of penetrating towards the interior from this point as from any other I know on the coast. But we are entirely too few to carry on our work with vigour and efficiency even on this island."

Indian Missions.—Letters from the Ottawa and Chippewa Mission, of April 27th, mention the failure of efforts made by the Roman Catholic bishop and four priests, to prevent the Indians from sending their children to the Mission School.—Letters from the Omahaw Mission to June 23, mention the arrival of the Rev. W. Hamilton and his family from the Iowa Mission. Mr. Hamilton takes the charge of the former Mission, in view of Mr. McKinney's soon removing from the Indian country.—Letters from the Creek Mission to June 11, mention the admission of another member to the church at Kowetah. We learn also, with much regret, the death of Mrs. Ramsay, wife of the Rev. J. R. Ramsay, lately connected with this Mission. She was warmly esteemed by her associates in the missionary work, and her heart was deeply enlisted in its success; but like Mrs. Seeley, she has been called by a very happy death to the reward of the faithful servant of Christ.

Arrivals and Departures.—We have received advices of the arrival of Mr. and Mrs. Burtt at Spencer Academy.—Mr. J. Byers and wife and Miss Stanislaus have received appointments to the Creek Mission, Mr. Byers as a farmer, and Miss Stanislaus as a teacher. They are now on their way to their station.—Mrs. D. A. Wilson arrived from Monrovia on the 3d of July, with health considerably improved by the voyage.

MISSION TO ROMAN CATHOLICS IN IRELAND.

The Rev. Thomas Warren, a member of the Presbytery of Baltimore, and lately pastor of the Aisquith Street church in that city, has been appointed as a missionary of the Board, to Roman Catholics in Ireland, and embarked for his field of labour on the 2d of July. This Mission is regarded as in some respects an experiment, and the appointment of Mr. Warren was made partly in the view of increased donations to the Board, by churches and individuals feeling a special interest in him and in this Mission. At the same time, the remarkable openings for missionary labour among Roman Catholics in Ireland, the inadequate means now employed for their conversion, the probable ease and freedom of access to them by a missionary from this country, the influence exerted upon all our own interests by the large numbers of Irish Roman Catholics continually coming to seek their homes in this land, and the great indebtedness of our Church in former days to Ireland, for many of her best ministers and members, all concur to impart interest to this new Mission. Mr. Warren has been warmly recommended for this work by his Presbytery, and we would ask for him and this Mission the prayers of the churches.

WALDENSIAN CHURCH.

The Treasurer's acknowledgment of Donations shows that a number of churches and private donors have sent in their contributions for the Waldensians. About $6,000 have been paid by comparatively a few donors. It would be no difficult matter for our body to give $20,000 to endow a theological professorship in the College of the Waldensian Synod, and it would be doing a good work, and a great work—looking to its probable results. We trust this object will not be forgotten. Of course, the understanding is, that what is given to this purpose must not be allowed to diminish the usual and regular contributions in support of the Missions of our Church. With this understood, we should be very glad to see a liberal response to the recommendation of the last General Assembly on behalf of these Waldensian Presbyterians. Who has not been deeply moved by many events in their past history? Who has not admired, nay reverenced, their noble testimony for our Lord, when they were his only witnesses on the earth? And who can fail to be impressed with the importance of their present position, as giving them peculiar advantages for the work of spreading the gospel in Italy? Our denomination has within two or three years given probably $500,000 to endow various colleges and seminaries in our own country, and we are not the poorer for it; shall we not within a year or two give these Waldensian brethren the $20,000, of which they stand so much in need, and with which they could do so much good?

INDIA: LODIANA MISSION.

ACCOUNT OF A SIX WEEKS' TOUR FOR PREACHING THE GOSPEL, BY THE REV. JOHN H. MORRISON.

Lahor, April 4, 1853.

....The country over which I have travelled on this tour, lies chiefly between the Rávi and Chanáb Rivers, and all of it north of the latitude of Lahor. As my object was to visit the largest cities and towns in that part of the country, I pursued no direct route, and travelled no road in particular. In fact, most of the time for six weeks I followed the native foot-paths from village to village, which I was enabled to do by having my baggage, tent, &c., carried on camels. The southern section of that Doab (a country between two rivers) is mostly a great wilderness or prairie, while the northern section is densely populated. The whole of this territory is so destitute of trees, that one wonders where they get timber for building and for other mechanical purposes; as to fuel, wood forms but a small portion of it; dried leaves and the manure of the barnyard dried for that purpose constitute the principal part of what is used for cooking, &c. The country seems to be fertile, and a large portion of it under a high state of cultivation—for this country; there are so few streams and so little sand, that it is a far more pleasant country to travel than that between the Sutlege and Jumna.

From this to Rám Nagar, the extreme point of this tour, N. W. of Lahor, is 56 miles. Another extreme point, N. N. E., is Sialkot, 72 miles, and a third extreme point, between the other two points of the compass, is Gujrat, 76 miles from this. Within this territory I visited at least four cities of more than thirty thousand inhabitants each, besides some half a dozen others of not much inferior size. These four are Gujránwálà, Wazirábád, Gujrát and Siálkot.

The last of these is a most important point for a mission station, in fact the most important point in all that Doáb.—1st, Because from all I can learn it is the largest city. 2d, One of the largest cantonments in this part of the country is in progress within two miles of the city, so that a mission situated between the two would have two large fields of labour, each within a mile of it. — 3d. The surrounding country is most densely populated—the ground now occupied by cantonments, about three miles square, was occupied by no less than sixteen native villages. And I have counted in different places in the vicinity, three, four, and five villages within, I am sure, less than a square mile—and it was no uncommon thing to be in sight of eight or ten villages at one time. From that point, it is only two moderate marches to each of the other large cities above mentioned. In fact, those two marches should on a missionary tour be divided into three or four, in order to visit the large villages on the road. Then, again, Ram Nagar is but two more marches from Wazirabad. Besides, the country between Siálkot and the Rávi is crowded with large towns, five and six miles apart. 4th, Siálkot is the door to Kashmír. It is in sight of Gulább Singh's capital, and of the mountains of Púistán. This point was selected on that account for a cantonment, and is not likely to be given up. On the contrary, they are building permanent and expensive accommodations for a large cantonment. Gulább Singh is old and cannot live many years; it is the impression that on his death there will be a conflict between his son and nephew for the throne, and the East India Company being bound by treaty to secure the succession to the son, it is expected they will be obliged to employ military force to secure that object. Gulább Singh and his son are both such intolerable tyrants, that the people literally groan under their bondage. A few days ago, a man from that part of the country told me, that the people themselves said it would be a happy day for them when the Company should assume the government of the country. So much are the authorities here in expectation of trouble in that quarter, that they have forbidden ladies visiting Kashmír, lest they should be seized by some of the contending parties and embarrass their operations. Long as you have had Kashmír in view as a field for missionary operations, I fully expect it will be open before you are prepared to occupy it. Indeed it is time now that you had at least two men engaged in studying its language, and preparing Scriptures and tracts in it—and a better place could hardly be selected for them than Siálkot. 5th, It is one of the most delightful and, so far as it has been tried, supposed by the medical men to be one of the most healthy spots on the plains of northern India. It is about 32½° N. L. and 74¾° E. L.

Two things have struck me as surprising on this tour. 1st. The very small proportion of Sikhs to be met with, and 2d. The little difference between the language here and that between the Sutlege and Jumna. With my knowledge of Hindí and Urdú, I seldom had any difficulty in making the people understand me. The authorities seem disposed to kill the Panjábi language entirely, for they employ no one to keep accounts or write in it; consequently very few study it at all, and the constant use of the Urdú by the authorities and their subordinates must soon make it here what it is in the provinces east of the Sutlege. The people generally seem less disposed to oppose us than in the older provinces, but this will no doubt wear off, as they become more acquainted with us and with our message. Now they fear us, and often listen without making a reply, but this will not continue when they find there is no danger of evil consequences following their opposition. Even in the present state of things and in places where the gospel has never before been preached, I have had many a closely contested battle, especially with the Musalmans. At Ram Nagar, I had a long contest with their principal Maulavi, and a Qázi. In the evening of the same day, as I was taking the air outside of the city, I was joined by a man, who said he had just come from their council, and that they were very much cut down by the defeat they had experienced, and were urging their Maulavi to renew the attack, and not give it up until he got the better of me. But he never came again—I have of late been paying more attention to their own books, which enables me at once to attack their most rotten points, such as permission to lie for a good object, and the prediction that nothing of their religion is to remain but its name, and that their learned men are to be the worst men in creation. These and like points, together with the contradictions in the Quran and their Hadís (tradition), give me so decided an advantage, that they seldom stand long to discuss.

I have not been left without encouragement of a more pleasing character also; several instances of persons favourably inclined to examine the subject and search for the truth have been met with, but the most decided and interesting was the case of a Musalman (a Shia) at Siálkot. On my first visit to the city Bázár, he appeared in the crowd and occasionally asked a question, but not at all in a captious or cavilling spirit. When I was about returning to the tent, he asked me when he could see me at the tent, as he wished to ask me some more questions and get some books. I told him he could come at once, if he chose — accordingly he appeared at the tent soon after my arrival, when we spent a long time in conversation on the points of difference between us and them, and on the gospel doctrine of grace. At the close of this interview he took some books, such as I thought suited to his case. Next day he came again to the tent and spent a considerable portion of the day listening to my preaching and discussions, (for I was occupied the whole day in this way at the tent) with various persons who came for books. Occasionally he asked some new question, but for the most part remained a quiet listener. Early the next morning, just as the camels were loaded and we were ready to renew our march, he appeared again, and confessed that what he had heard had made a serious impression on his mind, and that he had spent a considerable part of the night in reading the books I gave him. He said, he felt deeply at parting, and urged me to visit his village on the bank of the Rávi. Could he have gone with me I should have complied with his invitation, but as he was compelled to remain in attendance at the Deputy Commissioner's court, and his village was considerably out of my way, I thought perhaps it would be as well to let the leaven work a while, and visit the place some other time. I cautioned him against allowing prejudice or bigotry to influence him in his examination of God's word, and urged him to study it with earnest prayer to the Author of it that he would guide him into the truth. He said he had thrown aside his prejudices and was determined to follow wherever the truth might lead him, and with evident emotion asked me to pray for him. He accompanied me a long distance on my march, and seemed unwilling to leave me. At length, however, he returned, promising to avail himself of the first opportunity to visit me at Lahor, and bring his son to the school. Deeply interesting as this case seems, and earnestly as I desire that he may come to receive further instructions, and cast in his lot with the people of God, I can hardly say, I expect it—so fearful is the darkness in which they are enveloped — so powerful are their opposing lusts, habits, and modes of thought, and so surrounded are they by those who feel that by killing him they would be doing God service; and that allowing him to become a Christian would be a far greater disgrace to them than their imbruing their hands in his blood, that humanly speaking the chances are greatly against my ever seeing him here. But blessed be God, with him there is no chance—with him all things are well ordered and sure; he can bring him through every opposing difficulty into the fold of Christ. Let all who feel an interest in this case unite their hearts in prayer to God, that he may watch over this inquiring soul and keep him, and guide and bring him to himself.

Other facts of an encouraging nature are not wanting. . . At Sialkot, I met the Superintendent of the Thuggee department, who related to me the following incident. A Thug [a murderer by profession] had been apprehended, and his crime so clearly proved against him that he felt there was no farther use in concealment. He therefore confessed to a great number of the most cold-blooded murders, committed merely for the sake of the property found on his victims. The Superintendent asked him how he could be so hard-hearted and cruel towards his fellow-men? He then drew from his bosom one of our books, and holding it out said, "If I had received this sooner, I should not have done so." Oh, how much misery and crime might be saved by a timely circulation of the word of life!

On this tour, I distributed about one and a half camel loads of books, in Persian, Urdu, Hindi, Sanskrit, and Gurmuki.

INDIA: FURRUKHABAD MISSION.

THE CHRISTIAN VILLAGE, ISAIPUR. BY THE REV. J. J. WALSH, SEPTEMBER 7, 1852.

It is known to most of our readers, that in consequence of the great famine which prevailed in the north-west provinces of India in 1838, a large number of orphan children were gathered together and made over to the care of the Futtehgurh Station. These children, after being receivedin to the Asylum, were not only taught to read and understand the word of God, but also instructed in such useful knowledge and arts as would enable them to earn their own support, and occupy a respectable position in society.

From the very first, it was designed as they grew up and were married, to settle them in a Christian colony, and by furnishing them with suitable employment, retain them under a Christian influence. These two objects, giving them a suitable education with religious culture, and providing them employment, have characterized all our labours from the commencement of the Asylum. For it was foreseen that unless these objects were kept in view, our wards would, after a certain period, break loose from us, and by exposure to the peculiar temptations of their situation, probably return to heathenism; and thus our labours would be lost, and their souls placed in the utmost jeopardy.

Accordingly as our wards grew up and were married, we built for them houses on a separate piece of land, and these houses have so multiplied as to entitle the place to the name of a village, which has been called Isáipúr, or Christian town.

The Village—its external appearance and buildings.

It was thought desirable to place the village as near to us as possible, that it might be under our eye continually, and near to our church, and consequently it is on the land composing the premises of the Orphan Asylum and adjoining our compound. At present it consists of two rows of mud-walled buildings, divided by a wide street, which is lined with a row of trees on each side. At the end facing the road, there is a large gate; and at the other hand opposite the gate, there is a small tiled village Hall, which was formerly used as a place of worship on week days, but is now used for holding any public meeting, chiefly however for the meetings of the Panchayat and Bible-class for the women.

The Panchayat is a Court of Inquiry, and is a complete organization, the officers being chosen once a year by the villagers. The Superintendent of the Asylum is, by virtue of his office, the presiding member.

The Panch, or council, must take into their consideration any complaint made by any villagers. The parties are summoned, witnesses heard, and the case decided according to the rules of the constitution.

It was thought that if we held our Wednesday evening services in the village, the attendance would be much greater, but the plan did not work well, as it was not considered advisable to bring the boys and girls of the School to the village, and without another extra service, their interests would be neglected. In regard to this Hall, it may interest some to know that it was built by subscriptions, of which the greater part was given by the villagers, and the people employed in the Institution. It is a very plain building, built of mud and sufficiently commodious for all the purposes it is required. In the first built row, each house has two comfortable rooms, one being about twelve feet square, and the other ten by twelve feet, having a narrow verandah of about five feet in front, and a small yard in front and rear, enclosed by a mud wall. The second row, which is on the opposite side of the street and not yet completed, being built for other purposes, and only accommodated to its present use, has larger rooms and higher ceilings; and as the buildings are superior, and held in much better estimation, they are only given to those whose consistent walk and conversation justify the distinction.

The People—their Character and Deportment.

Let us now, after having had a peep at the externals of the village, inquire about the people who live in these houses; what character do they bear, and how they deport themselves? What they were, when first received into the Asylum, you know; poor, starving, heathen children, ignorant of God and his word, and addicted to vice of every kind. But now, oh how different! They are still but a little flock, and it may possibly seem strange to you that the place where they live should be called a village, when there are only one hundred and twelve souls inhabiting it, and fifty-four of these are children. But the day of small things must not be despised, and the future is pregnant with hope and promise. It is now only eight years since the village was commenced, and yet we see a goodly number of Christian people for India.

We do not rejoice so much in what is, as in what will be. We may anticipate the next twenty years, when doubtless a sufficient number of people will be found living in this village, professing Christianity, who by their numbers, intelligence, and deportment, will exert a most powerful and favourable influence on the great mass of heathen, far and near. We will see what is not to be found in any part of India, north of Madras, and devoutly wished for everywhere—Christianity exemplified in the lives of numbers. We will see a town, if not a city, of Hindu Christians, honouring the word of God, and as a city set on a hill, holding forth the word of life and the light of sanctified lives, as an example which the surrounding people safely may imitate. But of this more in the end. Let us wait patiently for this time, it will surely come, for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it. Our village will probably before another year receive a large addition from the Asylum, and this addition, with the increase of children, will probably make the whole number about one hundred and fifty souls. The children I consider a very important part of the population, as they are the second generation, who are likely to turn out far superior to their parents. Some of these children are now large, and all are receiving instruction. And believing in the old adage that "as the twig is bent, the tree is inclined," we have taken the children at a very early age to instruct them, and lay the foundation for a noble superstructure. May God bless these efforts and spare these children to grow up and be useful in showing forth the beauty of godly lives. These children know very little of heathenism, and all their feelings and prejudices are in favour of Christianity. What may we not then expect from them as they grow up to maturity? Let them be made the subject of prayer by the Church, and we will realize our fondest hopes. The youth of any country are the hope of the Church, and with us they are our peculiar ground of rejoicing.

The deportment of our village people, whether good or not, depends very much on the standard by which we make the comparison. It will not do to adopt a home standard, for the circumstances of the two classes are so different as to make the comparison, if not impracticable, at least unfair to the native Christians of India.

To understand this, you have only to call to mind the darkness, vice and ignorance in which they have been born and brought up—the atmosphere which they have breathed—the society in which they have moved, and the habits of thought and action to which their whole lives have been given. And remembering these, it cannot be considered strange that their Christian character should fall below those whose characters have been formed under the most favourable circumstances for the development of every truly noble Christian feeling and the constraints of Bible truth and enlightened public opinion. No, it is not strange, and there must be from the very nature of their positions a very marked difference between the present indigenous Christianity of India and America. They have not the same knowledge, nor the same examples for imitation to encourage hope and stimulate action. And every one knows the influence which these exert, not only in formation of enlightened views and moral conduct, but also in their preservation from the tendency to decline, found in our corruption. I am quite aware that it is a common opinion among the good people of home, that a converted heathen, from the great change which he has experienced, must be a glowing Christian; and so it is to a good degree, but not to that extent imagined. But we are inclined to forget how difficult it is for a native Christian, after he has merged from the great darkness of heathenism, to maintain a close and intimate walk with God, when every thing is drawing him the other way—every thing he sees and every thing he hears; and how extremely hard it is for him to rise above the polluting influences by which he is surrounded, and to which all his life he has given his inclinations. Let this be considered, and form an item in the estimate of the character, and let our good friends at home remember what it costs them amidst every encouraging circumstance to maintain a good degree of nearness to God, and I am sure they will make proper allowances for the less degree of faith and consistency found among our native Christians. Let me not be understood as asserting that our people have not a good degree of spiritual life and a fair proportion of consistency. This they have—all I wish to say is, that they have not that degree of it which their more favoured brethren have, and which we would like to see; and yet from the circumstances in which they are placed, perhaps this ought not to be considered strange or deserving of condemnation. That our people are improving year by year, is, I think, patent to all who see and know them. We have only to compare their lives and deportment with that of their heathen neighbours to see the immense difference between these two classes; and this is what I conceive to be the true standard, for once they were like them in every respect—ready to join them in cheerfully doing those things which are hateful in the sight of God and man; ready with them to lie, cheat, and abuse one another as opportunity offered; and ready to make use of any means however wicked to the accomplishment of any end, however debasing. But now how different! I speak whereof I know. Having seen the village grow up under my own eye, and having had the charge of it for some time, and become familiar with its daily history, I can confidently affirm that our people are not only well-behaved and outwardly correct in their deportment, but that they manifest a disposition to improve and grow in grace and knowledge. And since I have had the charge of the village there has not been a dispute or difficulty which has not been brought to my notice, and I therefore feel safe in asserting that the internal state of the Christian village far surpasses that of any heathen village far or near us, and will compare favourably with some in Christian lands. Petty quarrels are not uncommon, and it is worthy of remark that most of these quarrels have their origin among the children, who, like children the world over, run to their parents with their complaints.

This has been one of the chief causes of difficulty, and another is from the injury done to their children or property by their neighbour's cattle, dogs or goats. It is but just to say that whilst there are some who frequently offend by quarreling, there are others who are entirely free from it. There is one woman who has a very bad natural temper, and who before her conversion made no effort to restrain it, but is now so much changed that she seldom offends. And here let me relate an incident about her, which will serve to show the origin of some of the quarrels and the influence of Christian feelings in subduing the natural temper. One day it was reported to me that J* had been giving away to her anger and was quarreling with some of the village women, who complained that her goat had knocked down and hurt one of the children. I sent word to her to remember her besetting sin, but did not go, as experience had taught me that until her feelings had subsided no good would result. The next day meeting her in the village, I said to her, well J* you gave way to your temper yesterday I was sorry to hear—how was it? Yes, she said, I did, and was about to tell how it was, when a number of women seeing us talking, collected around us, and some of those with whom she had quarreled. The sight of these women and the circumstances combined to develope all her bad feelings, which had been kept in an excitable state by the part her husband took against her. So, instead of explaining to me how she got angry, she said, Yes, I did get angry, and will do it again, I cannot restrain my temper. But, said I, you must, you are a member of the Church—one of Christ's professed followers; and if you talk and act in this way, you only show that you are deceiving yourself and not one of the Saviour's flock. Well, she replied, whether or not, I must and will give way to my temper when I am treated so badly and I am quite as good as some others here who call themselves Christians.

But J* you know, this is all wrong, you are trying to justify your conduct by charging it to your temper, which you should control, and by comparing yourself with others, which is not the Bible rule. Seeing that further conversation would probably do no good, I left her. Her conduct gave me no little uneasiness, and I concluded to see her again in the evening. I accordingly went to the village, and happening to meet some of the women with whom she had quarreled, began speaking to them about their unjustifiable conduct in saying or doing anything to excite her anger. Whilst talking to them, J*made her appearance, and I spoke to her mildly, saying, I had been talking to those present about their behaviour, and from all I could learn, both parties were to blame. I immediately saw that from the tears which rolled down her cheeks, a tender chord had been touched, and that her feelings were changed. She at once began to say, that she was most at fault, she did not control her temper, and that she had behaved very wickedly in saying that she would give way to her temper. She expressed a great deal of sorrow and cried like a child. I told her I was glad to see that she was so sorry for her sin; and then told all the women to talk the matter over, which they did, and when they had explained to each other that one did not mean this and another that, they parted as good, if not better friends than before. I think this incident will show the state of feeling sometimes manifested, and the power of Christian feeling exerting its sway.

I ought to remark, that it is a very common thing for the heathen to abuse one another with the foulest kind of language imaginable, and that nothing enrages one so much as to receive abuse of this kind. Every native feels it, and it is regarded in such an offensive light, that it is made a subject of complaint in the civil courts and punishable by fine and imprisonment.

The character of our indigenous Christianity is not yet perfectly developed. It is like that of individuals, gradually unfolding and growing brighter and brighter to the perfect day. It is yet with us in its infancy, but it has taken root and no human power can arrest its progress. This is seen in many little things, which some may consider as beneath their attention, but as a straw may show the course of the wind, so may these little things show the hold Christianity has on our people. One of these little things is, the degree of liberality they manifest for the good of Christ's cause. And this I regard as something decisive, for every one who has the least knowledge of native character, knows how fond they are of money, even to a copper, and that there is scarcely a thing which they will not do to gather together a few rupees.

Now let us see what our native Christians are doing with their money. In the first place, they contribute monthly to a pension fund for the support of their families, about one-eighth of their monthly pay. This fund has been in operation about four years, and is in a prosperous state. It makes provision for the widows of the subscribers, and in case of the widow's death, for her children. We all feel interested in the successful operation of this fund, as it not only teaches our people to provide for themselves and families, but renders them independent of aid from the Mission. Their monthly contribution is given cheerfully, and they are all very much interested in the working of the fund. They also subscribe to the only religious newspaper in Northern India, conducted by the Missionaries of the London Society at Mirzapoor. This paper is called "The Friend of India," and is published monthly in Hindustani. It publishes short histories of remarkable places, principally those of the Holy Land, illustrated by nice wood cuts; also biographies of celebrated men, such as Luther, Howard, Sir William Jones, and Mohammed, and articles on universal and natural history. It also gives a summary of news during the month, which interests our people quite as much as anything else in the paper. The influence of this paper is good every way. They also bring their offerings to the communion, and are annual subscribers to the Northern India Bible Society. The average amount of their whole income is about forty-eight dollars per annum, of which they give to the above objects about five dollars and eighty cents, or nearly one-eighth of their whole receipts for the year; and this done without any compulsion, and evidences a willingness to do what they can for themselves and the spread of the gospel. How many there are at home who with better means and more enlarged views of duty, do much less. If they would do as much, what ample means would be placed at the disposal of all our Boards, the authorized agents of the Presbyterian Church to dispense her bounty to the needy at home and abroad! So much for their character and deportment.

[To be concluded.]

INDIA: AGRA MISSION.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH AT AGRA.

Since my arrival at Agra I have had charge of this church, and have preached to it generally three times a week; but since the last Sabbath in March I have been relieved from it. It may be interesting to the readers of the Record to learn how this has happened.

This church, some years ago, applied to our Board of Foreign Missions for a minister to be sent especially for its service, offering to supply a good part, though not the whole, of his support. But when a man could not be found for this post, a negotiation was opened with the Free Church of Scotland. This measure had the approbation of the then resident missionary, the Rev. James Wilson, who was acting as the stated supply of the church. After one disappointment, and many delays, the matter was finally arranged, and the Rev. Mr. Clarke, of the Presbytery of Edinburgh, arrived in the latter part of March. Mr. Clarke immediately intimated his wish to sustain fraternal relations with us; proposed to become a member of our Presbytery, &c. We accordingly officiated informally at his installation. This was an interesting time and occurrence. Here is a church raised up by our mission, that now undertakes to sustain the ministry for itself, and thus adds one to the effective force at this station. We know not what all the influences resulting from this event may be; but we may hope that they will be good. For my own part, I felt it to be desirable that I should be relieved from the English preaching; for, though it did not entirely prevent my preaching to the natives, still it tended to that end.

HARDWAR FAIR.

Being thus released from the church, I thought of the Mela at Hardwar as affording a place for labour amongst the natives, the importance of which is very great; and the expense of travelling in that direction being much less than formerly, with the advice and consent of the brethren I determined to attend the Fair. I accordingly went from Agra to Saharunpur, and from there went to Hardwar, in company with Messrs. Campbell, Caldwell, and Jamieson. I am aware that accounts of the Hardwar Mela have often been published, and that I may say many things that have been said before; but still the readers of the Record are changing every year, and repetitions are not always profitless. I will therefore describe briefly our proceedings.

On the way to Hardwar, we spent a night at Roorkhee. This is on the great canal, which is being made by the Government, to run from Hardwar, to lead the waters of the Ganges down the height of land between the Ganges and Jumna, for the purpose of irrigating the land. At Roorkhee, large engineering operations are rendered necessary by a rapid fall in the land. Workshops were at first established here for this reason; the best practical engineers were gathered by the same cause; and this suggested to the Government the idea of setting up here a college especially for the training of Civil Engineers. Accordingly a large school has been gathered here, consisting partly of intelligent and promising soldiers drawn from the European regiments serving in this country, and partly of European, East Indian, and Native youths, some on stipends, and some supporting themselves. A large station has thus grown up, interesting from the fact that nowhere else in this country is European science and machinery so extensively exhibited and applied. After a cursory examination of this place in the morning, and a call upon the Principal of the college, we proceeded. Spent the night at the house of a young gentleman, one of the superintendents of the canal, and the next morning drove into Hardwar.

I found this place close under the eastern extremity of the Siwalik range. This is a low range of hills, separated from the mountainous region by a distance of from four to ten miles, enclosing a valley, called here a Doon, generally level. Through the eastern end of this valley, the Ganges, after its debouche from the mountains, makes its way into the plains, turning the east end of the Siwalik hills. On the other side of the Ganges, other mountains closely approach the river, giving it the appearance of an opening through which the celebrated river makes its first debut, as it were, amongst the busy haunts of men. This pass through the hills may be considered a gate, or door, without any great stretch of fancy; and accordingly the Hindus call it Hari, [a title of Shiva] and Dwar, [a gate, or entrance]—Hardwar, the gate of Shiva, or, as some say, of Vishnu, for both are called Hari. The town is not large; I should suppose it contains not over five hundred houses of all kinds. The ground is very uneven, and back of the town it is covered in places by scattered trees and scrubby bushes. Everywhere are plentifully strewed rolled boulders of stone, brought down by mountain torrents. On the whole, it is as comfortless and desolate looking a place as one could easily find.

We found our tent just being pitched in as good a place as the desolation afforded, a short distance back of the town, and near a Hindu temple, at which resided some religious beggars. About three years ago a man was carried off from this temple by a tiger. Some little distance from the tent, and close to the main road, we put up the preaching tent. This has a large square top, with curtains hanging down, which could be drawn out in a sloping direction when desirable; and the sides were generally so arranged that we could be seen by those passing. Along the back side of this tent our boxes of books were arranged. Mats of a very coarse and cheap quality were spread down to induce our hearers to seat themselves and hear leisurely. The first day was passed in completing these preparations. The people had not begun to gather much.

Towards evening Mr. Campbell and I walked through the town to the bathing-place. This place is not on the main stream of the Ganges, but on a lazy, shallow branch, looking dirty and disgusting, and, though spread out at the bathing-place to the width of perhaps six perches, not more than two in width a little way below. The Ghat, as a flight of steps leading down to the water is called, is about the width of an ordinary street in a town in America, and consists of about seventy steps. Along one side of this passage is a series of small temples, the greater part of which contain only the filthy emblem of Shiva. We went through some of the passages connected with these, and stopped in a kind of balcony overlooking the bathing-place. Brahmans had wooden platforms, on legs long enough to keep the boards a little way out of the water, placed in the river, where they sat to receive the gifts of the faithful, and to touch with their holy hands the bathers. Several people were bathing, many of them women. It was curious to observe the skill with which the women managed the slight clothing which they wore into the water, so as to make very little of an indecent exposure of their persons; and the nonchalance with which men regarded it all. We saw neither curiosity, nor impertinence, which might be supposed to be perfectly natural in the circumstances. How national habits modify ideas! Circumstances that in our country would cause women either to be regarded with disgust, or treated with uproarious fun and rudeness, were here witnessed without emotion, and passed utterly without remark. Here we commenced labour; we all talked with some of the people around us; and one of the native assistants made a regular speech or harangue, which was listened to with good-natured patience at least.

The next morning we commenced regular operations: as there were four missionaries and three native assistants, we divided the company—two of us, with one assistant, and some books, took up a position on the bank of the river, where there was much passing and repassing, under the shade of a tree. The others went to the preaching-tent. Our usual course was, to commence a conversation with some one, and thus induce several to stop and hear; then one of us began preaching. When one was tired, another took it up; and when all had spoken once, we usually tried the reading powers of applicants for books and tracts. Afterwards we spoke again; and when we had thus spent two, or two and a half hours, we went to the tent, rested, wrote letters, and talked; and after an early dinner went out again, and did the same thing as in the morning. On one occasion, Mr. Campbell and I, with an assistant, went to the top of the bathing-ghat and preached; but the crowd had by that time become so great, and the noise so powerful, that we did not think it the better place, though many more crowded about us to hear, than at other places. Besides the regular harangues, or sermons, as they may be called, we had frequent conversations and discussions. The time was well employed. The attendance of the people on the preaching was good, we had usually as many gathered around us as could hear. There was, as there always is, a good deal of coming and going amongst our hearers; but generally the greater part would stand or sit through our sermons. Some came repeatedly, a few to dispute, and many with seeming real desire to hear.

For nine days we followed this course. The people were increasing till the last: they would, however, scatter away fast on the day that we left. Our last day was the Sabbath, April 10th. We had a solemn closing service in the preaching-tent; discourses were delivered, reviewing what we had taught the people; particular instructions and exhortations were given to those who had attended often; and the services were closed by a public prayer. As I stood on a box, offering that prayer, I could not help thinking how comforting was the thought that in some parts of the world, God's people might be offering their supplications in the sanctuary, and remembering us; and I also wished that the time might soon come, when churches and ordinances shall give the heathen more opportunities of witnessing the decencies and beauties of true worship.

THE DOON.

I parted with the brethren before day-light, on the morning of the 11th, they going towards Saharunpur, and I through the Doon, towards the hill station of Landour, to spend a short time with our friends, Mr. and Mrs. Woodside, and to take a tour in the hills, for the purpose of preaching, and recruiting the physical system. As I passed round the end of the Siwalik hills, I found many small caves in the face of the rock, some of them in nearly inaccessible situations, in which faqírs live, and keep idols. I was obliged to pitch my little tent, and spend the greater part of the day, immediately behind the hill. Here was a temple in the rock, and below it was a dirty pool of water, covering about two acres of ground. In this pool great numbers of people came to bathe, after which they climbed the ladder to the cave temple, made their obeisance, and threw in their offerings. I climbed up the ladder, found the cave very small—not more than six feet by four: in it a small, rude stone image, with a peculiar swagger in its attitude and countenance; and a boy of about fifteen to receive the offerings. I talked to the people a little while, especially to those who were gathered about a Sikh priest. He had the Granth, the sacred book of the Sikhs, covered with yellow silk, and an umbrella of the same material over it, and out of his book he read a little for each one who made him a present. He read a while to me without a present, because he said that I was master of the country. Passing along a rude path, on a terrace on the hill-side, I found two more of the same kind. I thought their trade did not seem to be very flourishing.

Towards evening, struck the tent and marched six miles. Had a wild, stormy night, with rain. We were on a spur of the Siwalik, and surrounded with broken, bushy land on one side, and the dry bed of a mountain torrent, filled with boulders on the other. This part of the Doon is very desolate, the haunt of the tiger and wild elephant. People dare not march through it in the night, except in a large company, and carrying fire to frighten animals away.

The next day marched about twenty miles, westerly along the Doon. Most of it is uncultivated, some of it good forest land. Saw the sal tree for the first time. From this tree most of the timber that is used down the country is taken; it is floated down the Ganges to the different stations. In the afternoon reached Dehra, the principal town of the Doon. It is a beautiful place. Next month, please God, I will give some description of it, and carry on the account of my tour.

SIAM MISSION.

JOURNAL OF DR. S. R. HOUSE.

Bangkok, October 10th, 1852.—In pursuance of a plan I have lately commenced carrying out, of endeavouring to supply each household in the vicinity of our new station with a copy of a gospel with explanatory tracts, I devoted two or three hours after Mr. Mattoon's Siamese service, this Sabbath morning, to family visiting and wayside preaching. Permitted to bring more or less of Christian truth to the minds of a hundred souls or more, to many in their own homes. Under the new reign we find it less difficult than formerly, to get access to the people at their houses as they have no fears of being brought into trouble, through their acquaintance with us, and generally, we find ourselves treated everywhere with more respect.

But the work of colportage in Siam is not without its trials to the spirit, and its disagreeables. Chief among these are the indifference of those we address, to the most momentous truths, and their inveterate propensity to deception and falsehood. A man today, toothless and wrinkled with age, assured me in the most positive manner, that two women who were present could indeed read as they asserted, and desired me to give them books. On trial neither of them knew a letter. Moreover, they, and all present, seemed to deem the detection occasion rather for laughter than for shame. But on the whole had an interesting day.

With a fine-looking, intelligent young man, who began by asking me, Why I did not worship their priests and idols? I had a long discussion in the hearing of a number of men from the Laos country, who were engaged on some government work, in a shed near by. When I spoke of certain headless and armless idols I had seen in their dilapidated temples, a hearty laugh from all around attested the clear conception they had of the folly of revereneing, of trusting for protection to senseless images that could not keep themselves, much less their votaries from harm. And yet, to-morrow perhaps, they will go and bow the knee and lift the hands in adoration before their gods of wood and brass, the same as before. One old woman "felt her heart grow light and enlarge, as I talked with her," so she said. A Mohammedan left me, reading as he went, a gospel of Christ, he had consented to receive, and a candid middle-aged Siamese I met, in crossing the temple grounds near us on my way back, after all my books were gone, followed me home, that he might get a book, admitting, when reasoned with, that there must be a Creator of all, to whom we should be ever grateful, and desiring he said to know what he must do to please Him.

11*th.* Learn that her Majesty the Queen, who has been ill for the last two months, expired last evening. A melancholy story hers. Raised but a few months ago to the very highest summit of earthly greatness a Siamese female can attain, in the midst of her youth (she was but eighteen) and her prosperity, she is smitten with a fatal disease;—palace walls cannot shut out death—nor all the treasures of royalty bribe him to delay his coming.

During her illness I had been frequently at the palace in attendance with Dr. Bradley, who much of the time had charge of the case, and had witnessed the anxiety of his Majesty the King for her recovery —and the fond attachment he manifested to her. The blow comes very near to him. Oh that he would but learn to know the hand and listen to the voice of Him who inflicts it. But his heart seems set on Buddhism—the state religion, which, as head of the state, he deems it incumbent on him to uphold. And so, to-day—the boat processions to the Royal Wats, which always occur at this time of the year, and which had been suspended the last few days, as her Majesty grew worse—are resumed to-day, and ia ll his regal state and pomp, with his whole court escorting him in a hundred glittering barges, filled with thousands of his guards, and boatmen, he swept by us on the river—to do homage to the graven idols of the land. It was a magnificent—but to us who tremble for his soul—a heart sickening pageant.

OBITUARY.

MEMOIR OF MRS. JANE M. RAMSAY, LATE OF THE CREEK MISSION.

Died, of consumption, May 30th, 1853, at the residence of her father-in-law, Robert Ramsay, Peach Bottom, York county, Pennsylvania, Mrs. Jane Martha Ramsay, wife of the Rev. J. Ross Ramsay, late of the Creek mission at Kowetah. The deceased was born May 29th, 1822, and was the youngest daughter of John and Jane Livingston. Her parents were formerly members of the Presbyterian church, Slate Ridge, York county, Pennsylvania, where her father was a ruling elder, until 1836; he then removed with his family to Wayne county, Ohio, where he continued to exercise the same office in the Presbyterian church of Mount Hope, until his death in 1843. In infancy, Martha was dedicated to God in baptism, and as she grew up, was carefully taught his fear. When very young she became a Sabbath-school scholar, and under the various means of Christian culture, her mind became early stored with a fund of useful knowledge, the most salutary and comforting to her in after life.

Possessing naturally an active mind, and having opportunities of education which she eagerly embraced and improved, she became qualified, at quite an early age, for teaching, and in this useful capacity she acted with success, until her marriage, and entrance upon the missionary work. There are those who can testify with what assiduity, patience, and skill, she laboured to direct and instruct their youthful minds in the ways of useful and rudimental knowledge. Early in life her mind became interested on the subject of religion; she sought the Saviour with her whole heart, and found him, and attached herself to the Mount Hope Presbyterian church, at the age of eighteen. She was by no means satisfied with having made merely a profession of religion, but cheerfully took Christ's yoke upon her, and eagerly sought to advance his cause; she loved to spend and be spent in her Master's service. She engaged actively as a teacher in the Sabbath-school, visited and ministered to the wants of the poor and sick, and was always ready to direct those over whom she had an influence in seeking their soul's salvation.

On the 29th of May, 1849, she was united in marriage to the Rev. J. Ross Ramsay, and was with him appointed by the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, a missionary to the Creek Indians. In the month of July following, and at a time when the cholera was prevalent along the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, she set out with her husband on the long and perilous journey, void of fear, because conscious that she was in the path of duty, and obeying the call of her Divine Master. Her life was preserved, and she reached the distant station in safety. Soon after her arrival there, she entered with alacrity upon the duties of directing the household affairs of the mission-school, instructing the Indian girls in the useful arts of domestic life, and preparing suitable clothing for the boys. Her chief aim was to advance their moral and religious culture, in which she had great success; and at the same time won the esteem and affection of the missionaries and children. During the first winter she spent at Kowetah, she conducted unaided the religious instruction of many boys at the mission, and often expressed herself delighted with the work. But it was not her Master's will to permit her thus to labour long.

In a little more than one year after she entered upon the mission, she became a victim of chills and fever. Neither relaxation nor medical skill could arrest the malady. Symptoms of consumption soon made their appearance. Still, loth to quit the field of labour, for nearly two years she bore patiently these sufferings. It at length became apparent to herself and all her associates, that it was her duty to return home, and try the effects of a more salubrious climate. This she did, after having spent almost three years in the missionary field, two of which were to her years of almost constant suffering; in which time also she was called to mourn the loss of her first born. She returned to her friends, only to spend a short season with them, suffer a few more months of affliction, and then die. She had honoured the Lord by the life she had lived; it was his purpose she should glorify him by the death she should die. Her death was full of hope and joyful anticipation of heaven. She was assured of her acceptance with God, had no dread of his wrath, no dismay at the approach of "the king of terrors." Triumphant expressions fell from her lips. "Sweet Jesus! Precious Saviour, come! I shall soon be at home! Is this dying? Weep not! Farewell!" And then on the confines of eternity, as if already catching a glimpse of the beatific vision of God, she exclaimed, "Holy! holy!" and her happy spirit gently passed away.

"Yet shall we weep; for oft and well
Remembrance shall her story tell,
Affection of her virtues speak,
With beaming eye and burning cheek,
Each action, word, and look recall,
The last, the loveliest of all,
When on the lap of Death she lay,
Serenely smiled her soul away,
Warm with the sunset of her rest."

MEMOIR OF MRS. E. M. SEELEY, LATE OF THE FURRUKHABAD MISSION: BY THE REV. J. J. WALSH.

It is my painful duty to communicate to you the sad news of our dear sister Seeley's death, which took place on the 9th of May, 1853. She has been taken from us by a very sudden stroke, and we all feel this bereavement most keenly, though our grief has been greatly mitigated by the calm and happy manner in which she met the summons to depart and be with her Saviour.

Mrs. Seeley was born in Charlton, New York, on the 9th of November, 1821. Her maiden name was Emeline Marvin, and she had the inestimable blessing of being born of pious parents, who early dedicated her to the Saviour. Little is known of her youth and childhood, but she was early instructed in the Scriptures, and taught to feel her obligations to God, both by precept and example. It was the desire of her father to give his children a better education than our village schools usually afford, and accordingly Emeline was placed at the Troy Female Seminary, under Mrs. Willard. Here she enjoyed superior facilities for the improvement of her mind; but owing to the weakness of her eyes, she was not permitted to complete the regular course of study.

It is not known precisely when she indulged a hope in Christ, but it is supposed that she made a public profession of his name at an early age. From the time she united with the church, she was engaged in doing good as she had opportunity, and took an active part in the Sabbath-school and Female prayer-meeting connected with her village church.

On the 20th of May, 1846, she was married to the Rev. Augustus H. Seeley, a resident of the same village, and under appointment as a missionary to Northern India. They reached their station at Futtehgurh, on the 20th July, 1847, after having been detained at Allahabad on their way up the country, some months, by Mrs. Seeley's having an attack of the small-pox.

During the nearly six years of her missionary life, she lived the life of the righteous. From the weakness of her eyes, a naturally delicate constitution, the cares of an increasing family and other causes, she was not permitted to engage in much active work; but still she was exerting a most happy influence for the good of her fellow-beings. This influence rising out of the harmonious blending of the Christian graces, as manifested in her daily walk, though silent and unostentatious, was not the less beneficial and powerful. Her heart was in the work, to which she had so early dedicated herself, and for whose accomplishment she had severed herself from the society of friends and the endearments of home. She gave to it her prayers and counsels, and always manifested great reluctance to leave the field, even when the state of her husband's health seemed to point out the possibility of such an event. She had only a few days before her death, expressed to one of her missionary sisters, the strong desire she had to live and die amidst the scene of her labours. The writer of this recalls with much pleasure, the delight she manifested on her return, a few weeks ago from a visit at Yákútganj, where nearly a hundred Hindus were assembled to hear the word of God. She spoke of the interesting services with so much feeling, and seemed so much encouraged with the manner in which the word was received, as to show how much her heart was interested in the success of our operations for establishing the Redeemer's kingdom here in India.

Her family was, however, the chief field of her labours. Our dear departed friend and labourer was a most affectionate wife and devoted mother. She was indefatigable in her efforts for their temporal and spiritual good, and was ready to make any sacrifice for their welfare and happiness. The place her children had in her thoughts, and the love she had for them, was most touchingly manifested on her dying-bed. Almost her first remark after realizing her danger was, "those precious children!" and when they were brought to her for a parting kiss, she threw her arms around them and said, "You will never see mamma again." Indeed, the only cause for anxiety manifested by her, was on their account; but when asked, if she could trust in God, she replied, "Oh! yes."

Her death was very sudden. On the 6th of May she gave birth to a still-born child, and appeared to be doing very well, up to the morning of the 8th, when she was seized with severe pain, and called in medical attendance. This was on the Sabbath, and as she seemed to get relief during the day, no danger was apprehended. But on Monday she seemed to be gradually sinking away, and we all assembled around her bed. Up to this time nothing had been said to her about her critical state, nor had she asked any questions indicating that she was aware of her nearness to eternity. At this time her husband asked her whether, if it was God's will to take her to himself, she felt willing and ready to go, and she replied, "I hope so." Prayer was then proposed, and we all knelt at her bedside, and commended her and her family to our covenant-keeping God. It was a solemn moment, and amidst weeping and sorrow we rose from our knees, to witness her departure to a better and happier world. Passages of Scripture and portions of hymns were repeated to her, which seemed to give her much enjoyment. Once she said, with deep emphasis, "Jesus died for me!" And then again, "O these wicked hearts!" and still more frequently would she exclaim, "Come, Lord Jesus! Come, Lord Jesus!" She sent messages to her dear friends at home, and particularly to a beloved brother, towards whom her heart seemed to yearn much. She had in a few short hours all the bitterness of parting with her loved ones, and to realize the momentous truth that she was to stand before the judgment seat of Christ, and yet she had no fears. Under such circumstances, we were rejoiced to see her mind so calm, and her faith so triumphant. Every thing was done that could be done for her comfort, and the doctor was in constant attendance on her to the moment of her departure, but all was without avail. The hand of death was upon her, and a little after 8 o'clock, P. M., on the 9th of May, she breathed her last, and passed from earth to her Saviour's arms. On Sunday evening, the 10th, her remains were carried to our little church, and I preached to a large and sorrowing congregation, from the sweet and consoling words, "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord." From the church we carried her to our small burial ground, now nearly half filled with the graves of our native Christians and our own sweet little ones. She is the first of our little band who has been honoured with a burial there. How pleasant is the thought that she will rise at the resurrection, surrounded by those she loved, and for whose good she left her native land, and endured the bitter pang of parting with friends and relatives.

We have lost the society of a valued friend and labourer. For nearly six years we were privileged to enjoy her presence, and be cheered by her counsels and prayers. But we sorrow not as those without hope. "If ye loved me," said Jesus to his desponding disciples, "ye would rejoice, because I said, I go unto my Father;" so should we rejoice when those whom Jesus loves are called away from earth, for they go unto the Father. They are gone, but not lost—gone to a better and happier world, where Jesus reigns, and sorrow never enters.

"She is not dead, the child of our affection,
But gone unto that school,
Where she needs no longer our poor protection,
And Christ himself doth rule.

In that great cloister's stillness and seclusion,
By guardian angels led,
Safe from temptation; safe from sin's pollution,
She lives, whom we call dead.

We will be patient, and assuage the feeling
We may not wholly stay,
By silence sanctifying, not concealing,
The grief that must have way."

THE SHORTER CATECHISM.

The Catechism, a Union Question Book.

The Westminster Assembly, which met July 1, 1643, continued its sessions between five and six years. It consisted of Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Episcopalians and Erastians, "men," as Baxter justly remarks, "of eminent learning, godliness, ministerial abilities and fidelity." It gave the world the first example of a union of different denominations, in an effort to produce a Question Book, approved by them all, for the religious instruction of children and youth.

So singularly successful was their endeavour, that after the lapse of more than two centuries, no compend of the doctrines and duties of Christianity can be found, better adapted to strengthen the minds of the young, to teach them the truth as it is in Jesus, to preserve them from error, and to make them wise unto salvation.

Historical notice of the Catechism.

In the providence of God, it was reserved for the Assembly which met by order of Parliament, July 1, 1643, to produce and to publish a Catechism that expressed the common faith of the various reformed churches, both in England and America. This most remarkable Assembly convened in Westminster in the reign of Charles I., and held most of its sessions in the chapel of Henry VII. The room was commodious and well furnished. At the upper end of it the moderator occupied an elevated seat with two assistants, one on his right hand and the other on his left. Before him, and through the centre of the hall, a long table extended, at the upper end of which sat two scribes, and at the opposite end sat ten delegates from the House of Lords. In the rear of this table and on the sides of the room, arose four or five stages of seats, one above another. On these were arranged the other members, one-fourth of whom were laymen, and the rest divines. Dr. Belfrage, in his admirable history of the Catechism, thus speaks of the occasion of the Assembly: "It was felt by leading men, in their struggle with superstition and arbitrary power in the seventeenth century, that a scheme of doctrine, church government and worship, pure and spiritual, would be a most excellent means of establishing the rights for which they were contending, and of forming the virtue by which freedom is blessed. It was with this view that the Assembly was convened, and that its proceedings were honoured with the countenance of the first and best in the land—the first in influence, and the best in true worth."

Among the members of the Assembly were Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Episcopalians and Erastians; in all, one hundred and fifty-one. In five years, six months, and twenty-two days, they held one thousand, one hundred and sixty-three sessions, for prayer, conference, and the adoption of measures for the defence of the faith once delivered to the saints, and for the promotion of Christianity.

The oath which the members of the Assembly took, a copy of which we subjoin, shows under what solemn responsibilities they considered themselves, and were thought by the government to act. "I do seriously and solemnly protest, in the presence of Almighty God, that in the Assembly, of which I am a member, I will not maintain anything in matters of doctrine but what I think in my conscience to be truth; or in point of discipline, but what I consider to conduce most to the glory of God, and to the good and peace of the church."

The Assembly formed a Directory for Public Worship, and for the other official duties of clergymen. They also produced a Confession of Faith, with Biblical proofs, and two Catechisms, a Shorter for the instruction of the young, which was finally adopted, November 6, 1647, and a Larger, which was adopted April 14, 1648.

The Shorter Catechism thus originated: The Assembly appointed a committee to frame it, of whom one submitted a plan or draft, and then the rest completed and perfected it, and reported it to the Assembly, where it went through a revision before its adoption. It is not certain to whom the honour should be accorded of producing the original draft, whether to Dr. Arrowsmith, Mr. Palmer, Dr. Wallis, Dr. Gouge, though most writers ascribe it to the first of these gentlemen. On its presentation to the Assembly, each question and answer was separately read, carefully examined, and finally adopted by a vote expressing the individual judgment of the members. The Shorter Catechism is not an abstract of the Larger, but an independent work, corresponding thereto, and also to the Confession. A member of that venerable Assembly says: "We made long ago a pretty progress in the Catechism, but falling on rules and long debates, it was laid aside till the Confession was ended, with the resolution to have no matter in it but what was expressed in the Confession."

The Shorter Catechism, which, soon after its preparation and adoption, was reprinted in America in the New England Primer, consists of two parts. Of these, the first, from the beginning to the thirty-eighth question and answer, treats of what we are to believe concerning God, and is doctrinal; and the second part, from the thirty-ninth question to the end, treats of our duties, and is practical.

Can we withhold our confidence from such men? or refuse to avail ourselves of the fruit of their arduous labours? This little manual has undoubtedly contributed more than any other book, except the Bible, to the religious intelligence and piety of the children and descendants of the Puritans.—Puritan Recorder.

ADVANCE OF PRESBYTERIANISM.

Messrs. Editors—Presbyterians are, I believe, the world over, remarkable for their freedom from a proselyting spirit. I am not sure that they are not highly culpable even for an undue liberality. They rely too much upon the reasonableness, the truthfulness, the scriptural authority of their beautiful standards, without the addition of a becoming effort to make them known.

Seldom do our ministers introduce disputed questions into the pulpit. We have very few tracts that point out our peculiarities. The consequence is, our members often entertain loose views of our special tenets, and others are strangely ignorant of our doctrines and polity. In times of religious excitement, Methodists, Baptists, Episcopalians, hurry in with their sectarian tracts to draw off the minds of our serious youth from the exclusive consideration of "the one thing needful"—they distract their attention by urging the importance of immersion—by presenting caricature views of Calvinism—and by insisting upon the three orders of the ministry for the validity of a true Church. All the while we are suffering harm by our silence.

Now, I think it is high time for our Church to shake off her apparent apathy and indifference, and to assert her claims.

The American Revolution was, to a great extent, brought about by Presbyterians. Her ministers and her members were among the most active agents in promoting the cause of regulated liberty, and of maintaining the rights of the colonies. So that Adolphus, the tory English historian, in his account of the American war, was not far out of the way when he charged the Presbyterian clergy, from their central point of convention in Philadelphia, with a prominent part in agitating and promoting the cause of the "rebels."

A distinguished lawyer of Louisiana, not long since, remarked to me, that in his deliberate judgment, the Revolutionary war ought to be denominated "the struggle for Presbyterian principles."

The same doctrinal truths and political principles, the proclaiming of which had so potent an influence in bringing on that eventful struggle, are equally required now to sustain those blood-bought religious and civil liberties which we have inherited from our fathers.

It is quite time that Presbyterians were up and doing. The radical errors and heresies—social, moral, civil, religious, judicial—which are rife all over our land, and which often threaten disaster to both Church and State, demand, trumpet-tongued, a more thorough and distinctive exhibition of Bible truth.

For a small manual, I know of no tract more suitable for general distribution, than Dr. Miller's little work on "Presbyterianism." It is a very condensed and comprehensive statement of our doctrines, polity, and order—multum in parvo.

Let our Board of Publication get up a handsomely bound edition of that tract. Then let the Assembly devise some plan to have a copy of it placed in every Presbyterian family in the nation, and to secure its wide circulation among others.

It would promote an incalculable amount of good, and put an end to many of those distorted statements in relation to our Church, which are constantly made by ignorant or designing men.

The mission of the Presbyterian Church is not only to bless her own fold, but, by her example and her light, to spread a benign influence into other Churches.

Her power for good is felt where the source of light is not recognized or seen; and that power would be far more wide-spreading, were we more faithful in holding up the light which God has given us. If we have the truth, why shall we adulterate or conceal it? Why shall we not contend earnestly for the faith? A GEORGIA PRESBYTERIAN.

READING FOR THE SUMMER HOLIDAYS.

The Presbyterian Board of Publication has lately published a work called "THE WORKS OF CREATION ILLUSTRATED," a square 16mo. volume of 264 pages, which is sold at various prices, according to the style of the binding. It is a beautiful gift-book, adapted for all seasons, and especially for this. It treats of animate and inanimate nature, both of which now appear in their loveliest dress. No boy or girl could have a pleasanter or more instructive companion for their summer hours. The binding, paper, printing, and engravings are truly beautiful; but the work needs no embellishment to make it attractive. We will transfer a few pages to our plainer columns that our young readers or their guardians may judge for themselves.

The author begins with the period when "the earth was without form and void, and darkness was upon the face of the deep;" but when Jehovah determined for his own glory to perform the stupendous work of creation, "the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters," and he said, "Let there be light."

"As it was said of old to the dark and empty world, 'Let there be light,' so may it be said to each of you. May 'he who caused the light to shine out of darkness, shine in your hearts, to give you the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ.' Then we shall feel happy together in our projected researches; we shall be able to look up and ask a blessing upon our studies; and we shall be led to the true conclusion that all our pursuits are only vanity and vexation of spirit, unless they have the glory of God and the benefit of our immortal souls, for their ultimate end and aim. No sooner was light obedient to the creative word, than it underwent the scrutiny of Omnipotence; 'God saw the light that it was good.' And truly the Divine wisdom and providence appear peculiarly remarkable in its formation. Were it not for the extreme subtlety of its particles, it could not pervade the pores of bodies: but now it can render glass, air, water, and ice transparent, which otherwise would only have exhibited their surfaces to our view. The luxury derived from the light shining into our rooms, while the cold air is excluded by means of the glass, would never have been known, could it not have penetrated that beautiful substance.

Its effects too, on the vegetable world, whether upon the fruit, leaves, or blossoms of plants, present a most interesting subject for our notice. Have you never observed a plant in your garden slowly expanding its florets as the gray twilight emerged into bright and open day, again to shut them all up closely when darkness revisited the land? It is a well remembered circumstance that during an eclipse which occurred at Belfast, in the province of Ulster, in Ireland, on the 15th of May, 1836, many plants were observed to close, as though they were preparing for their nightly sleep. From your own little experience you must have discovered that light is absolutely necessary to the health and vigour of the vegetable world—indeed, I may say, to the very maintenance of the principle of life; for though it is certain that some plants require a much larger portion than others, still, a total seclusion from it would, with a few exceptions, produce complete destruction. I recollect seeing its effect strikingly manifested in the long shoots thrown out by a potato, which had fallen in a remote part of the cellar; with feeble but constant exertions it had at last reached the distant window, to enjoy the benefit of that light which possessed such attractions. It is by the exclusion of light that such whiteness is imparted to celery, sea-kale, and other plants."

We have also seen little children, who had been much confined to their chambers, through sickness or a too jealous care, on whom the sun had seldom been permitted to shine or the rain to fall, look pale and sickly, and tender as a blanched plant. We hope they are now enjoying the invigorating breezes of the ocean and sporting on the level sand, and will let them read a little of what this book tells about the sea.

"Many of you have visited the shores of the sea, but did you ever consider its vastness, and the interest it contains? Did you ever reflect upon the bed that must have been marked out by the divine producer of these wonders? How it was formed, is known only to him who prepared it for the ocean, and appointed his decree, 'that the waters should not pass his commandment.' Prov. viii. 29. How often, when standing upon the beach, have I watched with delight the immense world of waters at my feet—its waves in constant motion, sparkling in the sunbeams, dashing onward with impetuosity towards the shore, threatening destruction to the shrinking earth; yet when actually arrived, breaking harmlessly on the beach; and then, as though baffled in their first intent, retiring slowly from the land. Nor is the continual motion to which I have alluded, without its peculiar use; were it not for that, the sea would be a reservoir of putrescence. I recollect long since reading of a vessel becalmed on the vast Pacific under a burning sun; the passengers and crew lay panting for breath; the sails flapped heavily against the masts, but not a breeze cooled the voyagers, or even ruffled the waves. After thus continuing, I think, for three weeks, a dark green slime was observed stealing over the surface of the waters. This gradually increased, until at length the vessel was surrounded by living monsters of the serpent tribe, started into life in consequence of the quiescent state of the sea. Of the nature of the bed of the ocean, we can of necessity know but little. Donati says, the bottom of the Adriatic is composed of a bed of shells, not less than a hundred feet in thickness. Some parts of the Mediterranean have been visited by adventurers in diving-bells, who speak in raptures of the fields of coral, and various marine plants, which, like the woods on land, afford shelter to numerous animals; but there are parts which defy the power of man ever to discover the depth. Capt. Parry, in long. 24° 34′ west, lat. 57° 4′ north, with a line 1 mile 280 yards long, could not reach the bottom: neither could Mr. Scoresby, with a line 1 mile 640 yards, in lat. 76° 30′ north, and long. 4° 48′ west. Neither is the saltness of the sea of trifling importance: if it were formed of fresh water, the animals in it could not live: it would likewise quickly become tainted, and be the cause of pestilence and death."

Some amuse themselves with collecting the pebbles, others gather the plants upon the sea-shore. We have seen a beautiful book filled with the algæ from the shores of New York, collected by one of our clergymen in his leisure hours. The plants of the sea are not less beautiful and wonderful than those of the land. Some are so small as to be invisible to the naked eye; others are said to be from five hundred to fifteen hundred feet in length. But we think the animals are more wonderful, and we will let you read what our author says of the whale.

"The whales, or cetaceous fish, resemble, in many respects, the land animals. They give milk to their young, which are produced alive, and seldom exceed two at a time; they possess the utmost affection for them, have warm, red blood, and have other peculiarities, one of which is that they utter loud sounds, have the sense of hearing in great perfection, and are very sharp-sighted. To me the whale appears the animal exactly adapted for the mighty deep, the great leviathan which God created to take his pastime therein. Psalm civ. 26. Twenty feet in length is short, and I recollect seeing one that had been taken in the south of England, which was upwards of seventy feet long. The whale is the monarch of the seas, his vast bulk only proportionate to his capacious dwelling-place, and with the lash of his tail, 'he maketh the deep to boil like a pot; he maketh the sea like a pot of ointment; he maketh a path to shine after him; one would think the deep to be hoary. Upon the earth there is not his like, who is made without fear.' Job xli. 31—33. And yet there is a species of this mighty creature which subsists on a small insect that floats upon the waves at certain portions of the year; while the remainder of the months it must be without food, for Goldsmith asserts, that 'the stomach and intestines of these animals, when opened, seldom have anything in them except a soft unctuous substance of a brownish colour.' Here, then, is a merciful provision of the great Creator: were these creatures to require food in proportion to their bulk, the inhabitants of the deep would not suffice to satisfy them; but it is universally observed that the largest animals are the least voracious, and thus are not permitted to produce the destruction their appearance would suppose. Before we quite take leave of these gigantic beings, we must remark that there are no less than seven distinctions among them; the Cachelot, or Spermaceti Whale, is less than the common whale, but is as destructive amongst the lesser fishes as the other is harmless, for it can swallow a shoal of fish down its enormous throat, and pursues and terrifies the dolphins and porpoises so greatly that they are frequently driven on shore.

"The next creature to which I would call your attention is the Seal, which, uncouth as it is in appearance, is capable of strong affection, being easily tamed and even domesticated. I have read a curious story of one that, when very young, was brought home by a farmer in Scotland, who fed it for a few days upon bread and milk; but his wife not having any pleasure in their guest, requested him to part with it, which he at length determined to do by throwing it into the sea. The poor thing, however, admired both his friends and their abode too much, to be induced easily to part with them; it had no wish to revisit its native element, or to make acquaintance with other of its species; and, therefore, forgiving the unceremonious manner in which it was turned out, crawled out of the sea, and persisted in returning. It either could not, or would not see that it was an unwelcome guest, for though treated again in the same manner, it actually returned to the house, and from that time its presence was tolerated. Seals frequently leave the water to bask in the sun on the rocks, and, if pursued, and obliged for safety to hasten to the sea, are heard to moan piteously."

We would have liked to have given some specimens of what the author says of parrots, humming-birds, swallows, dogs, elephants, and horses, but we can only spare room for a short paragraph about the soldier-crab.

"But there is another creature of this species, whose instinct is so wonderful, and whose habits are so singular, that we must of necessity linger for a little while to admire the wisdom displayed by that Almighty Being who called it, and its fellow-creatures, into existence, and taught them so marvellously to provide for all their wants. I allude to the soldier crab, so named from its singular and warlike habits. This animal is not furnished by nature with its own coat of mail, like the lobsters and crabs of which we have been treating; consequently, he thinks it necessary to procure one for himself. Armed with long nippers, with which it can pinch most desperately, it descends annually from the mountains to provide itself with new armour, in the shape of a shell cast off by some of its comrades, and also to deposit its spawn, which it is supposed to place in little shells for its security. In consequence of having outgrown its dress of the former year, it finds it necessary to effect a change; but unfortunately it frequently happens that two crabs admire the same shell. Then the contest begins; they fight most desperately, strike with their claws, and bite viciously; at length the weakest is obliged to yield; and the conqueror, immediately investing himself in his newly-acquired dress, struts backwards and forwards upon the shore before his defeated and mortified antagonist, evidently enjoying the victory. It is a native of the West Indian islands; and as the same curious circumstances occur annually, these extraordinary feats are continually witnessed.

"Is then nothing to be learned from the habits thus displayed by this little animal? Can we not, as it were, trace the same feelings, the same disposition, in man? its desire for possession, and feelings of exultation over a defeated rival, are too frequently exhibited. Let the soldier crab become your monitor, and avoid indulging in yourselves that disposition his nature causes him to delight in."

THE FREE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND IN 1853.

The General Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland met at Edinburgh on the 19th of May, on the same day as our own. This is the Eleventh Assembly since the Disruption, and completes the first ten years of their existence as an independent Church. In 1843 they numbered 474 ministers, without churches, manses, congregations, or any visible means of support; they have now 759 ministers, as many churches, 500 manses, and about a million of the people of Scotland are represented by those attached to her communion.

From the earliest time the Church of Scotland has been engaged in missionary operations. In 1647 it sustained missions in Switzerland, Denmark, and Hungary. In 1709, "all the people are earnestly exhorted to contribute their best endeavours, in their stations, to promote the design of propagating the knowledge of Christ in the Highlands and Islands of Scotland, and in foreign parts of the world, and particularly to give part of their substance;" but at this period she had little ability to do much in a foreign field. On the education of the Highlands and Islands her whole efforts were expended; till in 1834, the India mission was added to her Education scheme; in 1835 the Church Extension; in 1837 the Colonial, and in 1839 the Jewish mission; and to these various departments of labour, in 1842, (the year prior to the disruption,) the amount contributed was only £20,191, or about ninety-eight thousand dollars.

Though destitute themselves of churches, houses, or any visible means of support, in the exercise of faith, the Free Church boldly cast herself upon the liberality of an affectionate people, and resolved to sustain all those exterior objects of Christian enterprise in which they had been engaged while in the Establishment. For the conversion of the Jews she established missions at Pesth, Amsterdam, Breslau, and Constantinople, from all of which the intelligence for the last year had been encouraging.

In Ireland they have thirteen stations, occupied by thirteen missionaries, ten Scripture readers, and forty-four schools.

On the Continent of Europe they had distributed £1900 among various evangelical societies, now engaged in propagating the gospel.

In Asia they had five stations, of which Madras was the centre; four of which Calcutta was the centre; four of which Bombay was the centre; and two of which Nagpur was the centre. In Bengal there were not fewer than 2975 of the youth of India in their different institutions; in Madras, 2575; in Bombay, 2159; in Nagpur, 611; making a total of 8320 youth, brought daily into contact with the word of God. In Madras, there are more than 700 girls in the missionary schools.

The Colonial Committee reported that 39 ministers had been sent to Australia during the last year. In 1834 they had only 20 ministers in Canada. They now had 80, with a college. In Nova Scotia and New Brunswick they granted partial salaries to several ministers; and aided in supporting the college at Halifax. In Newfoundland, West Indies, Gibraltar, Florence, Malta, and various other places, churches are established under their care.

For these various operations abroad, and sustaining the gospel among themselves, from the 31st of March, 1852, to the 31st of March, 1853, the churches had contributed, for the Making the sum raised for these objects during the first ten years of their existence £3,018,849 6 3¾, or nearly fifteen millions of dollars!

In this sum there are many instances of great individual benevolence; and the Moderator this year was authorized to announce that James Ewing, of Strathleven, had within the last few days invested £5000 for behoof of the sustentation fund; but the great source of revenue is from the collections of the churches and congregational associations. In the Report on Collections is said, "Calculating the number of charges at 750, and the number of appointed collections at 4500, and taking the number of deficient congregations into account, it appeared that 4404 collections had been made, leaving a deficiency of only 96 appointed collections," which had variously been accounted for, as from severity of the weather, absence of the minister, &c.

The fund for sustentation this year yielded a dividend of £121. In 1844, when the Committee divided £100 from this fund, the sceptical inquiry of those whom so wonderful a result astonished but did not please was, Will it last? "But," said Dr. Buchanan, "the stream of our people's liberalities which broke forth so astonishingly in 1843, continues still to flow in undiminished depth and force. It has neither evaporated beneath the exhausting sea of time, nor has it sunk into the thirsty soil of human selfishness, and disappeared. Ten years have run their course since we bade farewell to the rivers of Egypt, at which we might have continued to drink our fill had we been contented to abide in the house of bondage, and still the place of our encampment is a place of streams. Why is it so? Why is it that our own fears have been rebuked, and the confident calculations of the worldly-minded and unfriendly onlookers confounded? It is, I firmly believe, because the rock was smitten—because the hearts of the people were touched by the Lord himself. It is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes."

REPORTS OF THE BOARDS.

The Reports of the Boards of Missions and Publication are now mailed to all our ministers and licentiates whose name and post-office are given in the Minutes. By a mistake at the Post-office, those for New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Delaware, Ohio, and Michigan, were sent without being pre-paid.

THE HOME AND FOREIGN RECORD.

By the late General Assembly it was "Resolved, That it be recommended to all our pastors to endeavour to increase the circulation of the Home and Foreign Record, the organ of the Boards of the Church, in order that our churches may be better acquainted with their respective plans and operations, and be induced to contribute more liberally towards their support."

We would respectfully solicit the attention of our ministers and elders to this recommendation at the present time. There are also a number of our subscribers in arrears, and though no one owes more than $1.50, yet in the aggregate the amount is near $2000; and at present we have not funds to meet our expenses. We solicit the attention of our friends to this matter.

☞ All moneys sent at our risk; but those who remit will please have their letters registered at their post-office.

RESIGNATION.

BY H. W. LONGFELLOW.

There is no flock, however watched and tended,
But one dead lamb is there;
There is no fireside, howsoe'er defended,
But has one vacant chair.

The air is full of farewells to the dying,
And mournings for the dead;
The heart of Rachel, for her children crying,
Will not be comforted.

Let us be patient; these severe afflictions
Not from the ground arise,
But oftentimes celestial benedictions
Assume this dark disguise.

We see but dimly through the mists and vapours,
Amid these earthly damps,
What seem to us but dim funereal tapers
May be heaven's distant lamps.

There is no death. What seems so is transition;
This life of mortal breath
Is but a suburb of the life elysian,
Whose portals we call Death.

She is not dead—the child of our affection—
But gone unto that school
Where she no longer needs our poor protection,
And Christ himself doth rule.

In that great cloister's stillness and seclusion,
By guardian angels led,
Safe from temptation, safe from sin's pollution,
She lives, whom we call dead.

Day after day, we think what she is doing
In those bright realms of air;
Year after year, her tender steps pursuing,
Behold her grown more fair.

Thus do we walk in her, and keep unbroken
The bond which nature gives,
Thinking that our remembrance, though unspoken,
May reach her where she lives.

Not as a child shall we again behold her;
For when, with raptures wild,
In our embraces we again enfold her,
She will not be a child;

But a fair maiden in her Father's mansion,
Clothed with celestial grace,
And beautiful with all the soul's expansion
Shall we behold her face.

And though at times impetuous with emotion
And anguish long suppressed,
The swelling heart heaves, moaning like the ocean,
That cannot be at rest—

We will be patient, and assuage the feeling
We cannot wholly stay;
By silence sanctifying, not concealing
The grief that must have way.

INCREASE OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

We published last week the General View of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, made up by the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, from the reports of the several Presbyteries. As usual, some of the Presbyteries, and a large number of churches, have failed to report, so that these statistics are but an approximation to the truth. We can see enough, however, to assure us that the Church is from year to year enlarging her territory and increasing her numbers, both of ministers and members.

On comparing the statistics of the present year with the corrected aggregates of last year, as published in The Presbyterian of July 24th, 1852, we find the increase of the ecclesiastical year just passed, to be three Synods, three Presbyteries, eighty-one ministers, ninety-seven churches, and seven thousand two hundred and seventeen communicants. There is also a slight increase in the number of candidates and licentiates reported. This, considering the general dearth of revivals, is encouraging. It shows the Church to be in a tolerably healthful state.

An important fact to be noted in these figures is, that the Old-school branch of the Presbyterian Church has now become as large as both New and Old-school were at the time of the division, fifteen years ago. The following will show the comparative numbers before the division, and the present year:

	1837.	1853.
Presbyteries,	135	143
Ministers,	2,140	2,139
Churches,	2,865	2,879
Communicants,	220,557	219,263

From the above it appears that we have eight more Presbyteries and fourteen more churches than there were before the division; whilst the number of ministers lacks but one of being the same, and the number of communicants falls short but 1294. Another year, at the same rate of progress, will place us, in every particular as to numbers, ahead of where we stood before the secession of the New-school. Probably no denomination of Christians has ever recovered from so large a loss of numbers in so short a period as fifteen years. As to thoroughness of organization and efficiency, the Old-school Presbyterian Church is far in advance of the state of things in 1837. Considering her intelligence, wealth, numbers, sound doctrine, and thorough scriptural polity, she ought to have accomplished more than she has done; but there is reason for encouragement in the constant gradual increase which appears from year to year. Let there be more united prayer to God, and more faithful labours, and the years coming will show still more cheering results.

The following will show the present relative strength and progress of the New and Old-school Presbyterian bodies. The statistics of both are those of the present year.

	New-school.	Old-school.
Synods,	23	28
Presbyteries,	108	143
Ministers,	1,570	2,139
Churches,	1,626	2,879
Communicants,	140,452	219,263
Licentiates,	130	232
Candidates for Ministry,	199	363
Additions to church members, both on examination and certificate,	10,934	20,026

From the above it appears that the Old-school exceeds the New-school in numbers, 5 Synods, 35 Presbyteries, 569 ministers, 1253 churches, 78,811 communicants, 102 licentiates, 164 candidates. The excess of communicants in the Old-school over the New, is almost equal to the entire number of communicants in the Protestant Episcopal Church in this country. The number of New-school ministers very nearly equals the number of churches, there being but 56 more churches than ministers—whereas in the Old-school the excess of churches over the ministers is 740. This indicates a more rapid territorial extension on the part of the Old-school. The more prosperous condition of the Old-school, however, will appear more clearly from the following particulars, showing the relative rate of increase in the two bodies during the last year:

	New-school.	Old-school.
New Presbyteries organized,	2	3
" Synods "	2	3
Licensures,	33	78
Ordinations,	36	74
Churches organized,	38	81
Additions to members,	10,934	20,026

These results certainly show the Old-school to be in a far more prosperous state than the New-school. After all, however, we shall accomplish but little unless we realize that our strength is not in numbers, but in the presence and power of the Spirit of God.—The Presbyterian.

REAL POWER.

Wealth, we are told, is power; talent is power, and knowledge is power. But there is a mightier force in the world than either of these—a power which wealth is not rich enough to purchase, nor genius subtle enough to refute, nor knowledge wise enough to overreach, nor authority imposing enough to silence. They all tremble in its presence. It is truth—the really most potent element of social or individual life. Though tossed upon the billows of popular commotion, or cast into the seven-fold furnace of persecution, or trampled into the dust by the iron heel of power, truth is the one indestructible thing in this world that loses in no conflict, suffers from no misusage and abuse, and maintains its vitality and completeness after every assault. All kinds of conspiracies have been undertaken to destroy and drive it from the earth; all sources of power have been exhausted to crush it, and all kinds of seduction employed to vitiate and poison it; but none has succeeded, and none ever will. We can be confident of nothing else in this world, but the safety and imperishability of truth—for it is a part of the divine nature, and invested with the eternity and omnipotence of its Author and source. It may often seem to be in danger; it is as much set upon and assaulted now, after eighteen hundred years of successful resistance, as ever; but history and experience ought to re-assure our faith. It has never yet failed, and it never will. It has always accomplished its end, and always will. We may rest serenely upon it, and feel no alarm; we may anticipate its success, and enjoy its triumphs in advance.—N. Y. Evang.

REPORT OF THE BOARD OF MISSIONS FOR 1853—ITS CIRCULATION URGED.

Although a greater number of Reports have been printed than usual, yet, after sending them off to our ministers, elders, and members, and to various points, our supply is much reduced and may not be sufficient to meet the calls for them during the year. The general circulation of the Report is desired by the Assembly, and is urged by very many ministers, and we feel grateful to those brethren who have interested themselves in the matter.

In the absence of a sufficient number of Reports to supply the demand from the churches, we would respectfully recommend the plan adopted by many pastors, and with the happy effect of not only communicating information, but of awakening in their people new zeal in the work of Domestic Missions; which is, for the pastor to make himself master of all the facts, statements, reasoning and suggestions of the Report, and deliver them to his people in full congregation on the Sabbath, or at the monthly concert, which some prefer. But a Domestic Mission meeting on some part of an appointed Sabbath would be the better way, as at such a time access would be had to the whole church and congregation. Part III. of the Report, from p. 28 to 49 inclusive, we would earnestly commend to the attention of our pastors and members, and also to our missionaries and missionary Presbyteries. The Board is carrying out the principles and views laid down for its government by the General Assembly, and it has the co-operation of the churches in conviction and feeling, but we need greater co-operation in action.

Although the following letter was not written with any view whatever for publication, yet we venture to lay it before our readers as an additional argument for the circulation of the Report of the Board of Missions. It is a letter from one whose name is familiar in every part of our Church, and whose opinions carry weight and influence wherever they are known.

DR. MACMASTER'S LETTER.

"New Albany, Ind., July 26, 1853.

"Rev. C. C. Jones.

"Rev. and Dear Sir:—I have just read your last report with great interest, as I had previously read its two predecessors. Although I have not the pleasure of your personal acquaintance, and have no connection with your Board, except what is common to all our ministers, I take the liberty of asking whether measures cannot be taken to give to it a wider circulation among the church members than these Reports usually obtain. Its views appear to me so comprehensive, its spirit so manly and Christian, its principles so sound, its measures so wise, its motives so cogent, and its appeals so stirring, that I know not how this great interest could be better, or so well served, as by causing it to be everywhere read and pondered. Cannot a wide publication be got for it through the newspapers in place of much unimportant matter which fills so many pages of most of these papers? Excuse my freedom in making to you these suggestions, and accept assurances of my best wishes for abundant success in all your labours for the furtherance of the gospel.

I am, very respectfully,

E. D. Macmaster.

A WORD TOUCHING THE PRESENT STATE OF THE BOARD.

It has been within a few short months only, reckoning back since October 1850, that the Board of Missions has begun to breathe a little freely, and to feel able to undertake important enterprises with some little confidence: and to extend a truly helping hand to our brethren in the field everywhere, who need it. It is the desire of the Board to carry on the work of expansion with some vigour during the year upon which we have now entered. The calls for missionaries are many, and the want of suitable men begins to be seriously felt. Since the 1st of April, the commencement of the year, seven missionaries have been commissioned to our more distant fields, five west of the Mississippi and two on the Pacific coast: and we are in correspondence with another who may go to the shores of Lake Superior. To succeed in our desires, the Board will need a large supply of funds, and suitable missionaries, and the spirited co-operation of the Presbyteries: we believe that we shall have both.

The principles upon which the Domestic Missionary work of the Assembly is carried on should be remembered and borne out in practice, otherwise we shall fall back again. The churches, the people, influenced to rely upon themselves as perfectly as possible for the support of the gospel. Assistance afforded as long as it may be necessary. Independence as early as practicable. Contributions in aid of the gospel, as a general rule, from the beginning, however small. Our Church in her organized capacity to support her Domestic Missions, fully, liberally, by regular and universal collections. Union and confidence in feeling and operation between the Board and all the churches and Presbyteries, and a prayerful reliance upon our Divine Redeemer to crown our efforts for his glory with success.

That the spirit of missions—for the establishment of our branch of the visible Church—for the regeneration and salvation and exaltation of our whole country—above all, for the glory of Christ's reign and kingdom on the earth—most extensively pervades the breasts of our ministers and members, no man may deny. Let that heaven-born spirit appear. Action, Action is required. Spared through divine mercy to enter upon a new year of missionary labour, let us do what our hands find to do with our might.

CONDITION AND WANTS OF OUR FRONTIER STATES.

Privations of Home Missionaries.

For the past two years, the absorption of funds has been so great within the older settled States, and the contributions of the churches increasing so slowly, that the Board of Missions has been enabled to do but little for the extension and adequate support of the Gospel in our frontier States and Territories. Consequently, the esteemed brethren who have gone into these new and important fields, have laboured under difficulties and privations of no ordinary kind, and which, if made public, might be received by our ministers and members in more favoured circumstances with a smile of incredulity. We have not thought it advisable, on many accounts, to publish much on the subject, but to do all in our power to remedy the evil. A minister who has been a number of years in the South-west, and is now preaching the Gospel without charge to the people, because he deems it better to do so than to depend upon an inadequate and precarious support, writes a co-presbyter in stronger language than we have been accustomed to see, yet we deem it advisable to give an extract for the edification of our readers, hoping it may make some good impressions upon them. "The present race of Presbyterian ministers must suffer on if they stay here; or else support themselves and those dependent upon them in the fairest and best way they can. I am confident the body of the Presbyterian Church in the United States knows nothing about the matter, and worse than all, they cannot know it. The Home Missionary ranks so low in comparison with the Foreign Missionary, that justice cannot and will not be done in this age. There is a radical error just here. The foreign missionary has no hardship to endure comparatively. He is comparatively well sustained, and well supported, and well cared for. The home missionary is without sympathy, support, and friends; and while the people among whom he labours without reward or thanks, are growing rich, he raises his family in penury and obscurity. The people are many years behind the true spirit of Presbyterianism, and hence their destitution of it." We repeat, that this is stronger language than usual, and the case may be an extreme one if you please, yet there is truth at the bottom, and the extract deserves serious reflection.

The Board has felt burdened in view of the great and growing wants of these distant fields, and effort has been made to economise, to increase the contributions to the missionary funds of the General Assembly, and, in conjunction with our Presbyteries, to induce aid-receiving churches that can sustain their own ministers, to do so, and relieve the General Assembly from their support, and let us have the money to help the churches and brethren in the wilderness places. Right glad are we that the true missionary spirit does exist in the breasts of multitudes of our ministers and members. Aid-receiving churches have come up to the measure of their duty and ability, and the saving from this action of theirs, the past year, according to the report of the Board to the Assembly, has been some $6000. This we turn over to support our missionaries, and to project and sustain new and important enterprises. The General Assembly at all times has cared for the sheep in the wilderness, and for the poor of Christ's flock, and the missionary funds must go for their support, wherever they are; but all who can support the Gospel for themselves must do so, and not only do so, but contribute in aid of those who cannot.

Communicated for the Home and Foreign Record.

HOW SOME MINISTERS ARE KEPT POOR.

Messrs. Editors:—We plain, practical people, hear and read considerable about our ministers and missionaries being poor, and not getting enough to live on and educate their families. Some give one reason and say "the ministers are not enterprising and laborious, and do not study and preach well; and so the people will not give them much." Some give another reason and say, "the people are stingy and not accustomed to give and wont give." Others again say, "the minister has some land and raises a good crop every year, and has some stock, and is a pretty thrifty man, and does so well by himself, the people think they may do less." But, sirs, there is one reason I am inclined to think, has not been brought to light; and may be, there are some persons to be blamed for keeping ministers poor who have themselves not the least idea of it. Pardon me if I am wrong; but give me some credit if I am right. Let me give you a case.

Here is a minister, studious, laborious, a fair preacher and ordinarily successful—had in reputation by the Church and the world around him. He is induced to settle, at the solicitation of one, two, or three members of Presbytery—perhaps by the whole body, over a small congregation—a feeble church—if you like that phraseology better. The people, all told, are but a handful; and such is the state of the country around, and so fixed are the other denominations on the soil, that any growth of consequence is about for ever an impossibility. But it is a most important field; it must be occupied! The people cannot contribute sufficient for their minister's support. How is the necessary sum to be obtained? Of course in the usual way in such cases, from the Board of Missions. Now, be it known that the salary is hardly a support. Alas! the minister is married, and his expenses are increasing with every blessing of Providence upon him. See Psalm cxxvii. verses 3, 4, and 5. But, THE salary don't increase in proportion! He or his good wife has a little private property. It is drawn on. Friends help some. A box of clothing comes now and then. The people let him have a little patch of ground. Farmer Goodwill lets his cow pasture in his lot. The pew is free. The schooling is nearly so. But year after year, to use a sailor's phrase, the minister is "hard up" for money. Poor he is, and in this important missionary field, poor he must ever be.

He thinks of leaving, to do better by his faithful and devoted companion, who has toiled and borne with a martyr's spirit; and to do better by his growing family. Leave? He cannot. The brethren of the Presbytery cannot bear to think of it. Why, they love this good self-denying and devoted brother. He would be a great loss to their Presbytery! The body would be weakened! A feeble church, an important church and field of labour within their bounds would be left destitute. The cause of Presbyterianism in their midst would decline. Leave? Why we could never get another man for that field, to live in it as he has done. He knows how to get along in it; we must use our influence to keep him if possible." They use their influence, and the good, self-denying and devoted brother is influenced to remain. Remain he does—and remains poor for ever—perhaps dies poor and leaves a poor family. I ask now, with all deference, who made this minister poor and kept him poor? You can answer that question as well as I can.

Pray what would you do in such a case? Do?—I think (although one ought not to pretend to great wisdom,) that little field, that "feeble church," should be made a preaching station to some neighbouring minister; and then send the brother somewhere else, to some other, better, more promising field, where he could labour in hope and be partaker of his hope; where he could obtain a competent support, and a support that would keep pace with his wants. Ministerial labour is the most precious commodity on earth. Ministers ought not to keep their brethren poor. If churches are poor ordinarily, it is not because the members have not enough to live on and a good support for their families, but, over and above this, they are not able to take upon themselves the support of an additional family. But when a minister is poor, he is individually poor; and has not a sufficient support for himself and family. Hence churches may afford to be poor, but ministers cannot. I speak as to temporal things. I should think my reason for ministers being kept poor a good one; and it ought, in my humble opinion, to be seriously considered; you will, I know, Messrs. Editors, understand me. The case I have given you is too plain to be misunderstood; I have no reference whatever to fields of labour that embrace a population of really poor people, and a people destitute of gospel privileges, to whom a missionary must be sent or they will perish—no man caring for their souls, and thus having no opportunity of hearing the gospel.

Our Church preaches the gospel to the poor, and while the Lord smiles upon us and continues his grace to us, ever will. I am sincerely your friend and a FRIEND TO MINISTERS.

August 1, 1853.

MOVEMENTS.

Since the meeting of the Assembly, we observe by letters received in the office, that brethren have returned home with increased zeal in Domestic Missions; and we very much misinterpret the signs of the times, if the present year does not surpass its predecessors in direct and efficient efforts to build up our Church, and extend the Redeemer's kingdom in our beloved country. A Presbytery occupying an important field in the West, has already taken up the question of greater effort to meet the increasing wants of the people. We must not only hold our own, but go forward, and not be left behind by our sister denominations. The whole South, South-west, and West, are open to us. There is field enough and to spare. We bid all evangelical denominations God-speed. We would beg leave to take our part in the great work. We subjoin the following letter from the South-west, full of spirit and zeal.

————, July 16, 1853.

"My heart sinks within me, when I look over the wide-spread desolation in our bounds, and the dark prospect in the future. Your Board is doing a noble work, and all the churches at present enable it to do; but what I complain of is, that the churches do not afford you the means to do four-fold. You ought to have received $200,000 this year, and increasing yearly. Cannot the churches be brought to see and feel as they ought.

The taste for the truth has to be created. The mass of the people are satisfied with what they have, and still it is another gospel. We have here everything pandering to the popular tastes of depraved man. Presbyterians have all this to withstand.

If the West is not speedily cared for, the East will feel the influence in a way they probably but little suspect. Some Goths, with a bold leader at their head, may sack their cities, and despoil them of their wealth. Or it may be the form of national legislation—God only knows. Bring us within three days of your city, (as we will be in two or three years,) and then what an influence the millions of the West will exert.

Each Presbytery ought to have an able agent for your Board, going from one part to the other, preaching and exploring the ground—doing the work of an evangelist. In this way the glories of our Old-school Presbyterianism can be brought before them. Since my return, I have been telling of the General Assembly and its doings, wherever I preached, with good effect. The increase of our population is very great. The railroad to St. Joseph is being built, and will probably be on the line to the Pacific.

I am your brother in Christ, and co-presbyter,
C."

NORTHERN INDIANA.

Influence of Infidelity of Foreign Population.

We have now, it is supposed, nearly or quite seven thousand inhabitants in our county, doubling almost since the last census; and actual settlers are rapidly coming in every month. A large proportion of these are German, and not a few of them professedly protestant, yet, in reality, infidels at heart. Renouncing all allegiance to the Pope, as they swing off from their moorings in the old world and direct their faces toward the land of the free, and feeling the utmost indignancy toward priestly tyranny, when they arrive on our shores, multitudes feel themselves free from all religious restraint whatever. Having been rescued from the dominion of the popedom, they seem, many of them, to "fear neither God nor man." Having witnessed such dissimulation and known of so much perfidy and wickedness among the priests of a false religion, they renounce all religious faith, and put all professing Christians of every name, upon the same black catalogue of deceivers and deceived. A German mechanic, somewhat intelligent, told me, the other day, he did "not believe the Bible at all." He "read it for years when a school-boy," and it was "full of contradictions and inconsistencies, and contains statements which ought not to be read." He had known preachers too, he said, who, on coming out of the pulpit, "declared they didn't believe a word they had preached." I promised to see him again. I need very much a quantity of German tracts, in answer to infidel objections, to put into the hands of such. There is not time to talk with them as often as is desirable; and owing to their imperfect knowledge of our language it is difficult to present the truth fully before their minds. Is there no friend of the German infidel and the German papist in your city, who will send me five dollars' worth of tracts from some depository that may be put into the hands of such? I shall be very happy to be his almoner. The Romanists in the north-western portion of our county are quite numerous. They have their school, their church, and their priests. They now hold the balance of power in our county, and can put any man into office, who will succumb to them.

Besides superintending and teaching in the Sabbath-school, I preach at the county-seat on Sabbath mornings three-fourths of the time. Every fourth Sabbath I spend among some twenty families in the south-western part of the county, preaching and catechizing, and visiting on Monday. On the Sabbaths when I preach in the village, after eating a hasty dinner, I ride to some out-post, and preach. I have in all six of these, varying in distance from seven to fourteen miles. Yours, W. T.

NEW YORK.

The following very encouraging report is from an excellent brother who is labouring assiduously to gather and build up a second Presbyterian church in a very growing city, hard by New York. God is evidently smiling upon this effort, as well as others, to provide the means of grace for the destitute in our large and growing cities. Too long have Christians slumbered over this great work. We can scarcely find more important or more encouraging fields for labour.

Rev. Dear Brother:—It is with feelings of pleasure I write you the following communication. Since my last report in April last, my congregation has steadily increased in number and external respectability. I have had two services every Sabbath; besides conducting a very interesting Bible-class in the evening and the Sabbath. During the week I have kept up my usual meetings. Every afternoon I have for the last two months been engaged in visiting from house to house. I go into every house—whether Roman Catholic or Protestant—and so far I have met with the kindest feelings. At my last communion on the 2d Sabbath of the last month, forty-three new members were added to the communion of my church. A majority of whom united by profession of their faith in Christ for the first time.

My people are struggling to get a church edifice erected. If that were once completed the prospect of the church's growth and prosperity will be more encouraging. As it is, we have much reason to be thankful to Almighty God for his fostering care over what we have overtaken in weakness. We know that God is with us, and are therefore confident that our enterprise will succeed. For,

Except the Lord do build the house
The builders build in vain.

THE TWO MITES.

The distinction of rich and poor has existed in all times and in all countries. Nor is there any state of society in which it does not appear. Very different ideas of riches and of poverty may be entertained, but the two conditions are always distinguished from each other. Some of Christ's disciples live in affluence; others experience the pinchings of poverty. One has everything that heart can wish for; another is constrained by stern necessity to restrict his desires within very narrow limits. The arrangement is a wise one, like the inequalities of the earth's surface and soil. It gives rise to a profitable interchange of moral commodities, to a lucrative commerce of love, to the cultivation of benevolence and gratitude.

In the mixed assembly whom the Saviour saw casting their gifts into the treasury, (Mark xii. 41,) there were, doubtless, persons from all the walks of life; rich and poor, old and young, male and female. The contribution seems to have been universal. The Saviour's eye was intent upon the interesting scene. And when it was over, and the last shekel had been dropped into the chest, the great Teacher commented on it for the instruction of his disciples. Different are his comments from what his disciples would probably have made. He calls their attention to a poor, forlorn woman, who had cast in two mites, that make a farthing; he also notices the munificent offerings of the rich people, and he makes the extraordinary declaration, that she had "cast in more than they all." And he relieves the astonishment produced by this statement in his disciples' minds, by showing them in what sense it was more. It was not absolutely so, for they had given much and she little, and no arithmetic can change the relation of more and less, but it was more, in proportion to what she possessed. All are stewards, and are required to apportion their offerings according to the amount entrusted to them; she had done this. All are required to give, as the Lord enables them, as the Lord prospers them; this she had done. She had received but little, but of that little she had returned into the Lord's treasury a larger proportion than they had of their abundance. Therefore, she had cast in more than they. From this incident,

1. We learn that poor people, even very poor ones, may give to the cause of the Lord. No contribution has had higher praise than this poor widow's; none has acquired a higher celebrity. Yet it did not amount to more than half a cent. Let us not through a false charity decline, nor through pride despise the small offerings of the poor.

2. We learn that general contributions for religious objects are not novelties in the Church of Christ. Liberality is coeval with want. The contribution and collection of money, in the house of God, and among his people, for the promotion of his glory, is no innovation, no unauthorized, no unapproved work. It is an old custom in the Church; it has the Saviour's approval, it has apostolic injunction and practice in its favour.

3. We cannot judge of the liberality of contributions merely by their amount. A half dime for one person is more than a half dollar for another. The rule of giving is, not that I should give a little more or a little less than my neighbours, but that I should give as the Lord enables me, or as he hath prospered me. And "two-mite" contributions, not made according to this rule, cannot come in for a share in the Saviour's commendation. Many persons get into the habit of giving a certain sum, from year to year. Their property may have doubled in amount in the meantime. The Scripture rule requires that their contribution should be doubled too. If this poor widow's little store were doubled, her two-mite offering would grow to four; her gift would be still a measure and acknowledgment of God's prospering favour. So let it be with us, Christian reader. As God crowns us with mercies, committing to our stewardship great blessings, let us humbly, promptly, liberally acknowledge his kindness, by offerings to his cause. J. F. M.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

OUR AGGRESSIVE WORK IMPEDED.

The dearth of candidates is impeding our aggressive work in the world. Christ came to seek and to save that which was lost. He bled and died to redeem the elect out of every tribe, and kindred, and tongue, and people. The travail of his soul was for the spiritual destiny of a world; and in order that his gospel might be proclaimed to every creature, he appointed the ministry of reconciliation, with a commission authenticated by the very act of ascension to his throne. The Church comes short of its high purpose, when its power of aggression is impaired. Wo, wo, must rest upon it, when it cannot give light to them that sit in darkness!

In view of the statistics of our history, the present situation of the Presbyterian Church is calculated to alarm its members. The peculiarity of that situation is, that the number of our theological students has not increased during a period of ten years—a third part of a whole generation. Our ministry has, indeed, increased in this period; because the supply of candidates as yet exceeds the deaths; but with no increase of the rate of supply, the actual increase of the whole must in the course of a few years be suspended. Such increase is even now small.

Nor is the calamity confined to our own body. It extends to sister churches. The complaint is heard from every side that, whilst the harvest is great, the labourers are few. The aggressive strength of the Church, on which its prosperity so materially depends, is undergoing a loss, and the cause of Christ languishes. With death on one side, and a failure on the other to fill up the ranks in sufficient numbers, a lamentation, applicable to our condition, is "Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth, the faithful fail from among the children of men."

OUR CANDIDATES COME SHORT OF THE DEMANDS OF PROVIDENCE.

The dearth of candidates places our Church, in a certain sense, in opposition to Providence. Our aggressive strength is impaired, under circumstances which demand a great extension of spiritual resources. In this country, there has always been a pressure upon the Church, never, perhaps, so intense as at the present time, to meet the opportunities of preaching the gospel. Our great country is becoming greater, year by year, really and relatively. Providence has not only favoured us with large contiguous fields, from Pennsylvania to Missouri, and from Maine and Minnesota to Florida and Texas, but a large portion of new territory has been added, covering many parallels of longitude, and reaching forth in geographical grandeur to the Pacific shore. This whole population of 25,000,000 is accessible to the gospel, is increasing with unprecedented rapidity, and is composed of men of every clime, and of almost every race, whose descendants beyond the Alleghanies are to control the destinies of this republic. As the United States are gathering influence among the nations of the earth, and are even now the most powerful in behalf of liberty, and Protestantism, so no field in the civilized world demands more unremitting industry of cultivation. Providence has given to our Church a work of peculiar interest and magnitude, which in our enfeebled state we are unable to perform. It is impossible to find men to occupy our waste places; to till the missionary ground of the North, the South, the East, and the West. The difficulty is becoming greater and greater, because the field expands more rapidly than the means of its cultivation. This is so both at home and abroad; among our citizens and the heathen. It is so in the midst of the enterprise and progress of the nineteenth century. It is so, with the Bible in our hands, and with songs upon our tongues; in the midst of privileges and blessings such as God has rarely bestowed upon any people.

PREACHERS FOR THE PEOPLE.

DEFECTS IN THE MINISTRY.—Rev. Dr. Rice, in an article on reading sermons, says: "One of the greatest defects in the ministry of the Presbyterian Church, Old and New School, is their inability to bring their talents and their acquirements to bear upon the masses of the people, so as to interest them." There is truth in the remark, and those who have the training of the ministry ought to have an especial reference to teaching them how to adapt their instructions to the masses of the untrained, uneducated minds upon whom they will have to operate in after years. Of the great Teacher, who is the model, it was said, "the common people heard him gladly." The common people then were quite as ignorant and uncultivated as they are in any part of our country.

We cut the above from the Presbyterian Herald. We concur with the editor, and with our neighbour, Dr. Rice, on this subject. We believe the defect spoken of arises principally from two causes: First, from the manner in which the Presbyterian ministry is trained. We send a youth to the grammar-school, then, as he advances, to the college, and then to the theological seminary. By the time he has completed this course, he has spent from seven to ten years away from the people. He has lost their modes of thought and illustration, and alienated himself, to some extent, from their sympathies. He thinks and speaks scholastically, and it takes him ten years more to get to that state where he will feel and reason in such a manner as will awaken a responsive interest in the people. Some other churches take a man from the counter, the plow, the anvil or the last, and set him to preaching; and if he has a moderate degree of native talent, he will interest the people, not because he reasons logically, or clothes his thoughts in an elegant dress; but because he thinks, and feels, and reasons in a common-sense way, like the people. He is one of them. It is on this principle that converted lawyers have often made first-rate preachers. The mode of preaching has a home manner and interest for the people. We are to seek the remedy for this defect of which we speak, not by lowering the standard of ministerial qualification, but by devolving on our students more actual labour in their preparatory course, and rendering the studies of the lecture-room more practical.

But a second reason why our ministry is not more attractive to the common people is, that it is not sufficiently scriptural in its mode of presenting the truth. That our system is scriptural, and that our ministers preach its leading truths, cannot for a moment be denied; but that the manner in which this is done is as much conformed as it should be to the scriptural pattern, is questionable. Many sermons are carefully finished, and show fair ability and scholarship; but they are topical and philosophical, and the topics have no interest, beyond a general one, for the people. Every sentiment may be truly correct and scriptural, and yet they do not arrest the popular attention. They do not make enough of the instrumentality which the Holy Spirit uses to save men. He has inspired the divine word for this purpose, and honours the ministry which makes the most of it. The Scriptures were adapted to the minds of men by Him who made those minds; and the most interesting and instructive preaching is that which not only re-echoes Scripture truth, but which takes that truth itself, as it is written, and makes it stand out before the understandings of men. We know it may be said that mind is sinful, and dislikes the Scripture; but we aver that it was for sinful mind that Scripture was specially written, and there is nothing like it to convince of sin, and to bring peace, and purity, and comfort, after such a conviction is produced. We are well persuaded that our ministers will be wanting in popularity and usefulness till they more regularly and earnestly expound the Scriptures; not in extended, learned, critical, or exegetical disquisitions, but in a true, simple, and wise manner, adapting them to the various circumstances of their hearers.

A scriptural ministry will always be a popular one. Let every minister think of this. Let his subjects be suited to his people's condition and wants. Let him honour the Scriptures, in making them his first and principal sources of proof; let him make the word, in its varied teachings, plain, and the Spirit who inspired that word will make it successful. We might add something additional as to written and unwritten sermons; but we consider the question connected with them a minor one, compared with the points we have mentioned. Let the sermons be adapted to the present real state of men, and be presented in trains of thought and with illustrations that will come home to their bosoms, and, above all, let them be scriptural, not simply in sentiment, but in proofs and in manner, and written or unwritten, they will attract people, and do them good.—Central Christian Herald.

PRAYERLESS MINISTERS.

In spite of all that we have enumerated; in spite of personal ability, official order, pulpit accomplishments, grave and decorous public devotion, force of utterance, animated feeling, scriptural topics, moral worth; in spite of all these and other excellencies, there is one evil in the habits of prayerless men, which, hidden as it is from the human eye, is real and deadly, and eats "as doth a canker," into all they utter and all they do. They "do not prosper," and their flocks are "scattered," for they have become "brutish," and have not sought the Lord." This, then, is the defect that poisons everything; they are not men of frequent, earnest, private devotion. They have great abilities, but they do not pray. They are ministers of Christ, according to outward order, but they do not pray. They are fervent, persuasive, convincing, but they do not pray. They may be zealous and enterprising, leaders in the movements of public activity, the first and foremost in popular excitement, frequent in their appeals, abundant in their labours, working zealously in various modes and in divers places, but they do not pray. They are men of integrity, purity, benevolence, but they do not pray. And this one thing, their "restraining prayer," their not "calling upon God," their not "stirring up themselves to take hold of" him, this, like the want of love in the Christian character, "stains the glory" of everything else; it renders worthless their genius, talents, and acquisitions; obstructs their own spiritual prosperity; impedes their usefulness, and blasts their success. Though a minister were an apostle, and did not pray, his "speech and his preaching" would not be "with the demonstration of the Spirit and of power." "Though he had the gift of prophecy, and understood all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though he had faith that could remove mountains," and did not pray, "he would be nothing." "Though he gave all his goods to feed the poor, and his body to be burnt," and did not pray, "it would profit him nothing." "Though he spake with the tongues of men and of angels," and did not pray, he would be but "as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal." He might be "like unto one that hath a pleasant voice, and a lovely song, and that plays well upon an instrument," but the music of the lip and the hand only, will never charm away the evil spirit from the soul; nor can it have in it that divine and life-giving harmony which "of stones can raise up children to Abraham." —The Closet and the Church, by Rev. T. Binney.

SELF-MADE MEN.

The biography of every man who has risen to eminence of any kind, by his own talent and industry, is a lesson and stimulus to all who read it. Self-made men are living witnesses that God has endowed man with the material and powers necessary to accomplish the most desirable fortune and fame, and that it is by no means essential to a man's success or greatness, that he has or has not the inherited appliances of aristocratic birth, wealth, and consequent position, "forearming him" for his encounter with the world.

The greatest names on the page of history belong to men who have risen from obscure birth against wealth, and in defiance of what is called disadvantageous position. Bearing in their nature the sacred fire, they have kindled at the breath of the opposing tempest, and by unwearied, undaunted struggle, dawned, day by day, into a broader, stronger, and more beautiful life. Such men, trusting to no fortuitous aids, and owing nothing to chances, have so beaten their pathway upward that they could not be thrust down by the accidents which disarm and discourage the mere favourite of circumstances.

It is not the men who have inherited most, except it is in nobility of soul and purpose, who have risen highest; but rather the men with no dower save soul and purpose, who have made fortunate and adverse circumstances alike a spur to goad their steed up the steep and stubborn mount, where

"Fame's proud temple shines afar."

To such men, every possible goal is accomplishable; and honest ambition has no height which genius or talent may tread, which has not felt the impress of their feet.—New Yorker.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

SCHOOL AT FLETCHER, OHIO.

FLETCHER, Miami co., Ohio, July 11th, 1853.

It now becomes my duty, as pastor of Newton church, in the bounds of Sydney Presbytery, to report to you the necessary information in regard to our school, for which aid was asked from your Board by our Presbytery.

Our school was commenced the first week of September, 1852, and has been continued until the 8th of the present month, except a short vacation in the month of April. We concluded to suspend it on the 8th on account of measles prevailing. This is three weeks before the close of the last term, and for this you can make the proper deduction from the amount promised. According to our arrangements, our school continues thirty-nine weeks in each year. We supposed that your appropriations for a year were made with the understanding that they would continue the regular periods and allow the regular vacations in each year—as there is not anything said in your rules on that subject. We have made our arrangements so as to have our principal recess in the hot and sickly season of July and August.

Our school commenced with about twenty scholars, and this number was not much increased for more than two months. An increase then commenced, and for about three months, through the winter we had an attendance of about forty scholars daily. In the spring the number began to decline again, until we had but about twenty at our close. We have had considerable prejudice to contend with —some are afraid that there is too much religion in the school; some are afraid of a Presbyterian influence, &c. But we have got along thus far; and I think our prospects are as good, if not better, than they have been the last year. We expect to be accommodated by the commencement of the next term with a new house, fitted up expressly for the school. We look for an increase from the country over last year. We have endeavoured to make our school what your rules require it as far as we understood. It has been opened with prayer, and as far as we could, singing has been introduced and used to close the exercises of the day; this has been especially the case the last session. The Bible has been a daily text-book; and all who could read, have been required to read twice each day in some part of it, and as occasion seemed to require, this exercise was accompanied with explanatory remarks.

The Catechism has been taught to Presbyterian children. On this subject we have had more difficulty than any other. Some were ready to raise the cry of sectarianism, and our own people, while they made no opposition, and all seemed agreed, yet with some exceptions, they were not interested to the extent they should have been; and the children, with a few exceptions, never having learned the Catechism, were slow in doing anything; but we trust a beginning has been made, and in future we shall move much more freely on this subject. It is with us a prominent object, and we must not give it up.

The branches taught have been reading, writing, Arithmetic, Geography, English Grammar, Algebra, Composition, Alexander's Outlines of Moral Philosophy, and Latin, &c. I have taught the school thus far myself, with the assistance of a young lady, a good scholar and a member of the Presbyterian Church. We think we have now met the requirements of the Board, as far at least as has been in in our power. We hope the importance of Christian schools will be better felt by our own people, and received with more favour by others in future. I have thought that our Board of Publication should have a well prepared tract or two on this subject which we could obtain and circulate amongst our people.

We expect to commence our school again in September or October, as shall best suit. We shall probably desire another appropriation from your Board but not so large. This will be determined hereafter. Yours in the Lord,

W. C. HOLLYDAY,
Pastor of Newton Church.

2. The general character of our academies is undoubtedly high. They are organized on the good, old-fashioned basis of classical and mathematical study. Their discipline is, in the general, both mild and strict, and without making boastful pretensions, they claim to be exerting a good influence in elevating the standard of education in the land.

Their character has secured for them a gratifying patronage, and their members vary from 24 to 200. The average number may be 60 or 70; so that the aggregate of their pupils is not far from 3000. The largest are the Geneseo Academy, New York; the West Alexander Academy, Pa.; the Greensboro Academy, Ga.; the Marengo Academy, Illinois; and the Waveland Academy, Indiana.

Most interesting testimonies are on record in regard to the high standing of many of these institutions.

3. Their trials. The trials of our Academies are chiefly financial, and these are sometimes very severe. It is impossible to establish institutions of learning without a considerable outlay of funds; and education, to suit the times, must be cheap. Hence embarrassments arise. In order to provide against these contingencies, many of the academies are seeking an endowment in part, or in whole. Geneseo Academy has an endowment of nearly $20,000. The Academy at Towanda, Pa., under the care of the Susquehanna Presbytery, has obtained the like sum, in addition to $10,000 subscribed for its building. The Samuel Davies Institute, Va., one of the best academies in the country, is making an effort for at least a partial endowment. If there are trials, there are also ways of relief. God helps the burdened, when they look up to him, and work out the dependence of their prayers. There is money enough in all our Presbyteries to endow our struggling institutions; and piety, wisdom, and perseverance rarely fail, in Providence, of accomplishing righteous purposes. Some of the Presbyteries have had difficulties in paying off their floating debts; and some have been taxed heavily for current expenses. But, so far as the Board have had any opportunity of judging, an excellent spirit prevails, and a determination, equal to the crisis, is almost everywhere observable.

4. Their religious influence. As these Academies all inculcate the truths and duties of religion, and are under the instruction of Christian teachers, and are thus in the way of God's commands, his blessing may be expected upon them—upon them all, in the degree and at the time which his own sovereignty ordains. The silent dew, the gentle rain, the copious shower, and the overflowing cloud, are variations of benevolence; each good, and the better because specially appointed. Several of the Academies report one or two conversions; that at Blairstown, N. J., five; that under the care of Palmyra Presbytery, Mo., sixteen; that at West Alexander, Pa., eighteen; that at Geneseo, N. Y., fifty and sixty. Thus does religious education have the testimony of God to its efficiency; and the Holy Spirit adds heavenly to human teaching.

WINDSOR ACADEMY, BROOME COUNTY, NEW YORK.

Windsor Academy is situated in a fine, healthy, and prosperous country, on the line of the Erie Railroad, and near the boundary of the States of New York and Pennsylvania.

We trust the time is not distant when every Presbytery shall have one or two, or more Academies under its care.

The following is the action of the Presbytery of Albany in regard to the Windsor Academy.

O. T. Bundy, M. D., President of the Board of Trustees of the Windsor Academy, appearing in Presbytery, and leave having been granted, he made several statements respecting the condition of that Institution, and presented the formal request of the Trustees, that this Presbytery would take it under its care as a Presbyterial Academy, agreeably to the regulations of the General Assembly on this subject. These statements were confirmed by Elder Sleeper, from the church in Windsor.

Thereupon a committee, consisting of Rev. D. Tully, M. L. Wood, and Elder McQueen, were appointed to make further inquiry, and report to Presbytery on the case.

The Committee in the case of Windsor Academy reported by recommending that this Presbytery receive said Academy under its care as presented by the Board of Trustees, and in accordance with the action of the General Assembly in such cases.

This report was adopted, and a committee, consisting of Rev. Dr. Huntington, S. E. Lane, D. Tully, and Elders G. McQueen and H. L. Sleeper, were appointed to report the details of the plan on which the Academy should be connected with the Presbytery.

This committee subsequently reported, by recommending the adoption of the following resolutions, and they were adopted, viz:

Resolved, 1. That the Trustees of the Windsor Academy shall increase their number by appointing three additional Trustees from nominations made by the Presbytery of Albany.

Resolved, 2. That whenever vacancies occur in the Board of Trustees, or the Faculty, the Trustees shall make report thereof to this Presbytery, with the view of receiving the Presbytery's nominations for filling the same; excepting always that when vacancies shall occur in the Faculty, requiring to be filled immediately, the Trustees may proceed to fill said vacancies, until the next meeting of the Presbytery, but for no longer time.

Resolved, 3. That Presbytery appoint a committee of supervision, whose duty it shall be to visit said Academy as often at least as at the close of one term in each year, and to take such oversight of the Institution as the Presbytery shall direct.

Resolved, 4. That said Academy be recommended to the favourable regard of the General Assembly's Board of Education.

The following persons were nominated by the Presbytery as those from whom the Trustees of the Academy are required, by the first of the foregoing resolutions, to elect three others in addition to their present number, viz., J. C. Backus, D. D., of Schenectady, Rev. David Tully, of Princetown, Rev. William J. McCord, of Jefferson, Rev. Morgan L. Wood, of Tribe's Hill, Rev. William James, Albany.

Done at the session of the Presbytery of Albany, held in West Milton, June 15, 1853.

Attest, John Clancey, Stated Clerk.

SCHOOLS AT CHRISTIANSBURG, VIRGINIA.

A writer in the "Watchman and Observer" gives a brief notice of the two Presbyterial Academies, Male and Female, in Christiansburg, Virginia.

Mr. Editor—Making a short stay in the town of Christiansburg, and being, as travellers generally are, a little addicted to inquisitiveness, I at once commenced my queries about the schools at this point—and to my great surprise I found a very flourishing Male Academy here, together with one among the most promising Female collegiate Institutions I have ever met with any where. These superb schools—for such I must call them, are under the immediate supervision of gentlemen and ladies of great reputation; having been started by the Montgomery Presbytery, they are, to a great extent, under its fostering care—and if encouraged must result in great good to all Western Virginia. Why should not all the surrounding country patronize these schools? From what I could learn, a youth can receive a classic education at these schools for much less than at any other place in Virginia; and I must say in one of the most moral towns I have ever met with. I understand that the examinations have just closed, reflecting great honour, alike upon the teachers and pupils. The session commences, as I am informed, at each of the Institutions on the 1st Monday in September of each year, and closes on the 8th and 9th of July following. For the present adieu, Traveller.

We have watched with great interest the course of things at Christiansburg. In addition to these two institutions, a large church edifice has recently been erected, and will be dedicated next month. One good thing leads to another; and God blesses his faithful servants. The history of these two Academies is briefly this. First, The need of such Academies was sensibly felt by pastor and people. Second, Faith in God was exercised in their establishment. Third, The means were used to build and equip the institutions.

MAKEMIE COLLEGE.

The Legislature of Arkansas has, we are informed, granted a charter for a College under this title, to be under the care of the Synod of Arkansas. It is supposed that it will be located in the town of Batesville. They have also granted a charter for a Parochial School, under the care of the session of the church in that village, with an appropriation of three hundred dollars for the purchase of apparatus. This is doing pretty well for an Arkansas Legislature. It will be remembered that the Synod of that State, among its first acts, determined to found a College, and appointed a committee to procure a charter. The fixing of the site, if we remember aright, was left to be done hereafter, and we do not know whether it is determined by the charter which has been granted or not. If there is a College of any sort in the State, we have never heard of it.

—Ex. Paper.

WESTMINSTER COLLEGE.

This new institution, located in Fulton, Calloway county, Missouri, by the Synod of the Old-school Presbyterian Church, is in a fair way of being speedily erected. The building committee, have already issued proposals for its erection, and will receive bids until the 10th of February. It is to be of brick, 90 by 60 feet, with a portico and four columns. They agree to pay as follows: one-third in two months from its commencement; one-third in six months, and balance when completed.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST.

All that the Board deem it important to furnish is their CORPORATE NAME, viz.

"The Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

Any person, disposed to leave a legacy to the Board of Education, is requested to insert the right CORPORATE NAME. The State laws differ so much that no one Form will answer in all the States.

The following form may be used in Pennsylvania.

I give and devise to the Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, the sum of ——— dollars, to and for the uses of the said Board of Education, and under its direction.

[When real estate, or other property, is given, let it be particularly described.]

SCHOLARSHIPS.

The sum of Seventy-five dollars forms a scholarship to assist a student in the collegiate course, and the sum of One Hundred dollars in the theological course.

HONORARY MEMBERS.

The sum of Fifty Dollars constitutes a person an Honorary Member of the Board of Education. A copy of the Annual Report is sent to all the Honorary members every year.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,
No. 23 Centre Street, New York.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

Mission House, August 13, 1853.

India.—The only letters received from India since our last are from Allahabad, dated to the 14th of May. Mr. Hay mentions that "the College, press, bazar schools, and orphan schools, are doing their customary work. The extreme hot weather at this season renders any sort of work laborious; it is very trying, but we are thankful to say the health of all our families is pretty good." Mr. Hay also reports the admission of the wife of one of the pressmen to the communion of the church; and he speaks of two persons as inquirers, "one of whom is more than usually interesting," but time will show whether they are sincerely seeking the salvation of their souls.—Mr. Munnis had returned to Allahabad, with health quite restored, and was preaching daily in the bazars. He writes as follows: "I go out morning and evening, accompanied by Mirza and Simeon, either both or one at a time. This is truly delightful work, and we have an opportunity of preaching to large crowds of pilgrims, who flock here day after day, to bathe in the Ganges. You would be surprised to see the vast numbers of pilgrims from Cashmere and the Panjab; and we always find them ready to hear what we have to say. May the word spoken be accompanied with divine energy and influence!"

China.—We have not received any letters from the missions in China since our last. The intelligence given in the newspapers concerning the progress of the rebellion and the character of its leaders is full of interest. Their opposition to idolatry, and their profession of important parts of the Christian faith, in connection with the success which has thus far attended the movement, seem to authorize sanguine hopes for the future.

Mission to the Chinese in California.—Letters have been received from the Rev. W. Speer, dated to the 15th of July. He had delivered several lectures before large audiences in San Francisco, with a view to awaken interest on behalf of the Chinese and the mission. Measures were in progress to obtain funds for the chapel, school-room, and dwelling—all in one building; and Mr. Speer continued to be much encouraged in his important work.

Indian Missions.—Letters have been received from the Chickasaw Mission, dated to the 12th of July. The examination of the female boarding-school at the end of the first year, showed encouraging progress on the part of the scholars. The number was fifty-nine; next year, it is expected the full number for which the building is planned, one hundred, will be received.—Miss W. A. Isbell has been appointed as a teacher in connection with the Ottawa and Chippewa Mission, and has probably before this reached her station at Grand Traverse Bay.

France.—We have had the pleasure of receiving a call at the Mission House, from the Rev. Dr. J. H. Grand Pierre, of Paris, one of the founders, and Secretary of the Central Protestant Society of Evangelization in France, and also a letter, giving some accounts of the missionary work of the Society. From this we quote: "In the course of the two last years, great revivals have taken place in many parts of France, in the midst of Roman Catholic populations. For example, in ———, [We withhold the names,] 60 persons, in ——— 450, in ——— 500, in ——— 500, in ——— and the neighbourhood, hundreds and hundreds have left the Church of Rome, taken leave of their priests, turned to our Christian faith, and are listening at this moment to the preaching of the gospel. All those new stations, and many others, belong to our Central Protestant Society. We were obliged to build chapels, to open schools, to establish for them the ministry of the gospel. Not only that, but so numerous were the calls on the part of Roman Catholics, that, in the want of able ministers to send to them, we were under the necessity last year of opening in Paris a School of Divinity, for preparing young Christian men, truly converted and pious, for the ministry of the gospel. We have begun with twelve pupils, and will increase their number according to the resources it will please God to send us. "We are indebted for $3000. The Protestants in France are generally poor, and in the large towns those whom God has enriched with the goods of this world are for the most part indifferent.

"The Reformed Church of France, to which we belong, is Presbyterian in its constitution, and evangelical in its doctrine. It was formed by Calvin and Theodore De Beze: it has numbered thousands of martyrs; it rejoices to have among its fathers such men as Coligny and Duplessis Mornay, and among its divines such men as Bochart, Claude, Saurin, and others. . . .

"Our dear brethren of the Presbyterian Church in the United States will perhaps remember us in love before our God and Saviour Jesus Christ, and will perhaps extend to us over the sea a hand of sympathy and co-operation."

AFRICA: CORISCO MISSION.

REPORT OF THE BOARDING-SCHOOL.

The Rev. J. L. Mackey sends the following report, under date of April 15, 1853.

One full year is completed since the girls' boarding-school was commenced. The number of boarders at present is twelve. It might have been increased considerably, but I thought it would not be wise to increase the labours of Mrs. Mackey beyond what was required to attend to this number, at least during her first year; but she is quite anxious that the number be now enlarged nearly or quite up to the limitation (20) which you named. In order to have sleeping accommodations for that number, the house will need to be enlarged. We contemplate doing this when the dry season sets in.

The general health of the girls has been good; no case of death or dangerous illness has occurred among them during the year. During the year two have left the school. One of them was removed by her father; she had been but five or six weeks with us. She was taken into the school on the same condition with most of the others, was quite young, perhaps eight years old, free from any marriage engagements, and we had the promise of her father that she should not be removed or betrothed without our consent, until she grew up to womanhood. A proposal was made to her father by a man of note and standing in Gaboon, that she be betrothed to him; the temptation was too great for him to withstand, and before the matter reached our ears, it was consummated. A willingness was expressed on the part of her father and future husband, that she should remain for a time in our school; but as he had at least thirty wives already, and she had been so short a time under our influence, we thought it best to dismiss her at once, and fill her place with one whom we would have more prospect of permanently benefiting. It was with some feeling that we thus parted with the first pupil dismissed from our school, and we had feelings perhaps not less of pity than of indignation towards her father. The case was made quite public in the island, and caused a good deal of talk. There was, I suppose, but little appreciation of the injury the man was doing to his daughter, but there was strong disapprobation expressed of his falsehood and conduct towards us. The other one referred to, was dismissed on account of what we considered troublesome interference on the part of her people.

The general conduct of the girls, I suppose, is full as good as we could expect, when we think of the circumstances that surrounded them before they came under our influence. Their great failings are a disregard of truth, and a disposition to commit petty thefts.

They are docile, and for the most part attentive to their lessons. Their progress in their books, and in learning the work assigned to them, has been quite commendable. I question whether the same number of white girls of their ages, taken uninstructed as they were, would have made greater progress during the same time. A class of nine read in the Testament. One of these is not a boarder, but lives in our village; the remainder are spelling and learning their letters. Their progress in learning to sew has been very good. Six or seven of them are able to sew up a shirt or dress when it is cut out, without any more than a general oversight, and the sewing of several of them is neat and strong. I intended to give you an explanatory catalogue of the school, but will have to defer it.

We cannot report any seriousness or special attention to religious things among the girls. They are fond of singing hymns, and are able to find and sing out of their books several hymns which have been taught them in school. We trust that the religious instruction that they are receiving may be blessed to their conversion and salvation.

The attendance of the day-scholars is so irregular that we can count on benefiting them but little. There have been eighteen day-scholars in attendance, but they have been nearly all extremely irregular. The whole number in the girls' school during the year has been thirty-four, the average attendance about eighteen.

REPORT OF THE BOYS' DAY-SCHOOL.

The Rev. G. McQueen, Jr., gives us the following accounts concerning the day-school for boys. His letter is dated at Evangasimba, May 6, 1853.

I will endeavour to give you such a statement concerning the Boys' School as will enable you to judge of its present condition, and form your own opinion as to the future.

The school was under the care of a native assistant from Gaboon mission, in the first instance, but continued only a few weeks in session. After his return to Gaboon, brother Mackey undertook to sustain it, in addition to his other duties, but the labour was too much for one man, and after a few days he wisely concluded to relinquish the attempt. However, he heard those who lived in the mission town read and spell each evening after prayers. This was the order of things when I arrived. The question of re-opening the school was one of the first on which we consulted. It did not take long to decide.

Notice was given, and on the 14th of February we met in the church and opened the school. Fifty-eight names were enrolled, and since that time the number enrolled has run up to 77. Brother Mackey thought the attendance would average 40. The average for ten weeks is 37. We cannot depend on the attendance of any out of our town. If it were not for these, we would at times have but few to receive our instruction—some days we might have none.

The people begin at an early age to provide for themselves. The children fish, and do such other work as they can, to get food and a piece of cloth. The men are engaged for the most part in trade, which is carried on by them between the vessels and the Bushmen. This requires their absence from the Island to be frequent, the time of their absence varying from three days to four or five weeks, and even longer. When this is connected with the fact that many whose names are on the school-list are thus engaged, it will not appear so strange that the attendance does not average more. Nor does this trading business prevent merely the men from attending regularly. The youth and boys are required, in many cases, to assist in getting ready, and when the boat returns, all hands must help to unlade and convey to town the articles purchased; and not unfrequently the youth and boys are taken along to assist and learn. Then there is another cause which has the same effect on the attendance. The people have not yet learned the value of an education; they do not appreciate its advantages. The advantages of trade they know and feel, and in some respects it is pleasing to the natural inclinations. The study of books requires another kind of exertion, less entertaining, and less welcome to their untutored minds. They do not like restraint of any kind, and will not voluntarily come under any, unless some advantage is supposed to follow. I think it is quite probable that many are influenced by the hope of reaping additional advantage for trade.

The parents do not require their boys to attend; if they do aught favourable it is in the way of advice. There is indeed an inducement now to the boys, which did not before obtain. We have given them to understand that when we want boys to work for us, we will give that work to those who attend school regularly, in preference to those who do not, and perhaps exclusively to the former. This, no doubt, has its effect. The little boys often want "a cloth," or "shirt," and if they attend school regularly they can get work, and in the way of pay receive the article they need.

Brother Mackey has avoided "donating" (as much as might be) as setting a bad precedent, very troublesome to the missionary, and productive of little, if any good. It is better to encourage industry than beggary.

Since the school has been in operation, Capt. L—— has been here two or three times, and the schooner "Cortes" twice. Capt. B—— has been in the Moondah, and French vessels, two or three—I am not sure but others. So that the people have been much of the time going and coming.

Two classes were formed in the "First Reading Book" the first day. These had such previous advantages as enabled them to read in easy lessons. The other scholars began with the alphabet. Many thought they could read g-o go, u-p up, &c., but I thought not. They could say them—having learned them by rote—but did not know the letters when found elsewhere. At present there are six classes, all in the First Reader. The first and second classes are nearly through the book; the third class are doing well, though slow in progress; they are in the twelfth lesson, reading such simple sentences as "God sees us all the day long;" "God sees us in the dark;" "God made the sun and moon;" "God made us to love and serve him," &c. The fourth class are in the seventh lesson; the fifth and sixth are just out of the alphabet, and all others are in their A B C.

They do not accomplish as much as I would like, but this is the beginning of such matters, and they are not as well prepared to make the most of a little as I hope they will be by and by. The school is a voluntary thing, so far as the people of the other towns are concerned. Of course we require the attendance of those who live with us. As to the others, we advise them, and tell them some of the advantages—the greatest of which is that they may read, each for himself, the word of God. We have endeavoured to make them understand and feel that the object of our coming here is to tell them about God, and the way to be saved, and desire them to know God's will, and for this end chiefly are anxious to have them learn to read, that they may search the Scriptures, which are able to make them wise unto salvation.

The school opens at 8 o'clock, A. M., with prayer, and closes about 10, A. M. After the recitations, if time permits, they are exercised in a few simple questions, such as "How many days in a week there are—how many days in a year—how many hours in a day—minutes in an hour—seconds in a minute—weeks in a year—months in a year—their names," &c. Brother Mackey has commenced translating a series of simple Scripture questions, chiefly historical. In the Sabbath-school they have a series of doctrinal questions.

As we have but one session each day, and that one for so short time, it cannot be expected that the scholars will make such rapid progress as if we had two sessions daily. Brother Mackey does not think it prudent or desirable for me to undertake an afternoon session, for the present, at least; and here I may say, by way of explanation, that when brother Mackey says he "dreads another suspension," &c., he does not intend to say that he expects a suspension, but that he so feels the importance of the school continuing in operation without interruption, and so fears the results of a suspension, that he prefers to err on the safe side.

As to the future we know not. We think its prospects good. It is promising, judging from the present; still we have not sufficient data to speak confidently. We think and hope, but we cannot predict. With the blessing of God the effort will not be in vain.

INDIA: FURRUKHABAD MISSION.

JOURNAL OF THE REV. A. H. SEELEY.

A Tour in the Districts of Furrukhabad and Mynpoorie.

Dec. 14.—This morning, after a ride of ten miles over an excellent road, we found our tents pitched near a large village, composed of Hindus and Mohammedans. Before breakfast, went to the bazár, and from the steps of a large temple, held a long discussion with a pandit, on the comparative excellences of Christianity and Hinduism. I drew my argument against his religion, from the impious and false precepts of the shastres, the acknowledged gross wickedness of their gods, and the dreadful fruit which his religion had produced. Upon these points he could say but little in reply. This he knew very well, and therefore made a constant effort to turn from the point under discussion. Whenever he did so, I appealed to the crowd who were standing around, to notice how unfair he was in trying to escape without answering me. He at last became angry. This, of course, gave me a still greater advantage over him. He insisted upon my leaving the temple; this I refused to do, and appealed to the people if I had not a right to stand there. They decided in my favour. He then said, "he did not want to hear my talk any longer." I told him the people did, and therefore I should not stop until I got ready. He now became very pious, and went into the temple, and made as much noise as he conveniently could in worshipping the image. After talking to the people awhile about Christ and the way of salvation through him, I returned to the tent.

Connected with the temple is a large, substantial brick house, built by a wealthy merchant living in the city of Furrukhabad, for the accommodation of pilgrims who travel back and forth to their different shrines. About 11 o'clock I visited it, and found twelve pilgrims then in it, most of whom were engaged in cooking their food, which they receive free. The proprietor furnishes them with flour, salt, and fuel; with these they prepare their simple meal, and then pursue their journey. I was told that about fifty each day are fed in this way.

An old man was sitting on one side of the open court cooking when I went in; he was nearly naked, his hair matted with dirt, and his face marked after the manner of his sect. He had cleared a space about five feet square; this he had carefully washed with water mixed with cow dung. On one side of this holy spot, he had made a small fire of dried cow dung; in a small brass platter before him, he was kneading dough; when it was prepared to his liking, he took a piece in his hands, and having moulded it in the form of a large pancake, placed it upon the fire before him. Of course his cake was burnt and smoked, but he did not seem to care for this. In turning partly round to speak with a friend, I placed my foot within about four inches of the consecrated spot; this I did intentionally, in order to see what he would do. He instantly arose, and placing his hands together, begged that I would not touch the spot on which he was cooking his food, for it would then be polluted, and he would have to throw it all away. I assured him I had no intention of making either him or his food unholy. He seemed very thankful for this avowal, and at once resumed his posture and work.

This poor old man had been to Badrináth, and was now on his way to Prág and Káshi, and other places of pilgrimage. He said he was seeking salvation, and hoped in this way to obtain the forgiveness of his sins, and the favour of the Lord. There is no doubt but that many of these pilgrims are sincere, for it would seem that nothing but the deepest delusion and the utmost sincerity, could induce these poor, miserable wanderers, to lead lives of such sorrow and want.

19*th.*—Mr. Freeman preached to an attentive audience, composed of servants and others, who came to get books and tracts; some seemed really to be inquiring as to the true religion. Still, hypocrisy is so deeply rooted in the minds of this people, and they know so well how to assume a mask to accomplish what they wish, that it is difficult to know their real sentiments from either their words or actions. In the evening, visited a small village, and talked awhile to a few ignorant men and boys, without much satisfaction to myself, or, I fear, benefit to them.

20*th.*—Mr. Campbell and I started to visit two villages which lay about three miles from our tents. In the first, we found several poor, besotted persons, who seemed incapable of understanding anything said to them on the subject of religion, while they were very quick in understanding anything said about their village, or crops, or cattle. One man said "they were poor farmers, and it was their business to think of what they should eat, and the Brahmans, to remember God and worship him." Another, when asked what he worshipped, said he worshipped God. "And do you not worship idols, and trees, and animals, and brahmans?" "Yes, sir," he said, with an idiotic laugh, "I see you know all about the Hindu religion."

At the next village we found a greater number of hearers, and far more intelligent than the one we had left. About fifteen persons were sitting around a rude sugar-mill; some were engaged in grinding the cane, others in boiling the juice, and, as usual, some smoking the hukka. The head-man was very kind, and treated us to as much sugar as we chose to eat. We told them that when in our own country, we heard of their ignorance of the true God, and in pity for them had come expressly to tell them about him. Most of them stopped work while Mr. Campbell explained to them the character of God, his holiness and justice. He showed them the necessity of a Redeemer who could offer an atonement for sin, and that Christ is this Redeemer. He then drew a comparison between the Hindu incarnation and the incarnation of Christ, and in this way showed that they could hope for nothing from Rám or Krishnu, or any other of their many gods, for they were stained with sin and notoriously wicked; while through Christ, who was holy, they could obtain salvation. All gave a ready assent to every thing which was said, but were evidently glad when we got ready to leave.

Arrived at our tents about sundown, and found all the servants, in great tumult, gathered around a snake which they had just killed; it was a little more than five feet long. They called it Dhámin, and commenced giving me frightful accounts of the deadliness of its bite, the speed with which it can run, and the dreadful wounds which it often inflicts with its tail. One said, "there is another no doubt here somewhere." "Yes," said another, "and who can sleep to-night?" Knowing how clever natives are in making out a fine story, I began to doubt as to the truth of what they had said to me about the snake, and told them so. They all affirmed that there was "no kind of doubt about it." "Everybody knows it." As I had never heard of the snake before, I went into my tent to look for the meaning of the word Dhámin, and found the definition "a harmless kind of serpent"—so much dependence can be placed upon the stories of natives. The desire to tell something marvellous is universal.

22*d.*—Walked ten miles, and visited three villages. All the people ignorant, none being able to read, and the victims of the most miserable and degrading superstitions.

24*th.*—Reached Kirowli, a large village in the district of Mynpoorie. In the bazár, Mr. Freeman and the catechist preached to a large audience. In the afternoon, we all visited an English school supported by a Zamíndár, and taught by a young man who learned English in the mission-school at Furrukhabad; there were about sixty boys in attendance, studying English, Hindu, and Urdu. It was pleasing to find this school, and the more so as it is the result of the voluntary effort of this man. He was pleased to think that we took the trouble to visit it. He said he found so many boys running around the streets, and growing up in ignorance and vice, that he started the school to see if he could not do them some good. He is a very intelligent, active, and enterprising man, and showed us many certificates of character which the different magistrates, judges, and physicians of Mynpoorie had given to him. When we returned from the school we found six large elephants, belonging to the East India Company, chained a little way from our tents; the drivers were engaged in feeding them, one of whom was in a great rage at some one, and he made so much noise that I went to where he was. He did not see me coming, and as I was just upon him his anger was at its highest pitch, and he pulled off his shoe and fell to beating a woman that was squatting behind some of the traps. I called to him to stop, which he soon did. I asked him if he was not ashamed to beat a woman. "My wife is so wicked, what can I do if I do not beat her?" said he; "she gave me abuse, very bad abuse, and what can I do?" "But did you not call her bad names, and abuse her with your tongue?" He confessed he had. By this time a crowd had gathered around, and he seemed much ashamed, and promised he would not beat his wife any more.

26th.—Started about sunrise, and returned to our tents at 11 o'clock, having visited three villages, two of them composed entirely of farmers; in the other met several Brahmans, none of them, however, could read. I took the occasion to make some remarks upon the false and ridiculous claims of the Brahmans; showed that they were like other men sinful and corrupt by nature and practice, and entirely unworthy to be called the religious guides of others, for how can the blind lead the blind. One man said he liked what was said about the pretension of the Brahmans, and the sin of worshipping idols, but he did not like our religion, for it allowed us to kill animals, which he considered one of the greatest sins. I charged him with taking away life; this he stoutly denied, until I made some specifications; the crowd laughed, and said, Yes, he is guilty of the very same sin which he has brought against Christians. I showed that the great cruelty practised upon oxen and other animals by the Hindus was far worse than killing them at once.

28th.—As Mr. Campbell and I were returning from a long walk, during which we had visited two villages, we came upon three persons just at dark, sitting at the roadside before a stone image placed upon a small mound of earth. They had lighted a lamp, which was burning before the god, and were just making their offerings to it, consisting of flowers and Ganges water. Mr. Campbell reasoned with them, and tried to convince them of the great foolishness and sin of worshipping a stone. One who could read concluded to go with us for a tract. None but those who live in heathen lands know the depth and corruption of heathenism. God grant that the time may soon come when all idols shall be given to the moles and the bats, and the truth as it is in Christ shall cover the whole earth!

THE CHRISTIAN VILLAGE, ISAIPUR. BY THE REV. J. J. WALSH: SEPTEMBER 7, 1852.

Their Support and Employments.

The support of our native Christians has always been a subject of various thought and solicitude. We have introduced several branches of manual labour for them, the first of which was the manufacturing of carpets, which at that time were in great demand. But as the market for these carpets came to be supplied, and many other weaving establishments were introduced in different parts of the country, we found the demand so moderated as not to give us constant employment. And besides, after a close examination of the subject, we found that the making of rugs and carpets was not so remunerative as was at first supposed, and were consequently forced to give it up altogether. There are carpets made up at the Asylum ten or twelve years ago which are in use to this day, and highly prized by the parties owning them. The next article of manufacture was tent-making and shortly after this, the refining of saltpetre was added. The tent department, which is still continued, flourished beyond our expectations, but the refining of saltpetre proved a failure, owing to the fluctuating state of the market and the risk of shipment to Calcutta. The villagers have now become quite expert with the needle, and the tent-making business furnishes them with the means of permanent support, and a respectable position in society. Besides this, some of the men are farming the land given us by Government for the benefit of the Asylum. But as the land at our disposal is very small, and it was necessary to divide it into so many portions, it was never very remunerative, and not near enough for their support. We were therefore compelled to provide something else for them, and so they earn the balance of their subsistence in the tent factory. Some of those lately married gain a livelihood altogether in the tent-making business. Two of our young men are assistants in the tent department, and take a very large share of its management off from the Superintendent of the Asylum. The women earn two or three rupees per month, by knitting and spinning, and in this way aid their husbands and are kept usefully employed. The lace which they knit has a very respectable market, but we cannot dispose of it as fast as it is made. Still we find that when all are constantly employed, everything in the village gets on harmoniously, and we therefore feel disposed to help on this work as much as is possible. The most of the villagers having been brought up in the Asylum, always dependent on others, and knowing but little of the ways of the world, found it at first exceedingly difficult to manage for themselves. In every difficulty, and I may say, in almost every thing they did, they would go to the missionary for advice and direction. This, to a certain extent, was right and proper, but became after a while so constant as to be annoying to the missionary, by breaking in on his other employments, and wasting his time, besides being positively disadvantageous to the villagers themselves, by their not exercising any confidence in their own plans and arrangements: nor at first were they content with merely making demands on the time of the missionary, but frequently they would come for money, and with the demand, or request rather, repeat such a sad story of their grievances as to render it almost impossible to withhold the required assistance. This, however, involved them in debt, and in consequence of the number requiring aid, made in the aggregate a large draft on the Asylum, from whose funds the advances were made. At last this sum become so large that it was thought best to stop all advances, and teach our people to rely on themselves. This required some firmness, but it was tried, and has, we are happy to say, succeeded. There was some fear that they might apply to other parties, and by borrowing from the heathen involve themselves in inextricable difficulty. But this has not been the case, and we indulge the hope that their condition will so continue to improve year by year, as to make them quite independent of others. Two of our native Catechists live in the village, and are employed in making known the gospel to the heathen around us. They daily visit the bazārs and villages, and by distributing tracts and conversing with the people, are accomplishing a good work. In regard to their spiritual interests, we are trying to do as much as we can. We have two services on the Sabbath, which they attend, and one on Wednesday evening. We have all the villagers assembled on Sabbath mornings in a Bible-class, when a chapter is read and explained to them, and there is a Sabbath-school for the smaller children.

Before concluding these remarks, let me advert to

The future prospects of the Village.

Every one acquainted with this little colony of Christians, must feel more or less interested in them, but none so much as those who have to watch over, and care for them. One great source of anxiety to the missionary in India, is the temporal necessities of native Christians and inquirers. Cut off from all the sympathies and aid of his relations and heathen companions, and persecuted and abused by almost every one, the native convert or inquirer is placed in very embarrassing and distressing circumstances. He may be willing to earn his own livelihood, but where is he to find employment. This is a matter of constant recurrence, and forces itself frequently on our attention. What can be done to remedy this state of things, and give Christianity a standing? Now it seems to me, that if we had a large village in our possession, to which was attached enough land for some three or four hundred people to cultivate, we could meet every case of this kind, and put our native Christians in a position to acquire respectability, and exert a very strong influence in favour of true religion. I would therefore propose that one of the neighbouring villages within four miles of Futtehgurh be purchased and arrangements be made for the removal of our Christian colony. Farming is the best resource for native Christians, as it is not only more free from vice and temptations, but more congenial to the growth of real vital religion. We have not room to spread where we are, and we cannot always rely on factory labour. Our tent business is now flourishing, but during the past year two new tent factories have been established, which may divert a good portion of the orders sent to us. We cannot rely on this with certainty for any length of time, and besides, the possession of a large village would obviate all uncertainty and enable us to attain our highest wishes in the best and most expeditious manner. The outlay for such a village would be large, but there can be no doubt that such a measure would be the most judicious and safe investment. It would be a refuge to all who may feel disposed to leave heathenism and find safety in Christianity. We can speak more decidedly on the subject from the fact that the experiment has been tried in the village of Chitaura near Agra, by the Baptist Missionaries, and has succeeded in a most wonderful manner. And there is no risk in the experiment, as landed property will always find purchasers in case it was found expedient to abandon the village. And we need not entertain many fears that we would not be able to pay the government rent every year for the land, as the Zamindars, who are the holders of the village property, have immense profits, which would cover all the losses by inexperience, &c., during the first two years. . . . The expenses of the Asylum would be reduced to a very small sum, as there are but few of the orphans left, and very little prospect of obtaining any more. Those who remain could give their whole time to the improvement of their minds and religious culture without any manual labour. There are some sickly and blind, who must ever remain in the Asylum, and these might be made useful in other ways. The desirableness of our having a village near Futtehgurh, sufficiently large for our purpose, I think cannot admit of a doubt, and if the plan proposed be carried out, we would soon be enabled to make a very deep and favourable impression on the people of the surrounding villages. They would see, I trust, examples of that gospel which we preach to them and others. And the contrast between this Christian village and their own could not fail to produce the most salutary influence; and particularly our manner of keeping the Sabbath. For all toil would be suspended—no plough, or sickle, no mill or work of any kind would be in motion, and instead of the wrangling and boisterous abuse heard in their own villages, they would see quietness, and peace, our people cleanly dressed, and listening to the word of God. To the successful working of this plan, it would be necessary to have one of the Missionaries stationed in the village, not only to conduct the necessary religious services, but also to watch over and direct their conduct. And he could make the village the central point of a systematic course of itineration. With the Catechists he could visit a certain number of villages regularly, and by attention to the sick and giving medicines, secure the esteem of all the people. In conclusion, I cannot but believe much every way, and in a short time, would result from such a system. But whether the plan proposed be carried out or not, I cannot close these remarks without requesting every reader to remember in their daily approaches to the throne of grace, their brethren, the Christian inhabitants of Isāipūr.

NOTICES OF A MISSIONARY TOUR, BY THE REV. J. E. FREEMAN: APRIL 19, 1853.

Preaching in the Villages.

On entering a village twelve miles from Mynpurie, we were met by the head-man of the village, attended by some pandits, or religious teachers, one of whom was to open a school on the part of Government. From all we received a respectful salutation, which we as respectfully returned. After taking our seat, by invitation, at the door of the chief of the village, we took occasion to set forth truth under the word Salām. This salutation is often made as a matter of ceremony, and sometimes as a mark of respect, but the Christian's salutation carries with it the desire and the prayer of the heart that it may be well with the person to whom it was given. Sincerity of heart, and purity of heart, were alike required of all who would thus offer this salutation. The state of heart here required was what none but God could give, and this effected through Christ, by the aid of the Holy Spirit. The people listened with interest to this new doctrine of good will to others, as implied in our daily intercourse with the people. A few days after this the chief met me, when he said he would call and see me at my house in Mynpurie.

Twenty-two miles from Mynpurie. As the villagers collected around us, there came with them an old pandit, and the only one of the village, and perhaps the large circle came more to greet the old man than to listen to our communications. He had been absent one month. We questioned him as to the profit, either of body or spirit, which he had received by his long and weary journey. He frankly confessed that he had received nothing, except a book on astrology, and that he bought with his own money. With the Bible in our hand, we presented the only object of worship; and the only way of purification, through the blood of the Lamb was pressed upon all. Moreover, we urged upon the people that all labour in search of the true and living God was profitable, and sure to end in the happiness of all thus employed. This labour, each could perform at his own house, and in the midst of his friends. The Bible was a fountain of truth; the more we knew of it, the more we loved it, and desired to meditate upon it. Knowledge increased love, and love increased desire. The people seeing that we had walked far, and talked long, offered us some sugar to refresh us. We accepted the offer, as an expression of the kind feeling of this simple people.

At Bajni, upon inquiring for the Zamindar of the village, we were informed that he was blind. We sent our salutation, when he was guided to the place where the people were accustomed to meet on public business of the village. A goodly number had already assembled, to see and hear what was to be done with their blind chief. Our blindness by nature, caused by the disease of sin, and our utter inability to come to God, except some one guide us, were profitable themes on this occasion. The audience were moved by sympathy for their head, and felt the power of the illustration when applied to their own hearts. O that God would give them to see Jesus.

Passing to Karárú, five miles from our tents, we found ourselves in the midst of a very large and thriving village. We were soon surrounded by near two hundred people. We took a seat near a large pípul tree, under which were gathered in a heap a number of stones, of all sizes and shapes, as objects of their worship. Many of them were broken idols, that testified of the iron rule of Mohammedanism. It is seldom that you find in the villages any thing more than this confused mass as their temple and their god. By a few questions, we drew from the people a full confession of the folly and absurdity of offering worship to them. In our turn, we set forth the Creator of all things as the object of love and devotion, and the only one who possessed power to deliver them from the dominion of sin.

After preaching in several smaller villages, we came to Kozánpúr, where a large crowd assembled, as they thought the new collector had come to look into their accounts. We said we had come to invite the people to look into their accounts with God, and to collect them to hear his word. "Well, well, we will hear." "Occupy till I come," was the word pressed upon their attention. We had more to do with eternity than time, as the latter was but the moment of a short existence here, and if at its close there was an unbalanced account against us, it could never be cancelled. Now was the accepted time, and Christ the Redeemer the one who possessed the power and the willingness to relieve all that come to him. We were all stewards of our Creator, and thus bound by our creation and continuance in life to serve none but him. We gave away here, as on former occasions, several gospels and tracts. William has been a cheerful and zealous labourer with us. Five or six hours, and a walk of eight or ten miles, is our daily work, in which our whole party, consisting of brothers Seeley, Campbell, and myself, with the native catechists, Dhokal, William, and Thomas, participate, and find their happiness in it.

CHICKASAW MISSION.

REPORT OF THE WAPANUHKA INSTITUTE, BY THE REV. H. BALENTINE: JULY 6, 1853.

This day ends the fourth quarter of the first year of the operations of this school, and lays upon me the duty of again furnishing you with information in regard to the condition of the school. It affords me much pleasure to be able to report continued prosperity down to the end of the school year. Aided, supported, and directed by the unseen hand of God, we have spent a year of hard labour, of good success, and of much happiness. Our labours have been directed to three general points in the training of the children placed under our care, viz., the improvement of their domestic habits, their intellectual culture, and their moral and religious instruction.

In order to secure the first of these ends, we have required our girls to engage in domestic duties daily, under the immediate care of one of the ladies of the family, who not only prepares the work, and directs as to the manner in which it ought to be performed, but also constitutes herself one of the operatives, and teaches by example, as well as by precept. This is found to be the only successful method of conducting this branch of our labours; and by pursuing this course, our expectations have been fully realized in this department. The domestic duties of the girls are such as industrious women perform in every community. Sewing, knitting, and the care of their own rooms, together with dining-hall and kitchen work; and as our pupils advance, cutting and fitting dresses, &c., as well as fancy sewing, will be included.

In prosecuting their intellectual culture, we have employed, according to the best of our judgment, the ordinary means used in the school-room; and have met with about as good success as could be expected by those acquainted with the training of Indian children. In this department our pupils labour under the disadvantage of not understanding the English language, which they have to acquire as they progress in learning to read. With the exception of this disadvantage, I have no hesitation in saying, that in this school, and in other schools in the territory with which I have been connected, the improvement of the pupils has been fully equal to that of any school with which I have been acquainted in the States. The difficulty of the pupils not knowing our language will gradually diminish, and that in proportion to the constancy with which the pupil is kept in contact with those who speak the language; and hence the manifest wisdom of the course pursued by the department. Notwithstanding the great labour, expense, and difficulty of conducting these large boarding schools, I am compelled to admit that I do not see how the education of the Indian can be secured without this agency.

The moral and religious training of our children is conducted with reference to their usefulness, and their happiness in time and in eternity; and the means employed to secure the ends in view is the Bible, from which we instruct them in the relative duties of life, and the duties that they owe to God, their Maker. Our success in this branch of our labours, if any, will be revealed in the future history of our pupils, and peradventure may be read on the pages of eternity.

The school has enjoyed an unusual measure of health during the year, and no death has occurred in our large family. This may be attributed to a variety of favourable circumstances contributing to the promotion of health, but the ultimate reference must be to the good hand of God.

The whole number of the pupils who have been in the institute during the year is fifty-nine, and the number present at the end of the term was fifty. This number was divided into two schools of equal numbers of pupils, each of which was under the joint care of two ladies, one having charge of the working department, and the other of the teaching.

MISCELLANEOUS.

For the Home and Foreign Record.

ON THE SUPPORT OF MISSIONS BY CHRISTIANS LIVING IN HEATHEN LANDS.

Why is it that so many in our churches do little or nothing for the cause of Foreign Missions? The reasons, no doubt, are various.

Some are wholly indifferent to the subject; and not to this only, but to all subjects of a kindred nature. They care for none of these things. They are engrossed with the world, and think of nothing else. To such I have, at present, nothing to say.

Some contend that "charity begins at home;" meaning that it ought never to attempt anything abroad. They are opposed, therefore, to the whole theory of missions. They have yet to learn "what be the first principles of the oracles of God." These also I pass by.

Others, admitting that the cause is a good one, profess to have no money. To such I would only say, Read the eighth chapter of the second epistle to the Corinthians; while I turn to another class whose theory of the work is equally orthodox, and whose practice, for the most part, is equally heterodox.

I refer to those who doubt about the success of the enterprise, as it is now carried on; and who, therefore, think that the money given for this object is virtually lost. It may well be presumed, that few who hold this opinion ever read on the subject. They know nothing about the success which has attended missionary efforts, because they take no trouble to inform themselves. Or, if one here, and another there, happen sometimes to look into a missionary periodical, they read only just enough to learn that the work is not free from discouragements. They get no adequate conception of the work as a whole. They know little or nothing of what is being done, and they persuade themselves that the time for the world's conversion has not yet come, or that the instrumentality now employed for effecting that conversion is not the right one. Hence they either give nothing at all, or what they do give, they give grudgingly.

If such persons were really anxious to know the truth, and to learn their duty on this subject, they would find abundant means of instruction in the precepts of the Bible, and in the reports of churches springing up in various parts of the heathen world. But I propose to obviate their doubts by another process.

What I have to say may commend itself to those also, who, to the prejudice of the cause, have taken up the idea that missionaries do not live in a style compatible with the self-denial which naturally pertains to their character and their office—an idea to which currency has been given by the publications of such persons as Madame Pfeiffer. And, in like manner, it may commend itself to all who, from any cause, are disposed to withhold confidence from the agencies employed by the Church for the propagation of the gospel abroad.

I call the attention of all such persons, then, to the fact, that wherever Christian people are found on heathen ground, they are among the most liberal supporters of the missionary enterprise. They are acquainted with the missionaries, know their manner of life, understand better than strangers can do, what ought to be expected of them, witness their labours from day to day, and see with their own eyes what the palpable effects of those labours are. The example of men so situated, ought to silence every doubt, and to create in us the strongest assurance, that this cause, as it is commonly conducted, deserves the fullest confidence of all Christians.

It will suffice to cite cases from two missionary fields alone—South Africa and India.

The Christian population in the immediate vicinity of the Cape of Good Hope, contributed, chiefly in 1851, to the nine Wesleyan missionaries in the Capetown District, for the general purposes of the mission, the sum of 362 pounds sterling, being about 1800 dollars, besides 1200 pounds ($6000) towards the erection and enlargement of chapels.

They also gave to the Scotch Church mission in Capetown, in 1849, 1850, and 1851, an average of £200 ($1000) a year.

Including donations from the Government, for some of the mission schools, and certain rents of no great value, the amount contributed in twelve months, by the same community, to the Apostolic Missionary Union of Capetown, as reported in 1851, was about 1409 pounds—over 7000 dollars.

At the same time, contributions were made in that district to the missions of the London Missionary Society, the full amount of which I am not able, at present, to state.

In India, there is scarcely a missionary station where there are not some European Christians. In the more prominent places, such as Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, they are numerous. Some of them are Presbyterians, some are Baptists, and some are Congregationalists, &c., though a large majority are Episcopalians. What, then, is the testimony borne by the contributions of these Christians to the cause of missions in India?

They gave, in 1850, to the Baptist Missionary Association in Calcutta, besides what was given to Baptist missionaries elsewhere, 2,225 rupees, ($1,112.)

In the same year, they gave to the Episcopal missions in Bengal and the north of India, connected with their principal Society, 70,851 rupees, ($35,425.)

In 1851 they gave to the London Missionary Society's auxiliary in Bengal, 12,060 rupees, ($6,030.)

They gave to the Lodiana Mission, (connected with the American Presbyterian Church,) during the first ten years of its existence, (including some donations from a native chief,) the sum of 17,812 rupees ($8,906.) This was for purposes connected, directly or indirectly, with the missionary work, and most, if not all of it, was unsolicited. In the next three years, the average of contributions to this mission per annum, was 4,593 rupees, ($2,296.) In the last two years of which I have definite information on this point, viz., 1849–50, the average was 7,246 rupees ($3,623) a year.

A single congregation of Christians in Calcutta, give annually to the mission of the Free Church of Scotland, in Bengal, about 10,000 rupees, ($5,000.)

There are some servants of Christ in that country, in the receipt of comparatively large incomes, who give for such objects all they have, except a pittance reserved for their own support. One, for example—an officer in the army—besides doing much by his personal efforts, is believed to give, to missionary and kindred objects, not less than three or four thousand dollars a year. Others, with smaller incomes, are understood to give each from one to two thousand dollars a year. One person, who is known to give the principal part of his receipts, when, not long since, he came into the possession of 5000 dollars, by a special act of Providence, gave the whole of it to the cause of missions: and afterwards, when Providence increased his ability, by placing another $5000 at his disposal, it went in the same way.

Similar cases might be mentioned, to show not only how those who live in the midst of missionary operations in India, regard those operations, but also how certain Christians there understand the nature of their stewardship. But I shall only add, that for the last two or three years, the sum contributed in all India, towards sustaining the missions there in the different branches of their work, has amounted to about £33,000, or $165,000 a year. This, surely, is enough to confound all the objections that the uninformed, the misinformed, and the enemies of the cause have ever raised against it.

Though these facts are given for the benefit of doubters, they may also, perhaps, be a word in season to some who contribute cheerfully, and with confidence, to this great cause.

THE PASTORATE OF MISSION CHURCHES.

Several important considerations are daily pressing the question of the pastorate of the mission churches on the attention of the friends of missions. Hitherto it has been the almost uniform practice for the missionary to assume the office of pastor over the converts. Thus his time has gradually become more or less appropriated to their oversight, and a diminished attention given to evangelization; or if extensively carried on, it has chiefly been left in the hands of native preachers. By degrees the missionary character is likely to be lost in that of the pastor, and the great object of missionary institutions changed from that of organizations to give the gospel to the heathen, to that of societies for the support of churches. With the increase of converts this change will become more apparent and the obstacle it presents in the way of extension one of greater magnitude. For the men and funds devoted to this work will be gradually absorbed in the maintenance of present labourers, and none will be available for further progress.

To many this course seems to be the reverse of that followed by the apostles, whose office as ambassadors for Christ to sinful and perishing man, missionaries to a very considerable extent partake. At least, so far as relates to the promulgation of the truth, apostles and missionaries occupy the same ground, and the object to be attained is in each case alike—the conversion of souls to God by the preaching of Christ crucified. The early messengers of the gospel adhered to the primary duty imposed upon them, and as sinners were brought to God they committed the converts to the care of men from among themselves, who displayed the abilities and gifts suitable for pastoral work. They then pressed forward to other lands and to other people, over which still brooded the darkness of heathenism and sin.

Modern missions have somewhat reversed this order of proceeding. The missionary takes the oversight of the church, and the native converts assist him in the work of evangelization. Thus we have native churches with European pastors supported by the societies at home, and the self-support so desirable to cherish is indefinitely deferred, for the instances are rare in which a native church can find the maintenance of a European minister.

With the limited resources at our command, the continuance of this course must gradually absorb all our funds and leave missionary societies deficient in the means of enlarging the field of their operations. If converts multiply to the extent that faith anticipates, and prayer supplicates, then will it become impossible for the churches of this country to find either men or money in adequate supply for the mission churches they will have to support.

This important question has received the attention of other missionary bodies besides our own. It will be satisfactory to our readers to have placed before them those views which, while we cordially concur in them, will be found to sustain the suggestions we have made. And first we present some extracts from a Report of the Assam mission of our American Baptist brethren. The necessity of raising up an adequate and self-sustaining agency on the spot has been forced upon their notice by circumstances which are common to us and them, and give to their remarks great force. They say:—

"Self-support, and self-propagation, are the two points toward which all missionary labour must tend, and really effectuate, or the result will be a signal failure. We must continue to look to the Christian churches at home for pioneer labourers to give the first impulse, and they must direct their efforts so that the field itself shall send forth the continuous supply. Such was the apostolic course. Wherever they went preaching the gospel, and converts were multiplied, there they chose out some from their midst to dispense the gospel in their absence. Before Christianity can flourish in this heathen soil, it must be naturalized, and take deep root. We cannot pronounce any mission successful merely because it counts its hundreds of converts. How many instances are there, where, if missionaries were removed, and all aid from Christian lands withdrawn, in a very short space of time almost every trace of Christianity would disappear, simply because these bands of disciples have not within themselves the elements of self-support and self-propagation, or rather because these elements had not been duly developed. The mission that has raised up a few propagators of Christianity, has done more for the kingdom of Christ, and good of the country, than the mission that numbers its thousands of converts, but no propagators.

"Again, it is preposterous to suppose that Christian churches at home will ever send out labourers in sufficient numbers to disciple the nations, or that, if men in sufficient numbers were found willing to come to our help, their support would be given. We are therefore compelled to raise up, in the field itself, the best qualified native agency we can. When we consider, also, the difficulty of obtaining a mastery of the native language, its idioms and pronunciation; when we think of the particular habits, trains of thought, and impulses to action—so different from our own that they occasion a sort of chasm between the missionary and the heathen, and render it exceedingly difficult for us to reach them—it is then that we are made to feel the necessity of employing native preachers wherever we can, to aid us in our present work, and ultimately to become the chief evangelizers of their countrymen."

Our readers are already aware that our Society is endeavouring to pursue the course pointed out in these extracts in the Bahama Islands, and with cheering prospects of success. The Committee of the Church Missionary Society are doing the same in New Zealand, and it is with pleasure we transcribe the following weighty sentences from the instructions recently given to Archdeacon Williams, on his return to New Zealand.

"Amongst the many topics on which we have conferred with you, there is one especially which may be termed the great Missionary problem of the day, and which we select for our present instructions —namely, the transfer of native congregations from the missionary basis to some settled ecclesiastical position, by which they may be rendered independent of the Society.

"In the early stages of every mission, the native converts must depend upon the European missionary for pastoral ministrations, and for the education of their children; but this should not be the case in the advanced stages of the work. The success of every mission consists in the organization of a native ministry, capable of undertaking the pastoral charge of the native Christian flocks. This is the ultimate object to be kept in view from the first gathering together of a native congregation. Christianity can scarcely be said to be rooted in any land while it is dependent upon the labours of foreign missionaries. It must have its roots in the soil. The native church must have its native pastors, supported by native resources.

"The first and most pressing need is that of a properly organized system for the training and employment of native pastors. The Committee venture to offer a few hints, suggested by the experience of other missions, which may serve as a guide in your consideration of this subject.

"The first suggestion which the Committee will make is, that the persons selected for special training should be men of mature Christian character—men who have been proved as catechists—men who have shown themselves to be actuated by the love of Christ, and for his sake by the love of souls, and who possess a natural aptness to teach. Whenever the attempt has been made to train up a native pastorate by giving a superior education to promising youths, it has been found that the education imparted to them has proved an obstacle to their becoming native pastors, by taking them out of the habits and sympathies of native society, and making them aspire to European tastes. Wherever, indeed, maturity of natural and spiritual life can be happily found in a man who has received a good education in his youth, and has not been spoiled by that education for native work, so much the better—such an one will be a choice instrument. But we wish to guard you against a very common notion, that you must wait till a well-educated class of teachers can be trained up from boyhood, before you can institute the native pastorate.

"The next point to which the Committee direct your attention is the kind of establishment, and the locality, which are suitable for the preparation of such selected teachers.

"The system should be adapted to the native mode of life, rather than to an European collegiate establishment. No large expenditure on buildings should be incurred: the native teachers should be brought together at a missionary station, and should live in their native houses and style, with their families, if married. Being in the midst of missionary operations and schools, they will keep up their own missionary habits, and assist in the schools of the station, while their own education is advancing.

"The third point to which the Committee will draw your attention is, the employment and support of such trained native teachers. After, upon due examination by a committee of missionaries, they shall appear sufficiently prepared for pastoral work, the Committee advise that there should be assigned to each certain defined localities as a pastoral charge, not independent of the missionary, but under his superintendence; though that superintendence is to be gradually relaxed, and ultimately withdrawn."

We shall close these extracts with some portions of a minute upon the position of native ministers in a mission, found in the same document, which fully sustain the statements made at the commencement of this article.

"A tendency exists in every mission, to occupy the time and labours of the missionary in the home duties of schools and pastoral ministrations; and even where two or more missionaries are united in the same field of labour, these home duties are still the chief object of attention, each sharing in them, to the hindrance or neglect of direct missionary work.

"It is very true that native converts both invite, and in a measure require, the constant care of a mature Christian ministry—and that, in the supply of their spiritual wants, there will always be room for the application of additional time and attention. But if a limit be not placed to this occupation of the time of a missionary, the whole resources of the Society will be exhausted in maintaining the ground already gained, instead of making fresh inroads upon heathenism.

"The best remedy for the tendency here described is to be found in the preparation of a native ministry, capable of undertaking the pastoral charge of native Christian flocks, under the general superintendence of the missionaries, whose time and strength will be proportionably released for the direct work of a mission—the evangelization of the heathen. In proportion, also, as such a native ministry can be introduced, the mission will become firmly rooted in the soil, and the resources of the Society will be set free for the 'regions beyond.'

"This view of a native ministry should be kept in sight from the first commencement of a native church; otherwise the missionary will insensibly become the pastor, and the native teachers who may be trained up, will be employed rather as missionaries than native pastors, and will, as agents of an European society, imbibe European tastes and habits; instead of regarding themselves as ministers, or servants in the Lord, of the native population, with which they are to be in every way identified.

"Missionaries should remember that it is upon the training up and location of such native pastors as we have described, that their own labours, and the resources of the Society, will be best economised; and that a preparation will be made for the transfer of missionary labours to the surrounding heathen."

With very slight modifications, these views are applicable to our own missions, and we shall rejoice to see the day when in the field we occupy there are numerous native churches sustaining their own ministry, and centres of light to the dark heathen population around.—English Missionary Herald, January, 1853.

LONDON JEWS SOCIETY.

Jewish Mission Church in London.

How few of the mighty mass of travellers who come to visit London, and see its sights and wonders, are aware that there is a church within it, in which Hebrew and Gentile Christians unite in singing the praises of the Redeemer, and in listening to His word. How few are aware that, as in primitive times, there is an institution where Hebrew Christian evangelists are trained for missionary employment, and sent forth to preach the gospel, to the Jew first and also to the Gentile; where Hebrew children have had the kind hand of charity extended to them, and from early years have had their faltering footsteps directed into the right way; where, in so small a circle, since the first ages of the Church, have so many adult Israelites been prepared for the sacred rite of baptism, and ultimately received, on full trial of their faith, into the Church of Christ.

Upwards of six hundred have already been baptized; "and," observes the Rev. J. B. Cartwright, "since the last anniversary, twenty-one adult Israelites have been baptized, who, with two exceptions, were carefully instructed for some months by Mr. Ewald, on whom that portion of the work chiefly devolves. Two candidates were prepared for baptism by another labourer in this work. I have also baptized twenty-three children, belonging either to our Hebrew Schools or the families of believing Israelites in the neighbourhood, making a total of forty-four baptisms during the year, or six hundred and seventy-six from the commencement. We are continually visited by Jewish converts who have been baptized, in other places, often at a distance from London, and amongst different bodies of Christians, or on the continent. The increasing number of Israelites baptized in the Christian faith in various parts of the world, is one of the remarkable features of our times. There are, however, many painful circumstances connected with this otherwise encouraging fact. The Christian friends of Israel have realized the importance of instructing the earnest Jewish inquirer, and thus preparing him for the sincere profession of his faith in Christian baptism; but they have not so fully realized the spiritual necessities of baptized Israelites. The greater part are compelled by circumstances, or by a wandering spirit, to quit the place where they were instructed in the Christian faith; and such persons do not easily attach themselves to a strange minister and congregation, to whom, indeed, they are probably unknown, and therefore their real character is not understood, and their spiritual necessities are not provided for. Such wanderers are usually very ignorant, and apt to forget the instruction they originally received. Jewish converts, like all others under their circumstances, need special instruction after their baptism as well as before it; and this they can but rarely obtain, except from those who are specially devoted to this work."

And we are told by the Rev. F. C. Ewald, that "eighty-four members of the house of Israel have been received under Christian instruction during the past year: they were natives of Syria and of the coast of Africa, of Italy and France, of Germany, Holland, and England; it was therefore required that the truth should be set before them in the languages they best know, namely, in Hebrew, Arabic, French, Italian, German, and English. Twenty-four of that number have been baptized; namely, two families, consisting of ten persons, including six children. A widow, whose three children had received baptism previously. A father of a large family, whose six children had been baptized before him. A head of a family, whose wife and children are still Jews. The rest are single individuals, of whom two are inmates of the Operative Jewish Converts' Institution and two have been baptized as infants."—Jewish Record, June 1853.

ANNUAL REPORT AND CATALOGUE.

The Puritan Recorder, the organ of our Congregational brethren, thus notices the Fifteenth Annual Report of the Board of Publication of the Presbyterian Church.

"This is an ably written Report, and shows a noble zeal on the part of our Presbyterian brethren in multiplying the silent preachers of the gospel. Their selection of books is generally made with excellent judgment; and while they pay, as they should, due respect to the distinctive features of their own ecclesiastical system, they stand chiefly on the broad platform of evangelical and practical Christianity."

A copy of the last Annual Report of the Board, and of the Descriptive Catalogue, or either of them, will be sent, postage prepaid, to any friend of the Board who will apply to the Publishing Agent, by letter prepaid.

PERNICIOUS FICTION.

The Puritan Recorder quotes from a Prize Essay just published by the American Female Guardian Society of New York, an article from the able pen of Rev. Samuel Harris, of Pittsfield:

The subject of fictitious reading is acquiring a grave importance. The unprecedented circulation of fiction has become one of the most momentous influences acting on the popular mind. In the year 1849, it was estimated that 5500 different novels were offered for sale in this country; so that if a man were to read one every week, more than one hundred years would pass before he would be through the list. The purchasers and readers of these 5500 novels must be counted by millions. The influence of this unparalleled amount of novel reading demands the most anxious attention. It is the design of this essay to prove that it must be disastrous.

No argument against these books can be drawn merely from the fact that they are fictitious. The parable, the fable, the allegory, the epic poem, the drama, are also fictitious. Fiction is a vehicle of pure, moral, and religious instruction, and of the undefiled and ennobling creations of genius, as well as of depraved sentiments.

Nor is it possible to establish a criterion, by which always and infallibly to distinguish pernicious fiction from the harmless, otherwise than we distinguish the pernicious from the harmless in other kinds of composition. Fictitious works must be judged by the sentiments which they teach, and the influences which they exert on their readers.

But to range through all the classes of fiction, for the purpose of showing, on this principle, what is pernicious in each, would lead to indefiniteness and confusion. The modern novel, however, whether in the bound volume, the pamphlet, the magazine, or the newspaper, has characteristics so marked that it needs no description, and presents a definite topic for discussion. Novels also compose the great mass of fiction actually in circulation. To these, therefore, for the sake of distinctness and precision, the discussion will be confined. Substantially, similar arguments will be applicable to pernicious fiction of every other class.

And even here there is no need of sweeping assertion. Some novels are stamped with genius and pure moral sentiment. But we must judge of this class of books, considered as a whole, by the character and influence of the vast majority actually in circulation; and, thus judged, novels must be characterized as pernicious fiction. We ask the attention of reflecting minds, and especially of those who read, publish, or sell these works, to a candid investigation of the justice of this charge.

In the outset, it is worthy of serious consideration, that there is a prevailing belief that novel reading exposes the reader to danger. It is ridiculously false to say that this is the belief only of the bigoted and narrow-minded. Oliver Goldsmith, himself a writer of novels, in a letter to a brother, on the education of his sons, thus records his earnest testimony: "Above all things, let him never touch a romance or a novel." The article on novels in Rees' Encyclopædia, after reviewing some of the most eminent novelists, is summed up as follows; "From this view of the best authors in the highest class of novel writing, it is evident that the perusal of these works is more calculated to be prejudicial than advantageous, unless the mind is previously fortified with sound principles, and the passions and feelings are completely under the control of the judgment." Says the Dublin University Magazine, especially of French novels, "These books have become almost a necessary luxury to those who read without plan, and for the amusement of the passing hour; but we do not hesitate to say that such works exert a most enervating and deteriorating moral influence." It is useless to deny that the same sentiments are held by a large proportion of the most excellent, the most candid, and the best informed. This very fact is a presumptive evidence of danger, which it would be rashness to disregard.

There is another reasonable cause of alarm to the novel reader, which meets us before we begin to inquire into the works themselves. It is found in instances of ruin caused by novel reading. Says a writer, "The case I am to state came under my own observation. In college he was for three years my room-mate. His powers of mind were of a high order. He was one of the best writers of the largest class which had ever entered that University. He was afterwards settled as pastor over a large and flourishing congregation in the largest city in our land. In this work he was remarkably successful. After a time he became editor of an important religious periodical, which he sustained with great acceptance and most happy results. At length, after years of useful labour, suspicion was excited as to his moral character. Upon investigation, disclosures were made which proved him to be a ruined man. He had taken of the intoxicating cup, and was guilty of other acts which shut him out for ever from the ministry. A political paper in New York city stated the fact of his fall, and imputed it to his evangelical sentiments. He saw that imputation, and replied to it in a most touching manner. He admitted the fact of his ruin, in tones of deep anguish. He then confessed the true cause. It was the reading of novels. There began his downward career. There were first cherished his unhallowed impressions. Thence he was led to drink the intoxicating cup. I knew his habits in college. He was then excessively fond of reading the works of Byron, Scott, and others of a similar character. These he read at first, he said, to improve his style of writing. He soon acquired a love for such reading, and was at length entirely overcome and ruined by it. He is now, poor man, in his grave, and gone to his final account. But for novels he might have been a faithful and useful minister of Christ, a blessing to the Church, a comfort to his family, and a large circle of respected friends."

A beautiful girl of nineteen years, a member of a popular boarding-school, left her room in the middle of a wintry night, and drowned herself in a neighbouring stream. In a letter to her teacher, a few hours before her death, she left this honest confession: "I have read too many novels for my good. Some, perhaps, might have read them without injury; but it has affected me. I look around and see those that are no better and have no wealthier parents, educated. They can stand as high in society as the wealthiest. Why is it? Because their friends feel an interest in their welfare. This reminds me of things that I have read about." While prosecuting her trade as a dressmaker, she had indulged a romantic and unreciprocated affection for a young man just completing his professional studies. Accustomed to the marvellous turns of fortune which are common in romances, in which difficulties vanish without the use of means, and relief happens at the moment of extremity, she had entered the school in the romantic hope that she might raise herself to a level which would secure his favour, and in the romantic expectation that means would, in some way be forthcoming for her support. But, unable to pay her term bills when they became due, her affections crossed, her hopes disappointed, she yielded to a romantic sorrow. She wrote to her teacher: "When you see the cold moon shining on the water, think that it shines on me!" And went out and committed the fearful crime of destroying her own life—a suicide by novel reading.

A minister at the West writes: "I was recently called to visit a sick woman who had been made poor by her own folly.—She told me that she was raised and partly educated by a lady in Eastern Virginia; when young she was led to read a few novels. These gave her a taste for that kind of reading, and she soon became so fond of it, that she would sit up all night to read fiction. She continued in this course for years; and even after marriage she found it necessary for her happiness. Thus the hours which ought to have been spent in taking care of her children and superintending household affairs, were worse than wasted in sympathies thrown away upon imaginary persons and sufferings; making the heart wholly unfit for sharing in the common duties and cares of life. As she lay upon her miserable couch, surrounded by all the marks of poverty, her body emaciated by protracted ill health, she raised her bony arm and said: 'See, sir, what a wretch I have made myself by novel reading. I have ruined my health and I have ruined my mind by indulging in that miserable trash. I have no peace. Satan is continually tempting me to believe that there is no God, no heaven, no hell, and that I had better put an end to my life.—Then Satan holds up some of those heroines for my example, who first murdered their souls, and then their bodies.' As I stood by her bedside, I wished that all the young ladies in our land, who spend so much precious time in poring over those 'Gems of Literature,' and shedding tears at imaginary sorrow, could have witnessed this, the natural end of their own course of folly."

INFIDEL PUBLICATIONS IN ENGLAND.

The Critic, an English literary publication, reports that the catalogue of Mr. Chapman, the London publisher of deistical works, consists of nearly one hundred pages, giving a list of books, of rare ability, written purposely to assail Christianity. To these, it remarks, must be added the Westminster Review, which has become the property of the same publisher, and is devoted to the same object. This is, indeed, a sad picture.

ON WRITING AND CIRCULATING GOOD BOOKS AND TRACTS.

In the first ages of Christianity, as well as in the present, there were evil books and good books. The evil ones were made a bonfire of by the early disciples, and the good ones were read, as the Apostle enjoins, when he says, "give attendance to reading." The authors of evil books are doing mischief as long as their works continue to be read, though not so long as themselves will be suffering for them in another world. The authors of good books are doing good long after they have ceased from their labours. This is true not only of a book, but even of a tract, or the simplest and smallest books. Much as Mrs. Hannah More did for the benefit of mankind by her larger works, as by the book she wrote for the education of the Princess Charlotte, it is doubtful whether her simple, Cheap Repository tracts for the poor, which have never been surpassed, did not effect more good at the time, and have not ever since, than all her other more laboured compositions.

Dr. Watts wrote sermons, and versified the Psalms for the use of the great congregation, but none so struck the mind of a Samuel Johnson as his Hymns for Infant Minds. And who can tell the good which these and his simple Catechisms have done? Was it a foolish saying of one who prophesied that the day would come when it would be considered a higher honour to be the author of the "Dairyman's Daughter" than to have written the Iliad or Æneid? Such being the case, who, having the ability, can excuse himself for not endeavouriug to write, if only one tract, for the rich or poor, when tracts for the times are always needed? Let all our ministers take care how they bury even their one talent in the earth. But what is the use of books and tracts unless they be put in circulation? It is sad to think how many good ones have been written, and have been comparatively useless, only because they were not placed within the reach of those who would read them if they had them.—Bishop Meade.

A BOOK FOR MOTHERS.

The Board are preparing for publication a highly interesting original work, entitled "The Faithful Mother's Reward, in the Conversion and happy Death of J. B., aged nine years." It is a book which every mother in the Presbyterian Church should read. The respected clergyman who has kindly communicated the manuscript to the Board, has furnished the following introductory notice.

The following narrative was prepared by the mother of its subject, many years ago, for the gratification of a near relative, without any intention of its ever being submitted to the public. All those more immediately concerned have been for some time in the grave. Few, indeed, personally conversant with the facts, now survive. The manuscript having fallen into the hands of a near Christian friend, it was thought that a more general circulation might subserve the cause of religion, illustrating, as it does, the faithfulness of God's covenant-promises to parents, the power of divine grace in early life, and the value of our excellent Catechism in developing intelligent Christian piety.

The narrative may be relied upon with entire confidence. Although it may seem to display the partiality of a mother's love, yet there are those still alive who can vouch for the strict truthfulness of the account.

OUR NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE CHILDREN OF THE BIBLE. 82 pp. Price 20 and 25 cents.

This little volume contains a number of interesting narratives of the lives of children mentioned in the sacred Scriptures, with various pictorial illustrations, which will greatly increase its attractiveness to the young. Such short biographies, written as these are, in a simple and lively style, cannot fail to prove both interesting and instructive to youthful readers.

The contents of the volume are as follows:—

The Picture Gallery and the Lighthouse; Isaac and Ishmael; Moses; Samuel; Abijah; The Widow's Son; The Little Captive Maid; The Child raised to life at Shunem; Joash; Little Children brought to Jesus; The Ruler's Daughter; Timothy; "The Child Jesus."

As a specimen of the author's style we insert the following:—

ISAAC AND ISHMAEL.—GEN. xxi. 9—21.

Far away in Asia is a country formerly called Canaan, and near to it is another, still known as Arabia. At the part where these two lands join is a long and wide desert. Only a few trees and shrubs grow in this barren spot. There are no flowing rivers or broad streams of water. In some places a little rivulet slowly moves along in winter, but dries up in summer. The heat of the sun burns up nearly all the grass; yet there are a few places where water and pasturage are found. To these spots the shepherds of Arabia bring large flocks of sheep and goats, which quietly feed around the dark-looking tents.

Nearly four thousand years ago, a good man, named Abram, lived in this part of the world. He was rich, though his riches did not consist in houses and lands, or in gold and jewels, but in sheep and cattle. His house was a tent. This was the best kind of dwelling for him, as he often made long journeys with his flocks from place to place. He could soon take down his tent, and put it up again, as he went about the country.

Abram, or Abraham as he was afterwards called, was not born in Canaan; God brought him from his own land to live there. It was promised to him, that from his family or race the Saviour was to come. This was the great promise of God, and through it the greatest of all blessings was to be given to sinful man. It is said in the New Testament, that Abraham saw, or foresaw, the day of Jesus, and was glad. He was glad there was a Saviour for his own soul, who also would be a Saviour for all those who should believe in him in every age.

Abraham had two sons; one named Ishmael, and the other Isaac. Though these brothers had the same father, they had not the same mother. Ishmael was the son of Hagar, and Isaac the son of Sarah. As Ishmael was several years older than his little brother, he ought to have been kind to him, and set him a good example. But he did not love him, and was full of envy. Ishmael was so full of spite that he used to mock his brother Isaac. Perhaps he called him ill names, because he knew it had been promised that Isaac should be the father of a great nation.

Abraham was much grieved at the bad conduct of his eldest son, and he sent the wicked boy and his mother away from the tent. We do not know that he would have done so, had not God told him that he would take care of them, and would make this child also the forefather of numerous tribes of people.

It was early in the morning when Ishmael and his mother were sent from the tent of Abraham. A leathern bottle, or rather bag, of water and some bread were given to them. They must have felt very sorry when they left such a good home as they had long enjoyed. The grief of Ishmael must have been the greater, as he knew it was his bad conduct which had led to their being put away.

The outcast mother and her boy went toward the desert. As she was a native of Egypt, she may have thought she could reach that country and live among her own people. She had not travelled many miles before she came to a wild part of the country. What could she now do? She had lost her way, and went up and down the desert, and could find no one to guide her. In that part of the world there were no roads or paths, and the way was rough and painful, and the heat great. At last they had drunk all the water from the bottle, and they could see no well nor river from which they could again fill it. Ishmael was now weary with walking, and faint from thirst and the heat of the sun. He could not go on any further. How sad was the state of the poor mother and her boy! In her distress she cried, "Let me not see the death of the child." So she laid him under a tree or bush, and "sat down over against him a good way off." She could not help him, but would not leave him to perish alone. Ishmael must now have known how foolish and wicked his conduct had been. He knew that he had brought himself and his mother into all this affliction, and he must have wished that they were once again in Abraham's tent. Sin will always bring us into trouble.

As the lad lay weeping and moaning, a voice was heard. Where could it come from? Could she be mistaken in the sound? No; in the stillness of the solitude an angel spoke to her. He had been sent by God to comfort her in her distress. "Fear not," said he, "for God hath heard the voice of the lad where he is." And "God opened her eyes," so that she saw a well not far off from where she sat. With new strength she rose from the ground, and with joy ran with her bottle to the well. Do we not think we see her, as soon as it is filled, hastening to her son, and before she tastes a drop herself, pressing it to his lips? See how she bathes his forehead with some of the cooling water, and as she finds him revive, how gently she raises him in her arms and kisses him.

When they were revived, they again filled their bottle for their journey, and went on their way. From that time "God was with the lad; and he grew and dwelt in the wilderness, and became an archer."

There is no further account of the early days of Isaac and Ishmael in the Bible. We know that Isaac, under such pious parents as Abraham and Sarah, grew up in the love and fear of God; and we may hope that Ishmael did not forget the holy example and prayers which he had seen and heard when living in the tent of his father. There are two lessons to be learned from this account of the two brothers.

1. God can see us in every place. His eye is as much upon us in a desert, as when we are sitting by our own fireside. When we are brought into trouble by our own folly and sin, we may still pray unto God. Wherever we are, his ear will listen to our prayers, and his hand be ready to afford his gracious help.

2. God is displeased with those children who vex and mock their brothers and sisters. If there be an ill-behaved child in a family, he makes others unhappy besides himself. We should all try to live together in love and peace; and elder children should set a good example to the younger. The way for a family to be happy, is to love God and to be kind one to another.

The God of heaven is pleased to see
A little family agree:
And will not slight the praise they bring,
When loving children join to sing.

For love and kindness please him more
Than if we gave him all our store;
And children here who dwell in love,
Are like his happy ones above.

The gentle child who tries to please,
That hates to quarrel, fret, and tease,
And would not say an angry word,
That child is pleasing to the Lord.

O God, forgive whenever we Forget thy will and disagree;
And grant that each of us may find
The sweet delight of being kind.

Varieties.

NEW GENERAL OF THE JESUITS.—The Chief of the remarkable Society of Jesus is very appropriately denominated General, as the Association in its spirit and deeds may be justly regarded the spiritual militia of the Church of Rome. It is the Pope's standing army—as true to his orders, and truculent in his defence, as were ever the grenadiers of Frederick, or the Old Guard of Napoleon.

An election of a new General took place at Rome, on the 2d of last month, to succeed the celebrated Father Roothan, who had been the guiding spirit of the Society for nearly a quarter of a century. The choice fell, by large majority, upon Father Becks, who is an Italian, but has spent most of his ecclesiastical life in Germany. He was selected by Pius VII. to be the special confessor of a German Duke and Duchess, who were converted from Protestantism, and whose case was deemed of great importance at the time. Since that, Father Becks' services have been so signal, and the display of character so Jesuitical, that he was at once raised to the Generalship, and his accession is looked upon as a very auspicious event to the fortunes of Jesuitism and of Popery. It is a matter of far more consequence to the world who is General of the Jesuits than who is Pope of Rome. While the successor of St. Peter looks the head, wears the honours and makes the show, the successor of St. Ignatius is the real king of that vast reticulation of priestly intrigue, imposition, and daring, which makes up the actual being of the Church of Rome. It is the master-piece of Satanic cunning and policy, and, though Christianity will prove too much for it in the end, has been, and is the mightiest foe to truth, freedom, and God, on the footstool.

VENERABLE RELIC.—The process of widening Beekman street, New York, has rendered it necessary to remove the vaults in front of the venerable Brick church. Last week, among the bodies exhumed was that of the Rev. Dr. Rodgers, the founder and first pastor of the church, who died in 1809. The wig and silk gown—for he seems to have been interred in his full professional dress—were in a state of nearly perfect preservation, though the body of which they once were the mere adornments, frailer than they, had almost entirely disappeared. Dr. Rodgers was in a great measure the father of Presbyterianism in this country—the Moderator of the first General Assembly, in 1789, and pastor of one of the oldest churches of the denomination. He was a man of great excellence of character, and was converted while a youth, by a sermon delivered by Whitefield, while he held the candle for the preacher to read the Bible.

PROTESTANT MISSIONS IN SCOTLAND.—At the last meeting of the Irish General Assembly, a delegation, headed by Dr. Candlish, of Edinburgh, appeared with a request for the services of Dr. E. M. Dill, who, it will be remembered, visited this country in behalf of Protestant Missions in Ireland, as Secretary and Manager of the missions recently undertaken among the Catholics of Scotland. In order to prevent any prejudices, it was requested that Dr. Dill retain his connection with the Irish Church, so that none of the evangelical denominations of Scotland, which it is proposed to unite in this mission, will have motive or occasion to withhold its co-operation. The proposal was cordially received, and Dr. Dill appointed to the work. The enterprise is new, the Scottish Church never having systematically attempted missionary work among the Catholics.

DEPUTATION FROM THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.—The Venerable the Archdeacon of Middlesex, John Sinclair, has been appointed by the English Bishops to return the recent visit of the American Episcopalian clergymen to England. Archdeacon Sinclair is a son of the late Sir John Sinclair, the great Scottish agriculturist, with whom Washington corresponded on that subject, and brother of Miss Hannah Sinclair and Lady Colquhoun, whose writings and memoirs are familiar to the Christian community, of Miss Catharine Sinclair the authoress, the Dowager Countess of Glasgow, and Sir George Sinclair, of Ulbster, Scotland. The Archdeacon is an earnest rather than an eloquent preacher, and is the author of a Life of his father, and various useful works. He sailed for America on the 5th of August, and will soon be in the United States.

PRUSSIA.—The king has issued a proclamation that he will dismiss from his service any officer, who, marrying a Roman Catholic, shall promise to bring up his children in that faith. This is intended as a protest against recent encroachments.

CHINESE IN CALIFORNIA.—A Chinese church is to be built in San Francisco, forty-two by forty-five feet—three stories high. It will be devoted to moral and religious instruction, under the direction of Geo. Athei, of the See Yup Company.—The ninth section of an act passed by the California Legislature for the collection of the foreign miners' tax has been printed in the Chinese language, for the information of more than thirty thousand Chinese in the new State. Tong'k Achich, a Chinaman, certifies that the translation is "faithful and good." Who would have thought, six years ago, that the laws of one of the States of the Union would have to be published in English and Chinese for general circulation? Yet so it is.

NUNNERIES.—A correspondent of the London Christian Times says:—"Mr. Seymour has stated, on the authority of an official visitor of the Roman Convents, that one half of the nuns die raving mad before they reach the age of twenty-five. No wonder that secresy is a part of the whole policy of the Roman church. But the people are beginning to open their eyes, and to demand a supervision of this great interest. Nature cannot be forced out of its course in the delicate female frame without complaining. The free air and social relations suited to educate and develope and strengthen the physical economy, are essential to a sound mind in a sound body. The people of this country are beginning to take notice of these things, and it is not strange that they should be jealous of every attempt to allure young females to take the veil, or to wear it after they alter their minds.

LIBERIA.—Liberia has lost one of its most talented and useful citizens, Rev. Hilary Teage, of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was editor of the Liberian Herald, a Judge of the Court, and an eloquent preacher of the Gospel.

THE COLPORTEUR'S SONG.

TUNE—"What is life?" Sacred Songs, p. 314.

On through woodlands dark and dreary,
Though my lonely course I take—
Climbing now the mountains weary,
Threading now the dangerous brake—
Sweetening solitude with prayer,
Cheerily my books I bear.

Night to me can bring no terror;
Deserts lone no chilling fear,
Christ within, my shield from error,
Faith and hope my way-mates dear.
All around me angel throngs,
Holy thoughts and heavenly songs.

Oft I taste divinest pleasure
By the wayside as I read;
Opening here and there my treasure,
I upon its honey feed.
Every sentence there enrolled
Thrills like music—shines like gold.

O how sweet to dwellings lonely
Leaves of heavenly truth to bear,
Dropping print, where printing only,
Comes to bring salvation there:
Kindling in each house a flame
With my Saviour's glowing name.

Baxter's Heavenly Rest possessing,
What a glow it spreads around!
Vacant shelves receive the blessing,
Lonely hearts a friend have found.
He who brings the welcome guest—
He who takes it—both are blest.

Bunyan, O thy precious dreaming,
How it charms the listening ear,
Young and old, with faces beaming,
Group the Pilgrim's tale to hear;
Learning from the lessons given,
All the wondrous way to heaven.

Nor in vain to bosoms thirsting,
Flavel, does thy Fountain flow—
Stricken hearts, with anguish bursting,
Owen points you where to go.
Weary pilgrim, seeking rest,
Wear these jewels on your breast.

Thus with hymns and heavenly musing
Daily I my course pursue,
All my single talent using,
Loving well the work I do—
Trusting in my Saviour's care,
Cheerily my books I bear.

IMPORTANCE OF DOCTRINAL TRUTH.

We hear much said contemptuously of cold, dead formulas, and barren dogmas—thereby to disparage all attempts at the accurate and scientific statement of Christian truths. The life! the life! this is the watchword. Have the life of religion in the soul, and let it actualize itself in the conduct and sentiments, and it is of little moment what may be the form of doctrine with which each man chooses to satisfy his own understanding. But all we have to say is, the life which does not correspond to revealed truth, and take its law from it, is not Christian life. Truths there may be, so volatile and so Protean that you can bind them down to no one definite form of words; and such truths may be seen, or felt, or scented in the transcendental atmosphere of some ethereal dreamland; but none but "dreamland folk" will ever be satisfied to make these the basis of their faith. Men of intelligence desire to know what they believe, and "whereof they affirm," and to be able to give a reason, founded in some known fact or principle, for the faith and the hope, the feeling and the law of life that is in them. And such men never can be satisfied with a religion which has not truths capable of being stated in intelligible propositions, and as such considered and defended.

Hence, as a matter of history, we find some of the most vigorous periods of the Church's life to be those in which the most intense interest has been felt in the doctrines of our holy religion; and the grand safeguards which have operated to prevent the degenerating of Christian piety, and to restore it when degenerated, have been found in the accurate statement and defence of these same theological principles.—Stearnes' Sermon on Justification by Faith.

HOME AND FOREIGN RECORD.

The following communication is from the pen of a respected layman, who has long been a consistent and active friend of the Boards of our Church. We trust that his timely appeal in behalf of the Home and Foreign Record will be responded to by all our pastors and churches. With suitable effort, the circulation of the paper might be greatly increased; and its enlarged circulation would vastly increase the usefulness of all our ecclesiastical Boards.

For the Home and Foreign Record.

One can hardly help asking, Why do not all in connection with the Presbyterian Church have access to the Home and Foreign Record? It is worth many times its cost. Some, I know, decline taking it, on the alleged ground, that its contents reach them through other channels. But this is quite a mistake. It should be distinctly understood that the Record has no substitute. Its valuable and deeply interesting journals and letters of our noble band of missionaries, scattered over three quarters of the globe, are not reproduced in any other form, and the Church cannot afford to lose the details they furnish, if she wishes to understand what heathenism is, in its multiform phases, its revolting cruelties, and its loathsome abominations.

There are many good reasons why each member of our Church should be a reader of the Record. Its intrinsic interest to the mere lover of excitement; its amount of important information, otherwise inaccessible; the fact that it is the sole organ of the four Boards of the Church; that it contains a monthly exhibit of the receipts at the Church's treasury, and indicates the sources whence drawn; these should suffice. But the paramount reason, more than sufficient, in the absence of all others, is, its adaptedness to beget an intelligent appreciation of the Church's great mission, and to enkindle a holy zeal in the blessed work of helping forward her appropriate agencies. Now is no time to rest in lazy ignorance of what is going on in the world. No indeed. Each one should prepare to understand, in some measure, the wonderful evolutions of God's providence, in this most signal time of the world's history.

I doubt not, if the Record were taken as extensively as it should be, the Presbyterian Church would soon gird herself with new energy for her aggressive movements against the powers of darkness; and we should not hear it said any longer that one-half our churches contribute no aid to the cause of missions! THE LIVING FOUNTAIN.

Jer. ii. 13.—They have forsaken me, the fountain of living waters.

God is a fountain. A fountain is the source of streams. So God is the source of every comfort. Every stream which gladdens the world issues from this fountain.

God is a fountain of water. Such a fountain is refreshing; it imparts health, and comfort, and happiness. So God sheds blessings on all around, and is to those who trust in him like the shadow of a great rock in a weary land. Isa. xxxii. 2.

God is a fountain of living water. Such a fountain is unfailing; it is always full. So it is with God. He is an unfailing fountain, inexhaustible, full, ever-flowing, overflowing. Streams are ever issuing from this fountain, and none who come here to draw ever go empty away.

Yet Jehovah complains, "They have forsaken me!" We forsake him when we forsake his word, his worship, his ordinances, or his service. Nor is it enough to pay an external regard to religious rites—to come to the Lord's house, and the Lord's table. We may go through the form of every religious duty; be ever in our places in the sanctuary, be diligent in our attendance upon social meetings, and upon ordinances; read our Bibles, frequent our closets, and yet be backsliders in our hearts. Reader, is such the case with you? Have you forsaken the fountain of living waters? Have you the form of godliness, but not its spirit, and its power?

In forsaking God, we forsake our pleasures and our privileges. While the most happy life which man can live is a life of consistent and devoted piety, the most miserable life on earth is that of a backslidden, worldly-minded professor of religion. His broken cistern can hold no water! "I would thou wert cold or hot! So then, because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth!" Rev. iii. 15—18.—W. J. M.

DEATHS OF MISSIONARIES.

It is our painful duty to record the death of the Rev. John M. Becton of Larissa, Texas. He was taken sick on the 15th of June, and died on the 14th of July, after an illness of twenty-nine days. He died calmly, believingly, peacefully in the Lord. Shortly before he died he said to his physician, "Has the messenger come?" The physician replied, "I think so." He rejoined, "Thank God, he is welcome!"

He has been in connection with the Board since 1849. He organized in Eastern Texas seven churches, viz: Douglass, Palestine, Rusk, Mount Bethel, Larissa, Gum Spring, and Church Hill, all now in prosperous condition. His life was laborious and useful, and he has died sincerely beloved and lamented.

And still another—Mrs. Case, wife of Rev. Joel T. Case, of Victoria, Texas. She welcomed her husband home in health and spirits, on his return from the General Assembly, but on the sixth day after his arrival she was seized with a prevailing epidemic, whose ravages no human skill could arrest. Her heart was in the missionary work, and she cheerfully shared her husband's labours, privations, his joys and his sorrows. "She died a shining witness to the power of the Saviour's love to sustain his trusting followers in their most trying hour."

We sincerely sympathize with our afflicted friends. They well know that their consolation and support are divine, not human.

God, in his great mercy, make us faithful in life, and prepare us for that solemn event which is certainly approaching us all. And may He pour out his Spirit, and raise up and call into his ministry many able men to fill our present destitute churches and fields, and to supply the places of those whom he has removed from us by death.

CALL FROM LOUISIANA.—WHO WILL GO?

"Permit me to say a word on another subject. Can the Board of Missions not do something for this destitute region? I do not mean in the way of money, but of labours—devoted, hard-working labourers. I never have been in a region so perfectly ripe for harvest. All are anxious to have the means of the gospel. There are very few professors of religion. There is a great deal of wealth and intelligence. The country is yet rather thinly settled, and some of it always will be, because of its belonging to a few wealthy planters. There will always be a very dense negro population, however, which will afford an interesting field of labour.

"Two or three ministers might be pleasantly and usefully located around where I am. The people at Monroe, the parish seat of Washita, an interesting little town of about twelve or fifteen hundred inhabitants, have just built a pro bono publico house of worship, and want some one to preach for them. There is no Protestant minister there, and very few professors of religion, but nearly all Protestant-inclined. If the Board could send a man of the right sort there, and support him for a few months, I have not the slightest doubt but that the Presbyterians would soon have a flourishing congregation.

"My friend —— ——, Esq., is wanting a preacher for his negroes. He proposes to give $500 per annum, and furnish a horse for the use of the preacher, also. I mention this, that if you meet with any suitable man who would like to become a missionary to this needy class of people, you may send him on. R."

We shall be happy to hear from any brother in the ministry, who feels disposed and moved by convictions of duty to enter the field, here presented by our missionary brother, who is labouring faithfully and successfully among the people in the region from which he writes.

WHY IS THE WEST, AND THE MORE RECENTLY SETTLED PORTIONS OF OUR COUNTRY, SO FULL OF RELIGIOUS ERRORS?

Messrs. Editors—There are complaints made by Missionaries of our different Denominations, of various errors in doctrine and discipline, which meet them in their fields of labour in the West, and in the recently settled portions of our country. Assuming that there is foundation for these complaints, I have been led to search out some reasons for the existence of these errors; errors, indeed, which may be as rife in one part of our country as another, but which exhibit their strength, and come more into notice, in the regions referred to. Whether the reasons are all correct, I shall not undertake to decide, but will proceed to state them to you very briefly.

1. The neglect of rigid doctrinal and religious training of children in families in the New England and Middle States, from whence a vast number of people have moved into the Western States. The good old fashion of teaching the children the Westminster Catechism has been much laid aside. The doctrinal faith of the children has not been fixed in their youth, by their parents.

2. Large numbers now on the stage of action have grown up in the West, under many disadvantages in regard to religious education of every kind. Hence they are liable to be blown about by every wind of doctrine.

3. Fixing the faith of children and youth in the fundamental doctrines of the word of God, has not been sufficiently attended to in Sunday-Schools. It cannot be done ordinarily and successfully without a form of sound words; and the Catechism is too little used in our Sunday-Schools.

4. The constant and careful training of the lambs of the flock has been inefficiently attended to by pastors. The children have been given over to the Sunday-School, and the most that is done by the pastor, in many cases, is to examine the school at stated times, and make "an interesting season" of it.

5. The broaching and increase of heresy, for years past, has had a deleterious effect upon the people. Such heresies as Unitarianism, Universalism, Pelagianism, Deism, Mormonism, and Infidelity, in nameless shapes. Men have been seduced from the faith, and cast upon a sea of uncertainty. The enemies of the cause in this way have been greatly increased.

6. The corruption of some in the ministry by a study of German Neological and Rationalistic writers. Few have indulged in such German studies without serious injury. We have seen their baneful influences in high places. Doubts and difficulties touching faith and practice; indirect attacks upon the plenary inspiration of the Scriptures; loose rules of interpreting the Bible, have been set forth under colour of profound scholarship and learning, independence of mind, and a spirit of improvement suitable to the age.

7. The preaching of doctrines which establish "another Gospel," by those educated in places where orthodoxy has been in many important points crippled, if not denied. Unsound Theological Seminaries will prove a curse to any land!

8. The turning aside of the ministry, in some cases, from the preaching of the cross—the pure word of God, their appropriate work—to lecturing on uninspired books, on literary and scientific subjects, on travels, and sights, and scenes, in foreign lands; on political and moral questions of the day, and so on. Pulpits in rivalry one of another, originating "interesting courses of lectures," to attract the multitude; the house of God converted into a place of resort for an hour's entertainment, instead of a place for solemn appeal and impression for the conversion and salvation of perishing sinners.

9. The rivalry of different Denominations, in towns, villages, and country places; each doing all it can to secure the leading men and families, and to attain commanding influence. Hence an accommodation of doctrines to men's tastes; a lowering down of terms of admission into the Church; the getting up of religious excitements, hasty admissions, &c.

10. The influx of foreigners, of all creeds, and confessions, and professions.

But I forbear. These reasons are sufficient. Let me add, that revivals of religion have, of late years, been by no means prevalent, and a spirit of wordliness overflows society, and produces what some are pleased to call indifferentism in respect to the truth and salvation of God.

The ministry have much work to do in these times, and well should they do it, for the good of the Church, and the country. They are called of God to preach his word. His word is the fire and the hammer; let them believe in its power to subdue and to save, and rely upon the promise and Spirit of God, and not upon human wisdom and power. Progress may be slow, but it will be sure; opposition may be great, but if God be for us, who can be against us? It appears to me, our respected and beloved Missionaries have simply to go forward preaching the word, unmoved by the excitements and influences to the contrary around them. This requires faith and resolution. But God will give both, and bless his servants. The means put into our hands by God himself for building up his kingdom, are the only means to be used by us; the only sure, reliable, unfailing, and successful means. I am of opinion that in our Old-School pulpits, the voice of doctrinal preaching and instruction is not heard with the frequency and power which the necessities of our Church, and of our common Christianity require. Am I right? Ministers, who read this letter, what is the character of your preaching?

May every missionary sent out into our country, and in connection with our Board of Missions, go armed with the truth as it is in Jesus, and be filled with his Holy Spirit; and to whomsoever they preach, whether to Jew or Gentile, wise or foolish, rich or poor, bond or free, may God always cause them to triumph in Christ, and make manifest the savour of his knowledge by them in every place.

Very truly yours, A. L. N.

DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

The field of missions is the world. But our country is no inconsiderable part of that field, whether we regard its own extent, or the influence it is destined to exert upon the rest. It is probable that, through the concurrence of several causes, we do not duly appreciate the magnitude and importance of Domestic Missions. That it is a home enterprise, that the scene of operations is our own country, divests it of those sublime and somewhat romantic sentiments which we naturally associate with what is distant, foreign, and strange. Yet, when we actually survey our glorious land, its dimensions are so grand, and its population is increasing at so rapid a rate, and its influence on other nations of the earth is becoming so potent, that language fails to express the emotions that we feel, and our amazement may, perhaps, excuse the measure of national pride that the contemplation produces. Many persons of intelligence and information have acknowledged that they never had formed any adequate conception of the vastness of our country till they travelled into the Southern and Western States.

The natural increase of population is very rapid, owing to the freedom, plenty, and virtue that bless our country. Enterprise, much more than necessity, impels the young and vigorous to seek new homes in the Southern and Western States. An unexampled immigration pours the people of other lands upon our shores, like a flood-tide of the ocean. The transportation of human beings across the seas and over our hospitable and attractive domain, constitutes one of the largest departments of human industry. More foreign people arrive every year on our shores, than came for the whole period from 1790 to 1820—thirty years. Half a million a year is now the acknowledged number of immigrants into our country.

We have, then, in our home field, these thousands on thousands of our own people, and of our fellow men from other and less favoured lands, mingled and coalescing, with but very scanty supplies of the pure ordinances of the gospel among them. It is true, many congregations have been formed, and many faithful servants of Jesus Christ have been sent forth; but compared with the necessities, they are few. And well may we exclaim, What are they among so many people and in so wide a field! Patriotism and religion concur in demanding liberal and energetic measures in the department of Domestic Missions. Liberty, order, and peace, the attendants of the Protestant faith and of the Presbyterian polity, unite in honouring the efforts already made by our church, and in soliciting their continuance and enlargement. Shall any Christian be indifferent to these solicitations?

The work of Domestic Missions is intimately connected with the prospects of Foreign Missions. Internal emigration is constantly and largely drawing off numbers from the older congregations, who remove to the attractive regions of the South and West. It is the object of the Domestic missionary enterprise to send forth, and for a while sustain shepherds among these scattered sheep of the flock, to guard them, to guide them, to feed them. By this benignant and judicious care, they are saved to the flock, they are kept in sympathy with those who still frequent the old walks, and they are kept in grateful remembrance of the church, its doctrines, its ordinances and its order. But let its Domestic missionary efforts cease, and the church almost of necessity declines. Look at the Minutes of the General Assembly, or at the Reports of the Board of Missions, and the numerical force of the Church will be seen to consist very largely of congregations and people who are, or have been, within a quarter of a century, missionary churches. Look again at the Minutes or at the Reports of the Foreign Board, and it will be found that from the same source have come no small number of Foreign missionaries, and no small amount of contributions. The church, then, is a gainer by the emigration of her children, provided missions are sustained among them in their new Southern and Western homes. Otherwise, their removal is an irreparable loss to her. And if she declines in this land, what is the hope of the heathen world? If she will not let her own children have the crumbs from her ample board, what likelihood is there that she will feed strangers. J. F. M.

THE LAKE SUPERIOR COPPER REGION.

With much pleasure we lay before our readers Mr. Smith's interesting letter on this new mining country, which is soon to be occupied by a very large population, and a population which, for many years to come, at least, must depend for the means of grace upon our missionary Boards of the different denominations of orthodox Christians. The attention of the Board of Missions has been turned to this inviting and destitute field for above a year, and several unsuccessful attempts have been made to procure a missionary for it. We are happy to state that the writer himself of this letter, will ere long, as we confidently hope, enter this field, in which he feels so great an interest, and in which we believe he will be blessed.

Copper Falls, Lake Superior.

Rev. C. C. Jones:

Dear Sir—It has been my intention, during a year past that I have been in this region, to communicate to you, as Secretary of the Board of Missions, some facts in relation to the religious condition and prospects of this field. Still, I judged it wise, while I availed myself of every means to gather valuable information, to defer any report until my view could be as complete and reliable as possible, and any illusory impressions might be dispelled; or, what seemed more satisfactory, I might meet some member of our Board in a visit to Philadelphia. But, sir, reasons which seem to me important, induce me to lay some of these facts before the Board at this time.

My place was in the Western Theological Seminary, as candidate for the gospel ministry; but a year ago I was constrained, from declining health, to visit this region in hope of its restoration. God has blessed the means, and I am able here to pursue my studies. During my stay I have endeavoured to become fully acquainted with the country, its resources, its people, and their spirit. From inquiries directed to such ministers as I found here, I made up a brief statement, and addressed it, last September, to Rev. Dr. Elliott, our judicious and beloved Professor, to be disposed of to the Board, or otherwise, as he might esteem proper. There appeared, too, a call in the "Record," (current volume page 19,) from my pen, to which I would refer you. The only variations which I would be disposed to make from those, is the sad comment that they did not present the picture so dark as truth demanded. I have since travelled over the whole of the Copper District, purposely to gain the facts, and I communicated the results to the brethren at the Seminary, in hope that some one might be disposed to labour here for Christ—but none can come.

It may not be important that I give you in detail the results of my tour, and I shall state them as summarily as consistent, to be explicit. In the entire copper region there is only one ordained acting minister; and this for a population of six to seven thousand, scattered over an area a hundred miles long, and twenty-five in breadth. There are, besides, one disabled minister, and one licensed probationer, who preaches regularly; there are four or five licensed exhorters among labourers, who occasionally exercise their gift, with an influence which you will apprehend, in the fact that these are all (every one to whom I have alluded) in the Methodist Episcopal connection. Here I might leave off. But to give you a complete view of the entire Lake Superior country, I will state, that at Sault Ste. Maria, fifty miles below the mouth of the lake, are stationed, at present, among a population of three to four hundred, Rev. Father Bingham, an aged Baptist missionary to the Chippeways; also the Presiding Elder in the upper peninsula, who (a Methodist) preaches to a congregation which would far prefer a Presbyterian, if he could be obtained. At White Fish Point, twelve miles above, is a Methodist mission, with Rev. E. Steele, principal, and Rev. Mr. Marksman, native convert, assistant. In the Carp River iron district, Rev. Mr. Benson is labouring for the workmen in the different stations there. Nearly one hundred miles above this, or near two hundred above Sault Ste. Maria, and at the head of L. Anse Bay, are two missions, one Methodist, under the present charge of Rev. R. Dubois; the other Jesuit, established by Rev. F. Baraga. Again, at La Pointe, near one hundred miles from Fond du Lac, or the head of the lake, are Rev. Mr. Hall, the excellent missionary of the American Board, who has done so much for translations, and, at a station fifteen miles from him, Rev. Mr. Wheeler, his adjutant. Formerly the Methodists had, too, a station among the Fond du Lac bands; but these became so furious the missionary abandoned it last year, and it is since vacant. There is a Catholic priest at Macinac, and I believe also a Methodist clergyman. And now I have enumerated every labourer in every capacity above Detroit, in this direction.

Let us glance at the field as to its limits. Macinac will gain perhaps some importance for shipping and fishing, but not likely to be populous at an early date. The copper region opens fifty miles below the Sault, on the Canada shore; and though it has been explored only at occasional points, it is believed to cover the whole extent of the north shore. Already it is worked in several places, and extensive preparations are in progress for the opening of others. The metalliferous districts on the south shore, as already ascertained, extend from the head waters of the Esconaba, run through the Iron and Huron Mountains, and valley of Carp River, where this field of iron of incomparable richness gives way to native copper. This appearing on Point Keweenaw, covers the coast for the extent I have already mentioned, and beyond it westward into Wisconsin, one hundred and fifty to two hundred miles from point Keweenaw. Isle Royal is also metalliferous, and several mines are already worked there.

Now, comprised within this territory are supposed to be contained ten thousand whites and fifteen thousand Indians; and I have indicated to you every agency and agent provided for them, present and prospective.

To speak farther of the mining region especially, which seems to demand first attention, I should premise that its prospective importance must not be decided from its past history as a basis. The present may be counted as the fifth year of the settled influx of population here, and already a population of near ten thousand is no contemptible growth. But we must not compare this with the placers of California, where individual labour is immediately remunerated, nor even like the lead deposits of Wisconsin and Illinois, where single capital incurs almost no risk. But no enterprise of our country is conducted under so many repressing circumstances as copper mining on Lake Superior. In a region cut off half the year from the world, and accessible only under great sacrifice during the other half, itself dreary and inhospitable, and in which half the investments are likely to prove failures; and, if successful, it can be only through the outlay of tens of thousands repeated annually, and through the suspense of tedious years, and fluctuations of trade and stocks, capital expended in time past could not have been regarded otherwise than half thrown away. A single instance may make my meaning more distinct. Those two mines which have been working longest, the "Cliff" and "Minnesota," are only now just opened, at the end of seven years, so as to be in proper working condition. But now everything is changing. Public attention of capitalists and labourers is fixed here. Mining prospects and mining operations are now better understood, and far more secure. English capital is coming in; transportation by the Sault Canal will be far more easy; intercourse with home more free. Many are making settlements, and the blessings of society begin to be enjoyed. Very many mines now opening are thought certain to prove richly productive. Shows were never before so promising as they are everywhere at present. Stocks are high, and the present is a season of intense activity, and every condition indicates that such will continue. How fallacious, then, to compute the future here by the past. Judge for yourself—but my fixed conviction is, that this lake district is ere long to bear a numerous people.

Of the settlements now here, you would probably form a good impression without any statements. It is fixed at the ports and at the mines. Of the ports, one has three hundred citizens, a second perhaps two hundred, and a third and fourth one hundred each. The Cliff and Minnesota mines may have each five hundred; and from this number, that of each "location" descends gradually to a single family. These locations are situated at present mainly in three clusters along the mineral ranges; the first, on the Point, in which the mines, to the number perhaps of thirty, are found from one half to three miles apart; the second is in the Portage Lake region, where several important workings are within the reach of an hour's travel; the third is the Ontonágon district, in which they are more diffuse than in either of the others, and are some twelve to thirty miles in the interior.

Your own reflections in your acquaintance with such fields, sir, will furnish you with many characteristics of this as a hopeful missionary field, which it would be tedious for you to read, if I could point them out. I may advert, perhaps, to a few prominent ones.

The mass of the population here are transient; the operatives here to-day, gone to-morrow; the agents only sojourners in a land in which few reconcile themselves to the thought of a home. Business and tradesmen at the harbours will be most permanent.

The people are scattered; they must be reached by going to them and bringing them out.

This will never be a farming region, only as subsidiary to the mines. Hence it must be expected to want the advantages which that class of society furnish everywhere, in steady habits, education, maintenance of churches, Christian example, &c.

It is a mixed community, as was stated in the article of the "Record." You have everything to encounter.

I mention last what probably occurs to you first, the worldly, and, I fear, mercenary spirit which pervades everything.

On the other hand, there are very many here from Christian parents and prayers, whose good sentiments, if educed, stimulated, guided by a skilful hand, would be of incalculable good; but without some religious friend, lie buried for a while in the general dissipation, and insensibly are lost. While, too, my impression has been that many who had little reverence for religion at home, horrified at the prevalence of every vice here, cry out for some power to rescue. Many worldly men will support the gospel for the same reasons as the infidel does. Many are anxious for it from early habits of church going; while a very considerable number really desire the ordinances of grace for themselves; their common expression is, that they will leave the country if it cannot be furnished. They long for a place where holy affections that are here can cluster and unite; a centre around which they can gather their influence, and thence radiate their co-operative, inspirited benefactions; a holy spot, towards which they may invite the wayward and those "ready to perish." Sir, I dare not indulge my feelings in a communication of simple statements. If you have ever spent years of silent Sabbaths, you have only to read again your own experience. Cannot our Board do something for us? Most sincerely yours in Christ,

J. Irwin Smith.

OREGON.

Recent letters from the brethren state that they are all in good health, and making some progress in their labours, although, from the new state of the country, and the many engagements of the settlers, it will be some time before society becomes well organized in the various localities selected for occupation.

We subjoin a letter from Rev. G. F. Whitworth, on his way out to Oregon, with his congregation:

Fort Laramie, July 1st, 1853.

Rev. C. C. Jones, D. D.

Dear Sir—I intended writing to you before leaving the States, but having been delayed beyond the time I had designated for starting, and my coming being rendered somewhat uncertain, I delayed writing until I had made my requisite arrangements, and then being pressed for time, I found it impossible. A part of my company started ahead, failing to receive letters which I wrote to the place of rendezvous, and are some two or three weeks ahead of us. Our present number is limited, having but five families altogether, numbering thirty-five souls. We are progressing rapidly and pleasantly, and find the keeping of the Sabbath (though not able to keep it just as we could wish) is profitable both to us and our teams. We have preaching in the morning, and Bible class and Sabbath-school in the afternoon.

One-third of our distance is now accomplished, our teams in good order, rather better than when we started, grass is abundant, and we therefore hope to be able to make our trip with safety. I should be glad to write you more fully, but it is exceedingly difficult, almost impossible, to get time to write. A few lines is all that can be accomplished. May we not ask an interest in your prayers, for our prosperity and safety? No danger from Indians or others has threatened us. Our health has been generally quite good, and the weather very favourable. Ere this reaches you, if we be prospered, we shall be beyond the mountains. Yours, respectfully,

G. F. Whitworth.

CALIFORNIA.

Our readers are aware that the Board of Missions has been desirous of re-enforcing our missions in California, but have had serious difficulty in obtaining suitable men. That they may know the feelings of many in that far off State towards our Church, and their great anxiety to be supplied with a suitable ministry, we give an extract from a correspondent of the Journal of Commerce, New York, dated

San Francisco, August 1st, 1853.

The Rev. Dr. Scott, of New Orleans, has had a call sent him by a number of our first citizens—prominent members of the Old-school Presbyterian Church—with an urgent request for him to come to this city, and labour among this people. A wide field, and one full of promise, is here open to a man of his talent and ability in the Church, and it is to be hoped that he will at once signify his acceptance. These gentlemen guarantee Dr. Scott a salary of eight thousand dollars per annum.

Our city has become a city of churches, and the Sabbath day regarded almost universally as a day of rest. Society is blessed with the presence of women, who are now flocking to our shores in vast numbers, bringing the children of the East to bless and cheer the sterner sex.

Gambling is fast dying out. Houses that one year ago would have rented from three to five thousand dollars per month, for gambling purposes, are now offered for business marts at one thousand to fifteen hundred dollars per month.

On Long Wharf, where one year ago there was over a dozen gambling houses, there is now but one in operation. The same may be said of other prominent localities. It seems now to be the grand aim and strife of this people to do good—to contribute largely and freely of their wealth for the upbuilding of the Redeemer's kingdom in the land. May God hasten it in his own good time and way.

HONORARY MEMBERS.

The sum of Fifty Dollars constitutes a person an Honorary Member of the Board of Missions.

Honorary Members have a right to sit in the meetings of the Board, and engage in their deliberations, but have no right to vote. A copy of the Annual Report is sent to them every year.

Letters and Communications for the BOARD OF EDUCATION on the subject of Ministerial Education, or of Schools, Academies and Colleges, may be addressed to the Rev. C. VAN RENSSELAER, D. D., Corresponding Secretary, No. 265 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

Remittances of money may be made to WILLIAM MAIN, Esq., Treasurer, 265 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

JOSEPH B. MITCHELL, ESQ.

LATE TREASURER.

Joseph B. Mitchell, Esq., having sent in his resignation of the office of Treasurer of the Board of Education, the Board appointed a committee to confer with him, in the hope that he might consent to prolong his term of service. Mr. Mitchell, however, stated that the business was becoming more and more extensive and burdensome; that he had held the office of Treasurer and performed its duties cheerfully for upwards of twenty years, and that, as President of a Bank, he felt it desirable to give up some of the extra demands upon his time. The Committee, feeling that Mr. Mitchell's claims for release were reasonable and honourable, were compelled to acquiesce in his decision, and reported the fact of his final resignation to the Board.

The Board adopted the following minute:

In accepting the resignation of Joseph B. Mitchell, Esq., as Treasurer, the Board express their unfeigned regret at parting from their fellow-labourer in the official capacity in which he has so long served the Church and this Board.

Mr. Mitchell has held the office of Treasurer for the long period of twenty years. His services, which have been many and important, have been rendered gratuitously, and all the duties of the office have been faithfully and efficiently discharged. The Board authorize the Committee, appointed to wait upon him last week, to procure a handsome edition of the Bible, and to present it to him as a token of their sense of his valuable and gratuitous services.

Mr. Mitchell continues to act as a member of the Executive Committee of the Board, and will also serve as Auditor.

TREASURER OF THE BOARD.

As we informed our readers last month, the Board of Education have elected WILLIAM MAIN, Esq., Treasurer, to supply the vacancy occasioned by Mr. Mitchell's resignation. Mr. Main has had experience in keeping accounts, and is well qualified to discharge all the duties of his office.

The bonds required of the Treasurer are in the amount of ten thousand dollars.

All letters relating to the Treasury should be addressed to WM. MAIN, Esq., Board of Education, 265 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

FUTURE RESULTS OF A DIMINISHED SUPPLY.

The dearth of candidates is a fact ENTAILING DISADVANTAGES ON THE NEXT AND SUCCEEDING GENERATIONS. Evil is usually insidious in its approaches. Its consequences upon ourselves, if unwelcome and comparatively light, are apt to be overlooked, and the remoter consequences to others are still more often disregarded. In the present case, however, we cannot wisely lose sight of the direct consequences to ourselves of a ministry weakened in numbers, and incompetent to meet the wants of our own generation; and least of all, ought we to fail to consider that the results of a stationary rate of increase in our candidates must be most disastrous in the future. If the number of theological students is no greater in 1853 than in 1843, it is obvious that our Church commenced the decade under far more promising aspects than were presented by its close. In other words, the new actors in the conflict of the world, are obliged to commence their work with disadvantages entailed upon them by our criminal neglect; and these disadvantages will be felt still more severely by their successors at the end of another decade, even if transmitted on a no more degenerate scale of statistics. The prospect of an accumulating inheritance of evil may well summon the Church to avert its woes, whilst the opportunity yet remains. The Scriptures present, as a holy motive for praise and zeal, the privilege of rehearsing the deeds of the Lord to children's children, that each may tell it "to the generation following." Alas! that our Church, instead of transmitting the records of spiritual prosperity, should leave behind memorials of reproach and disadvantage!

OUTWARD AGENCIES NOT AT FAULT.

The small number of candidates is somewhat remarkable, when viewed in relation to the OUTWARD AGENCIES OF THE CHURCH, AND HER LIBERAL OFFERS OF ASSISTANCE TO THE DESERVING. The expenses of obtaining an education suitable for the ministry are so considerable as almost necessarily to exclude many competent young men, if left to their own resources, and deprived of Christian sympathy and aid. But the Church has commended her affection to her pious youth, by offering parental assistance to all possessing the requisite ecclesiastical recommendations. The permanent scholarships in our Theological Seminaries, and the annual scholarships provided through the Board of Education, take away all excuse arising from the plea of poverty. So intent is the Church upon cultivating the qualifications of her meritorious sons, that the Board of Education for the last twenty years have acted upon the publicly avowed principle of assisting, in reliance upon Providence, all candidates recommended by their Presbyteries, however numerous they may be.* And yet, in the face of these ample provisions of aid, the number of theological students in the Presbyterian Church is not increasing. Whatever may be our neglect of the use of other means, the fault is not here. It lies deeper than the surface. It is concealed in depths beyond the reach of ordinary ecclesiastical action.

WANT OF MINISTERS.

The Board of Education have endeavoured to keep the want of candidates before the Church, and to awaken attention to the causes and remedies of the present destitution. Thus far in the year, there is no perceptible increase in the Presbyterian Church.

Other churches appear to be in the same sad condition.

METHODIST CHURCH SOUTH.—Bishop Andrew, in a recent letter, addressed to the Southern Church papers, laments the want of preachers in the south, and calls loudly for additional supplies. He says there is great call for a large increase of labourers in most of the southern conferences, and that this is more especially true of the weaker conferences. He says a dozen preachers are needed for the Western Virginia conference alone. In Kentucky there is a great lack of men. Missouri wants many more preachers. Arkansas needs more preachers. Louisiana calls aloud for additional preachers. Texas is represented as suffering for want of more labourers. For several years the proportion of preachers to the wants of the people seems to be diminishing in the South; and unless a change takes place, there must be many fields in the south that will be destitute of labourers to cultivate them. We deplore this in any of the churches in the south or in the north. Our homily on the subject is, that the churches should pray the Lord of the harvest to send labourers into the field; and in connection with this prayer, it would be well to inquire how far the course of the churches, in their arrangements, is calculated to diminish the labourers, or to divert them from their proper fields.—N. Y. Observer.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—Bishop Meade laments the paucity of clergy in Virginia. He has admitted twelve candidates for holy orders during the past year. He has dismissed eight clergy to other dioceses, and received only two.

Bishop Delancey, of the diocese of New York, like many other of his brethren in the episcopate, lamented the fewness of candidates for holy orders, and urged the clergy to call the attention of their people to the matter.—Register.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCHES.—At the annual meeting of the New Hampshire Branch of the American Education Society, Mr. Tarbox, Secretary of the Parent Society, made a very practical address, touching upon the increasing want of ministers of the gospel, the decrease in the number of candidates, the efficiency and prospects of the Society, and some of the objections that have been made to it. He remarked that while the number of students in our colleges is rapidly increasing, that in the Theological Seminaries has greatly diminished, there not being connected with them more than four-fifths as many as there were ten years ago. We are not educating ministers enough to keep up the supply of our own New England churches, to say nothing of the wide world to which we are debtors. Similar considerations were earnestly urged by others.—N. Y. Observer.

The Board will continue to press this subject upon the churches in our connection, in every way that may seem scriptural and proper. The LORD OF THE HARVEST can alone send supplies for the ministry; but he has enjoined, as chief in order and importance, the duty of PRAYER.

THE WANT OF THE DAY.

In almost all sections of our country there are a vast many vacant churches—vast fields also in which there is not only room for the formation of many other churches, but there are multitudes wholly destitute of the gospel. Our population also is flowing off continually into the forests of the "far West," and the "far South"—thus increasing the necessity for more ministerial labour, and rendering more difficult the means of supply. In view of this state of things, a question of the gravest import is, "Whence can all those needy and waste places be supplied?" The answer comes back from all directions, "Ministers are not to be had!" And what renders this state of things more appalling is, that comparatively few of the youth of our country are found devoting themselves to the sacred office. How is this, and what does it become the Church in such state of things to do? While we would leave it to all—whether ministers, elders, or private members, for themselves to consider what is duty, we cannot forbear throwing out the following reflections—and we would do it in anticipation of the day of prayer which is near at hand, appointed expressly for this end. May not blame be attached to the Church in three respects:

1st. The want of a sufficiently deep sense on the part of Christian parents of the importance of specially consecrating, as did Hannah of old, their sons to the service of God in the gospel of his Son, and training them up for this service. There is in the members of the Church too much pride, too much worldly mindedness, too much ambition to have their sons occupy stations of worldly affluence and prominence.

* The Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church have, by the blessing of God, never yet failed in a single instance to redeem their pledge. It is believed that this cannot be said of all Education Societies.

2d. Have not Christians been greatly at fault as it regards obedience to the solemn injunction of our Lord, "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth labourers into his harvest."

3d. May not the criminal neglect of the Church to afford an adequate support to the ministry in days past, have provoked the Lord of hosts to withhold his Spirit, and suffer this "famine of the bread of life," as a just judgment to come upon the land? God himself ordained, that those who preach the gospel should live by the gospel. Man, in many instances, has said, "No, they shall live by other means, or starve." What, in such case, could be more reasonable, than the Lord should say, "This being your manner of treating my servants, I will cease to send!"

Surely there is neglect of duty, there is criminality somewhere. Let each for himself consider wherein he is in fault, turn and do his "first works," that the Lord may again visit his heritage, coming into the midst of his people with abundant refreshings from his holy presence.—Southern Presbyterian.

HINTS TO CANDIDATES.

LET NO MAN DESPISE YOU.

Paul, in his letter of instructions to Titus, says: "Let no man despise thee." He does not say, Let no man hate thee, or persecute thee, for it was to be presumed that the more bold and faithful his ministry, the more likely he would be to exasperate sinners, and stir up the spirit of persecution. To be despised is quite another thing. It implies some defect or wrong-doing on the part of him who becomes the object of the feeling; and hence the language of Paul is a caution to Titus to do nothing which would justly expose him to the contempt of men. Every minister, and indeed every Christian, may apply the caution to himself. However the world may hate, and revile, and oppress them, let them never become the objects of its deserved contempt, by any occasional or habitual inconsistency. They profess to aim at a high standard of character; and if, in any conspicuous degree, they fail to reach it, their crafty and vigilant enemies will not fail to detect it, and contemn them accordingly.

Paul was a model for ministers. He was habitually circumspect, under a deep conviction that the gospel which he preached might be misrepresented and injured by its friends, if they failed to illustrate it in their lives as a system of practical godliness. He even denied himself in things lawful, lest an occasion might be given to enemies to reproach the cause which was dear to his heart. No one, observant of his strict consistency, could despise him, however they might hate him; neither could they, by occasion of his short-comings, revile the gospel which he proclaimed. The world actually pays a reluctant compliment to the religion of Jesus, when they pry into the inconsistencies of its professors, and triumphantly charge them to their account. Ah, if Christians were always what they should be, how resplendently would the truth shine! Each believer would be a light in the world, not only glorifying Christ, but vindicating the honesty and sincerity of his own professions.—Presbyterian.

THE PREACHER.

"Keep, then, this issue, this judgment, this eternity, continually in view. Oh, with what amazing perceptions do dying men apprehend these things! Speak not one cold or careless word."

The herald of the King of kings,
They that proclaim immortal things
To those who soon must die;
Let them with due solemnity
Speak of that theme—eternity—
To us—to all—how nigh!

Stupendous issue; who may tell
The bliss or woe of heaven and hell?
Their dread reality
Who may impressively declare,
Who may our sluggish minds prepare
The last great day to see?

Let not one cold or careless word
Proceed from lips which should be heard
Proclaiming Jesus' name;
Telling to all the wondrous love
Which drew him from the realms above
To bear our sin and shame.

Let all their message heed in time,
Hear and embrace those truths sublime—
Sinner, be wise to-day!
Oh, listen to the Saviour's voice,
Believe, and pray; be it your choice
His precepts to obey.—Puritan Recorder.

THREE GOOD SAYINGS.

Mr. Shepherd, on his death-bed, addressing himself to some young ministers, observes:

Their work was great, and called for great seriousness. Three things he told them—

1. The studying of every sermon cost tears.
2. Before he preached any sermon he got good by it himself.
3. He went to the pulpit as if he were to give up his account to his Master.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

THE GREAT VALUE OF AN ACADEMY.

The agency of institutions of learning in training the mind and heart, and in supplying the means of carrying forward evangelical operations, is, as yet, but feebly realized. A community, within whose bounds a Christian institution is located, ought to esteem it a privilege to labour for its prosperity.

The attention of the reader is directed to the following account of an academy in Massachusetts, as worthy of perusal and meditation. The results it discloses are sufficient to stimulate all who are engaged in founding and conducting such institutions.

BRADFORD ACADEMY.

Fifty years ago, last March, there was a social gathering in the outskirts of the village of Bradford. Ideas more practical than gossip, neighbourhood scandal, and fashions, honoured the hour. While some spoke of sons, and others of daughters, as about to leave home for a High School, the question was raised, Why not have an Academy in Bradford? When they parted, the Academy was founded in resolution. But in olden time they had a way of working, as well as resolving, in that goodly town. And so, within a week, "At a meeting of a number of the inhabitants of the First Parish in Bradford, March 7th, 1803, it was mutually agreed upon that a building should be erected for an Academy." So runs the old record. Then followed, as a practical sequence, the subscription of $1218.80 by about thirty individuals. And in less than three months, that is, June 6, 1803, this so bright a sun in our literary firmament cut short its sudden dawn, and stood at once above the horizon, with fifty-one satellites catching its virgin rays. A noble enterprise in its first thought, and nobly, promptly executed! All honour to its unselfish, large-hearted founders. The child of the town, it has been their pet and their pride, as it is their glory.

Fifty years have gone by. On the foundation thus laid, $25,000 have been invested, not for a three per cent. return, and the enhanced value of property adjoining, but in full donation and without reversion. Through the action of able trustees and teachers, uncontrolled by any private or narrow policy, the Institution has been ever in the ascendant. To those fifty-one pupils of the first term a host have been successors, and now, at the close of its fiftieth year, the children of that Alma Mater number 4820. Of these, 1315 were in the male, and 3510 in the female department. In 1836 the school became solely a female institution, and, as before, so from that day onward, Bradford Academy has been a pioneer to a higher, better, and more comprehensive system of female education for our country. As such it has educated teachers and principals for other schools in almost every State in the Union.

Its pupils, in the male department, are found in all the professions and honourable callings in the land; more than three hundred of its daughters have become the wives of the ministers of Christ. About forty of them have followed in the footsteps of its two earlier pupils, those leaders and heroines in the missionary cause, Mrs. Judson and Mrs. Newell.—Puritan Recorder.

From the Presbyterian of the West.

THE MILLER ACADEMY AT WASHINGTON, OHIO.

Messrs. Editors:—I beg leave to present the claims of the above-named institution to the churches of the Presbytery of Zanesville, and to other patrons of Christian education who read your excellent paper.

In accordance with the plan recommended by the General Assembly, the Presbytery of Zanesville has located a Presbyterial Academy at Washington, Guernsey county, O., and upwards of $2,500 have been expended in erecting a large and tasteful edifice. The plans of the building may be seen in the Presbyterian Education Repository for 1853. It is a brick building two stories high, having a large school room and two recitation rooms on the lower floor, and on the upper floor a library room and a large hall for public exercises.

The location is in a village of about 1,000 inhabitants, on the National Road, about half way between Zanesville and Wheeling, and near the Ohio Central Railroad. It is a place peculiarly favourable to health and good morals, and of easy access at all seasons. Boarding can be had in private families for $1,50 per week.

The institution is entirely under the control of the Presbytery, and is intended to be decidedly Presbyterian—a fountain of sound learning and of pure morals. The course of studies is sufficiently extensive to prepare young men for the junior class in the best Colleges. Though intended to afford scientific instruction to all, the institution is especially designed to exert a healthful moral and religious influence over the forming minds of the young, that it may, with the blessing of God, aid in supplying the present great lack of Gospel ministers. This design of the Miller Academy recommends it to the favourable regard of the friends of Christian education in our Church.

Our building is yet in an unfinished condition, and we earnestly desire to finish it in time to get the school into successful operation next Fall. To do this we must raise an additional sum of $600 or $800 within a few months. Will not those churches of the Presbytery which have not yet contributed their due amount take subscriptions immediately, and help us to complete this important purpose? We hope they will do so without delay.

But this undertaking bears heavily on the churches of a single Presbytery, some of which are small; we therefore earnestly appeal to other liberal readers of your paper for aid.

Such institutions are greatly needed. We have established our Theological Seminaries in the East, South and West, and have supplied them with eminent professors; but what can they do to supply the Church with ministers, unless we also establish classical schools and academies to prepare pious young men to enter those Seminaries?

That donors may have some definite objects before them, we solicit donations for the following items of work necessary to complete our building, viz:

For plastering our recitation room	$20.00
For furnishing the same with stove and benches	20.00
For plastering the large hall up stairs	75.00
For furnishing it with seats	80.00
For do. do. two stoves	36.00
For plastering the lower hall and lobby	50.00
For painting the inside of the building	30.00
For do. outside do.	45.00
For furnishing the library room	25.00
For fencing the grounds about the building	100.00
For a bell	50.00

A benevolent individual, a sewing society, or a church, may find it convenient to furnish the means for accomplishing one or more of these items of the work. Any such favours will be thankfully received and faithfully applied.

On behalf of the Board of Trustees,

J. E. Alexander, President.

ARANAMA COLLEGE.

Fort Lavaca.

We were highly interested and instructed, on the 1st and 2d days of this month, in attendance upon the first examination of the students in the "Aranama College," located at Goliad, in Goliad county, on the San Antonio river. This Institution has been in operation only one year, and its future prospects for usefulness, under its most accomplished and efficient head, Professor Shive, are most flattering and promising of success. It has been established and is under the care of the Presbytery of the O. S. Presbyterian Church of Western Texas; but, as an Institution of learning, it is open and free to all denominations of Christians who choose to avail themselves of its advantages and benefits. No sectarian creeds or tenets are taught there—no efforts made to bias the mind in favour of any sect or religious creed—the mind of the student is left free to embrace any religious doctrine.* But a moral and religious influence is thrown around the students, guarding and protecting them from those excesses and demoralizing practices which not unfrequently are found to prevail with students in their youthful days, when away from home, from under the influence and control of religious parents and guardians. Professor Shive has a most happy faculty of governing his school. Adopting the law of kindness, he is thus enabled, by a most devoted Christian walk, and pleasant, familiar, and entertaining conversation, to obtain complete control of all who attend his school.

The Trustees and patrons of the Institution were most agreeably entertained with the late examination, and highly encouraged at the progress and proficiency of the scholars, in their various branches of study. Every student acquitted himself with honour. A number, in fact, gave evidence of originality and genius, surpassing the most sanguine expectations of their friends, and even their preceptor could not but express his agreeable disappointment in their progress and advancement, as evidenced by the ready manner they answered the various questions propounded in the different branches of science and learning. Original compositions were read by each student, displaying talents and originality of thought highly creditable. Our space will not permit us to give a detailed statement of the order of exercises as followed on the days of examination. Suffice it to say, that the classes, in all the branches and departments of instruction, acquitted themselves honourably and with much credit.

After the close of the exercises, on Wednesday evening, the Rev. Mr. Cocke, of Green Lake, delivered an address upon the subject of education, which, for elegance of style and diction, force of language and logical reasoning, surpassed any effort of the kind we have ever had the good fortune to hear. We learn that application was made to the author by a committee of gentlemen of Goliad, for a copy of the Address for publication. We hope to see it in print, as such sentiments as it embodies should be read and entertained by every Texan and patriot throughout the Union.—Watchman and Observer.

AUGUSTA FEMALE SEMINARY, STAUNTON, VIRGINIA.

UNDER THE SUPERVISION OF THE PRESBYTERY OF LEXINGTON.

This Seminary is managed by a Board of Trustees. The Rev. William B. Browne, A. M., is Principal, and competent female assistants are associated with him.

The aim of this Institution is to secure to the pupil the safest and most effective training in the various branches of useful knowledge by female teachers of cultivated minds and undoubted piety. The higher branches and the general control are under the care of the Principal, whose time and attention are wholly devoted to the school. The pupils board either in the family of the Principal, or under his direction and control, in other Christian and refined families.

The town of Staunton is well known for the salubrity of its climate and the beauty of its surrounding scenery, and is perhaps the most easily accessible town in the State. The situation of the Seminary is one of remarkable beauty; sufficiently central and yet retired.

The Academic year is divided into two sessions of twenty weeks each, beginning on the first Wednesdays of August and January.

EXPENSES FOR THE SESSION OF FIVE MONTHS.

Board, including washing and every necessary accommodation	$55 00
Tuition in the higher classes	15 00
" " Preparatory class	12 00
" " Primary Department	8 00
Music, including use of instrument	20 00
Drawing and Painting, each	8 00
Modern Languages	10 00
Embroidery $5 00, Hair Braiding and Wax Flowers each	10 00
Charge for repair fund per session	50

☞ No other charge whatever, unless by special agreement.

* We should be very sorry to know that this statement is literally true. The mind of the student should indeed be "left free to embrace any religious doctrine;" but not because it has not the true doctrine before it. Unless the doctrines of the Presbyterian Church are taught there, the Presbytery hardly honours the standards by which it tests the purity and value of the truth.—Cor. Secy. Bd. of Ed.

NON-RESIDENT PUPILS.

1. The Principal is to decide where each pupil may board, and is to have as full control of her time and direction of her conduct as if she was in his own family. No pupil will be received except on these conditions.

2. All may at any time, not improper for such purposes, take recreation freely in the Seminary grounds; but except in going to and from the Seminary no one will be permitted to walk the streets, unless in company of a teacher or judicious friend.

3. Three times a week the pupils will walk out together for exercise, accompanied by a teacher. All shopping, &c., must be attended to on Saturday, in company of some adult member of the family in which they board, or by one of the teachers, who will take this duty in turn.

4. No pupil will be permitted to receive the visits or public attentions of young gentlemen—this of course not applying to proper visits of relatives. This rule will be enforced in all cases, and its infraction considered one of the gravest offences.

5. No pupil, unless for a special reason, can be permitted to go home, or visit friends out of town, oftener than once a month, and that must be on the last Saturday.

GENERAL.

All the pupils, unless specially excused, must attend Bible class Sabbath morning, and public worship morning and evening.

A rigid system of marking all faults in deportment, neatness, and diligence, will be adopted, and a definite point fixed, beyond which a pupil cannot go and remain a member of the Institution. Monthly reports will be sent to parents or guardians by mail.

No deduction will be made for absence, except in case of the protracted sickness of the pupil. The Principal will be accountable for time lost by teachers, but, unless better paid, cannot be for that lost by scholars.

The course of study contemplates four years after the preparatory class. Each pupil will be examined on entering, and assigned to a class, and required to pursue a regular course. A certificate of having passed a satisfactory examination on the studies of a class, will be necessary in order to enter a higher class. A certificate of proficiency will be given to each pupil that creditably completes a course of three years, and to each one that fulfils the whole course, a neatly engraved Diploma, conveying indeed no empty, unmeaning title, but intended to be really serviceable as an honest guarantee that the bearer has truly mastered a liberal course of study.

There is a regular weekly recitation from the Bible, and the school is opened daily with reading Scripture and prayer. During last year, there was a season of religious interest, beginning in immediate connexion with the services of the last Thursday of February, and mostly confined to the school, in which about ten or twelve of the pupils were hopefully converted and added to the Church. Two subjects of that awakening have already passed to another world, and we trust to a reward of grace.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST.

All that the Board deem it important to furnish is their CORPORATE NAME, viz.

"The Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

Any person, disposed to leave a legacy to the Board of Education, is requested to insert the right CORPORATE NAME. The State laws differ so much that no one Form will answer in all the States.

The following form may be used in Pennsylvania.

I give and devise to the Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, the sum of ——— dollars, to and for the uses of the said Board of Education, and under its direction.

[When real estate, or other property, is given, let it be particularly described.]

SCHOLARSHIPS.

The sum of Seventy-five dollars forms a scholarship to assist a student in the collegiate course, and the sum of One Hundred dollars in the theological course.

HONORARY MEMBERS.

The sum of Fifty Dollars constitutes a person an Honorary Member of the Board of Education. A copy of the Annual Report is sent to all the Honorary members every year.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,

No. 23 Centre Street, New York.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

Mission House, September 13, 1853.

China.—Our letters are dated at Ningpo to the 14th of May; Shanghai, to the 9th of June; Canton, to the 4th of June. Many letters for the mail of last month were sent by a vessel that was lost on the coast of China. At Ningpo a new chapel was set apart for the worship of God on the 8th of May, which "is considered by all as very neat, and remarkably cheaply built; it is expected that services will be held in it every afternoon and twice on the Sabbath."—On the first Sabbath in May, the brethren were permitted to unite "with five converts from heathenism, all of them young men, who sat down for the first time at the table of the Saviour to commemorate his dying love. Our faith was strengthened," they add, "and our hearts rejoiced and took courage at the evidence of the Spirit's presence among us. We ask for these youthful converts the earnest prayers of God's people. The number of converts has been more than doubled since this time last year, being now thirteen, of whom six are females."—A building had been rented at Chinhai for a chapel and dispensary, where Dr. McCartee and Mr. S. Martin attend once a week. Until the mission is strengthened by more men, this city cannot receive proper attention.—An urgent plea is made for a printer, to supply the place left vacant by the lamented death of Mr. Coulter. It is desirable that a minister, or a student preparing for the ministry, who has a practical knowledge of printing, should be sent to occupy this important post.—The letters of our missionary friends make frequent references to the state of political matters in China. Most of them confidently expect good results from the success of the insurgents, though some anticipate evil. We quote a paragraph here from Mr. Quarterman's letter, briefly indicating some of the grounds of solicitude on both sides and the true line of duty: "The news from the rebels as they are termed, but whom I call patriots, is confirmatory of the previous vague reports of their Christian belief. But in case they succeed, I fear they may attempt to lead instead of following like disciples; and in case they are beaten, I fear the imperialists may suspect the missionaries of having originated the whole affair. But 'what is that to thee? follow thou me,' is more appropriate to us to dwell upon at present." At all the stations, our brethren were pursuing their work as usual, without any hinderance.

Siam.—Our letters are dated to the 6th of April, but contain no news of special interest. The missionaries were going on steadfastly in their work.

India.—Letters have been received from Lahor, June 10; Lodiana, May 30; Ambala, May —; Futtehgurh, June 11; Mynpurie, June 11; Agra, May 30; Allahabad, June 11. No special change is reported in the aspect of the missionary work, though fears are expressed that the villagers of Akutganj feel rather less interest than formerly in their attention to religious things.—The wife of one of the missionaries at Futtehgurh would be glad to make an effort to collect a girls' school near their house, which it is hoped could now be done. The expense would be about ten dollars a month. Perhaps some Sabbath-school, or some Christian friends, will authorize this effort to be made. It is well worthy of being tried.—References are again made in these letters to the need of more missionaries. "The harvest is plenteous but the labourers are few."

Africa: Liberia Mission.—Letters have been received from Monrovia and Kentucky, dated July 12. The missionaries were engaged in their usual work. At Kentucky, the labours of Mr. Erskine, licentiate preacher and teacher, are attended with a good degree of encouragement. The corner-stone of a small brick church had been laid by the Rev. D. A. Wilson, with an appropriate address, at that station. This church replaces one which fell down, the congregation narrowly escaping serious injury and perhaps loss of life. It is greatly needed, and the congregation, after doing what they can themselves, still want two hundred dollars to complete it. They have applied to the Board for this sum, and their request could not be refused under the circumstances of the case, though this expense was not included in the Estimates of the Mission. We hope this will be borne in mind by our readers.

Italy.—A letter from the Rev. Dr. Revel, known personally to many of our readers as the esteemed representative of the Waldensian Synod to our churches, has been received under date of August 6, at La Tour. Dr. Revel speaks in the warmest terms of his reception in this country, expresses his thankfulness at being again amongst his own people, and refers to the encouragement derived by them from the sympathy of American Christians, and particularly from the hope of having a Theological Seminary at La Tour, "a thing most necessary and even fundamental for our work, and for the evangelization of Italy." He had enjoyed the pleasure of spending a Sabbath at Turin on his way, and was struck with the progress of the gospel there in the four months since his former visit. The chapel holds six hundred persons, but was not large enough to give seats to all who wished on that day to attend the services. One hundred new members had been recently admitted to the church, and the Italian congregation now exceeds three hundred. The new church was nearly finished.

CHINA: NINGPO MISSION.

JOURNAL OF THE REV. HENRY V. RANKIN.

The changes of four years—More labourers wanted—Encouragement.

Feb. 12, 1853.—The fourth anniversary of my arrival in China. Within these few years, what changes have transpired among the missionaries in China! Eleven have gone to their rest, more than half of whom either perished at sea, or were cut off by the hand of violence, One, we have just heard, has died at Canton, in less than a month after arriving at his station. The wives of four missionaries have also been called away by death. Besides these, about twenty other missionaries have been permanently removed from this field of labour, generally on account of sickness. These facts are the more lamentable, in that our ranks are so slowly filled with fresh labourers, so that there are no more missionaries now in China than when we arrived; and at this post there are even fewer men than there were at that time. What is the reason that the churches have virtually diminished their interest in this field, we cannot tell, nor can we understand why others refuse to join us in our labours. It cannot be because of the unhealthfulness of this climate, for perhaps there is no eastern land where foreigners enjoy a larger share of health. My own experience has perhaps been more favourable than that of the majority of foreign residents in China during the same period of time, and yet, as a matter of thankfulness on my own part, and encouragement to others, I would mention that I have hardly known what sickness of any kind is since residing in Ningpo. Many others can record a similar statement. It cannot be because the field is not large and inviting, for the multitudes whom we meet from day to day, to nearly all of whom we have access; the thickly settled villages which are scattered on this vast plain, in which we can always openly enter and preach the gospel; the facilities for transmitting the printed page into the interior—these are facts which are well known. Perhaps Christians at home too much lose sight of the startling fact that here, in this vast country, are collected one-third of the human family, of whom it may be fairly computed that twenty-five thousand are daily perishing. The prominent impression upon the mind of the Christian philanthropist as he passes through this country is—Multitudes, multitudes, having no hope, and without God in the world. Nor can it be that the promises of God are less sure than they have been, or that he has forgotten them. On the contrary, they are every day hastening to their fulfilment, nor can he who seriously reads them, doubt that the time draweth near. Upon these would we fondly trust with far more confidence than any mere signs of the times. Yet our blessed Lord has not left his people here without marks of his gracious favour upon the hearts of some of this people. Within this period of four years, a goodly number have been added to the churches of the three denominations of Christians represented at Ningpo, viz., Presbyterians, Episcopalians, and Baptists. There are now about twenty connected with these three churches, and about equally divided among them. Two of those who were baptized among the earliest in this place, about five years since, have proved recreant to the cause they had professed, but the others have stood firm, and in general witnessed a good confession.

Another church member received—United States Expedition to Japan.

March 6.—Before the celebration of our communion services this morning, we were permitted to welcome another to church membership—a pupil of Miss Aldersey, named A-tsay, who was married not long since, and upon that occasion, and since, has been obliged to suffer much persecution for the sake of her Master. Because she refused to perform idolatrous ceremonies, she was severely and frequently beaten; till, finding her firm in her purpose of resisting what she knew to be wrong, her husband cast her off, and she returned to Miss Aldersey, where she has been steadily growing in grace. Upon the occasion of her baptism, she responded distinctly to the questions proposed. Thanks be to the Lord for thus permitting us to welcome one after another to his household here below! They are indeed bone of our bone, and flesh of our flesh. It is a joy of an unspeakable nature even to witness such scenes; how much more to have been made instrumental in leading the soul into the marvellous light of the gospel from that deplorable darkness in which the heathen are reared, and by which they are so long enveloped.

March 28.—We received another mail to-day bringing dates from home up to New Year's day. That which interests us very greatly is the account of the Japan expedition, the flag-steamer of which, with Commodore Perry, it seems, has left the United States. It seems to us here, that Christians at home are not half enough awake to the important results which we fondly hope from this expedition. In the papers there is a bare allusion to the fact that such a squadron would be sent, with a list of the vessels, &c. It seems to me, that if ever there was a nation to be prayed for, that it might receive the gospel, that nation is Japan. Her seclusive spirit has for many years been permitted by civilized nations, and no means of access have been discovered as yet, whereby to penetrate her darkness. On a small island of the Loo-choo group, Dr. Bettleheim has for several years been labouring single-handed, and yet at that distance, even though protected by British power, he has been annoyed in every possible way by an insignificant heathen government, who are under the jealous sway of Japan. Their own inhabitants are sometimes cast upon the shores of China, and shipwrecked in other places also; but if the unhappy wretches, despite their calamity, do not succeed in returning within the space of a year, it is generally believed that their heads are forfeited. The islands are many, and the inhabitants very numerous. The principal city is one of the largest in the world. The Jesuits, who resided there for so long a period of time, and the Russian commander Golownin, who was a prisoner among them during several years, together with others who have more or less acquaintance with the people, concur in testifying to their intelligence, and their progress in civilization. The few whom we have seen in Ningpo, though generally poor fishermen, were certainly favourable specimens of the human race. But beyond all other considerations, we should remember that they form a very large people, that they are our fellow-beings, having immortal souls, and who must yet, sooner or later, hear the proclamation of that gospel which is to be preached unto all nations.

Now we know not what will be the results of this expedition. We hope that it may be fully prosperous. It is distinctly avowed by our worthy President, that its mission is one of peace. Hence, though furnished with the most powerful engines of war, so as to set at defiance, if necessary, every hostile attack, it seems to be provided with all the appliances of modern science. Though experience has generally shown that the gospel must pave the way for the introduction of science and art, yet it is not so universally the case as to make us regard these peace operations as useless; doubtless they will tend to dazzle the minds of those who may witness for the first time upon their own shores their astonishing effects, and give them some juster idea of the power of Western nations than they now hold. At any rate, it is hardly to be expected that so powerful a squadron, under the command of so experienced an officer, will fail of important results. It may be by war, though we hope it will be by peace, that Japan is to be opened. A momentous question then is, in case the expedition succeeds, whether a mere commercial treaty shall be made, or one which will give the privilege to the missionary of the cross to enter there and proclaim the glad news of salvation to her perishing millions. To these important subjects, it seems to me the eyes of American Christians should be directed, and for their accomplishment their prayers should unitedly and most earnestly ascend;—first, that Japan may be speedily opened, and then, that the gospel may lawfully have free course through the length and breadth of that land. But supposing these blessings to be vouchsafed, where are the men to enter upon this vast field of labour? Within a few days' sail, there are now probably scores of our own countrymen and of Englishmen, who will eagerly press into the ports of Japan upon its first opening, in order to establish commercial houses, just as they were on the alert to enter the ports of China, so soon as the treaty of Nanking was signed: and they will always be ready, even in the face of great danger and discomfort, to settle in places where they may hope to carry on a successful trade. But where are the men to preach the gospel to Japan? to come in these strange lands to the help of the Lord against the mighty? One kingdom of Satan after another has opened her doors to the admission of the truth, and now in the very extremity of his dominions appears an intelligent, populous, powerful, and jealous nation, on the very eve of being attacked by one still stronger. There seems to be justice in the claims of our government, and if Japan resists these claims, and rejects the olive branch of peace, it will be most probably at her peril. Though the Christian must for ever deprecate war in all its forms, yet he is not allowed, nor would it be right, to despise a means which God sees fit to employ, and over which the humble disciple of Christ has no control. Hence it does not seem unreasonable to look with the eye of faith to the speedy opening of Japan, nor to prepare to come out and enter upon missionary labour in that vast field.

There are at present one large steamer, the Susquehanna, now daily expected at Shanghai, and two other vessels at Macao, I believe, which are to be connected with this expedition. Last July, we much enjoyed a visit from Captain Kelly and the officers of one of these vessels, the Plymouth, who came up the river, and stayed a few days at our houses. It was a great pleasure to entertain so worthy a class of our own countrymen in this far off land, and the visit of these officers will always be remembered with peculiar interest. The Plymouth lay outside the mouth of the river a few miles, but I had the further pleasure shortly after, on my way to Shanghai, of a visit on board.

Visit of a British Steamer—The progress of the Insurgents—Their opposition to Idolatry.

April 1*st*, 1853.—The British steamer Hermes, which came into port a few days since, has just left. She anchored directly in front of our houses, and was quite an object of interest to some of our teachers, and the boys in the boarding-school, who had the opportunity of visiting her. During these few days Captain Fishbourne has been making himself acquainted with many of the details of missionary effort in this place, in which he seems to feel real sympathy.

The Hermes brought Sir George Bonham, governor of Hong-Kong, who came to look after the interests of British residents, and see if there was any cause of alarm here, in consequence of the present distracted state of China. Home newspapers have not given sufficient prominence to the progress of the rebellion in China. Many have been disposed to doubt whether there was any army of insurgents who have been making steady and rapid progress through the interior, with the design of overthrowing the present Tartar dynasty. A recent letter from Canton, published in a New York paper, I notice, regards the affair as one of those petty insurrections to which this government is every year more or less liable in some one of its provinces, and which will soon be quelled. But the fact is, that there is great reason to believe that this rebel army will soon become the masters of the "Middle Kingdom." Starting from one of the most southern of the eighteen provinces of China, they have, during the past two years, pressed forward in almost a straight line, to the ancient capital Nanking, which it is rumoured they are soon to attack. Three or four provinces, including large portions of the tea and silk districts, have become subject to their power, and none of the imperial armies as yet sent against them has had any decisive success. They represent themselves as the people, who are seeking to drive out the Tartars, who have held the throne of China for a period of over two hundred years. The proclamations which they have issued declare their intention to expel the Manchu Tartars, who, like western foreigners, are denominated barbarians. Heavy charges of flagrant wickedness on the part of the existing government are alleged, to show the justice of their claims, while their own leader, they affirm, when "once seated in the deep recesses of his palace, will revive the days of Yaou and Shun." One remarkable feature in one of the proclamations issued is, that they are "seizing the priests of Buddha and Taou (the two principal forms of idolatry in China,) throughout the country, and putting them to death, and are inquiring into those who have been foremost in the building and repair of the Buddhist temples, that they may have them apprehended likewise." This proclamation has already disturbed the minds of many of the wretched priests of these idolatrous sects. Not only so, but the pretender to the throne has, (if the proclamation be genuine,) announced himself as a worshipper of one God, and it is supposed by many, that he and some of his chief followers became acquainted with Christianity through the agency of some of the operations of the late Dr. Gutzlaff.

The people at Ningpo seem to be quite indifferent as to the result, and if they are only allowed to live in peace, will doubtless be as well pleased with Tien-teh as with Hien-fung, the present youthful Emperor. They do not, apparently, anticipate any change for the better in the appointment or the character of their magistrates, nor in the taxes, which are the two principal causes of dissatisfaction, apart from the circumstance that they are now under Manchu sway. Yet the present officers are exerting all their influence against the insurgents. At Shanghai they have applied to the foreign consuls for assistance, which it is generally hoped will not be granted. The doctrine of intervention is the settled policy of our Government, and the English governor has positively refused to help either party. Some Portuguese lorchas have been chartered by the Shanghai Tao-Tae to go against the rebels to Nanking, and we also hear that one or two American vessels have been chartered from merchants in Shanghai, with the same design.

Two young men baptized—An earthquake—Farther accounts of the rebellion—Probable opening for missionary labour.

Sabbath, April 3*d*.—Two promising young men have this afternoon been baptized, and received as members of our little church; one, Mr. W. Martin's teacher, the other, named A-nying, employed by him in printing the Ningpo colloquial in Roman letters, and who also has for a long time served as the keeper of our city church. The occasion was highly interesting, and a goodly number were present. After the baptism, the teacher, Lu Sin-sang, made a few pertinent remarks upon the reasons which induced him to make a profession of religion. He was employed some years since as a teacher by Mr. Quarterman, at which time he seemed for a while interested in the truth, but recently his impressions have been much deepened, and he has, in the face of considerable opposition, publicly professed his faith in Christ, in which profession we all feel that he is sincere; and we fondly hope that his long connection with missionaries, and his large acquaintance with Bible truths, will make him a useful man among his countrymen. There is much solidity and good sense in the character of A-nying, who has also, in the face of serious opposition, come out on the Lord's side. He seems to be a truly Bible Christian. Thus our number, through the mercy of God, is from time to time increasing. It gladdens our hearts inexpressibly to see these evidences that God is indeed faithful to his promises, and these foretastes of their blessed fulfilment.

April 17*th*.—Two nights since we were visited with another earthquake, of longer duration than the one experienced in December. It is indeed startling to be suddenly awaked at midnight, and to feel the house for two or three minutes rocking to and fro like a ship at sea. One cannot fail to be awe-struck at this manifestation of infinite power, and to be astonished at the littleness of man. Another slight attack occurred yesterday at noon.

The accounts from Shanghai and Nanking are more serious than ever, and the progress of the insurgents is now a common subject of conversation here. At Shanghai there are four steamers, American, British, and French, and one war brig lying in front of the foreign community, which, it was reported, would be attacked. It is ascertained that Nanking has been taken, but beyond this, accounts are so contradictory that the English consular interpreter at Shanghai has gone into the interior to gain, if possible, a correct statement of facts. At Ningpo handbills have been circulated around, that a thousand foreign vessels had been borrowed by the government to repress the rebels, and that peace would, in consequence, soon ensue! Another notification was, that a hundred thousand foreign soldiers had been hired! Many believe these statements. It seems to be quite evident that this whole matter will eventually be terminated on one side or the other by foreign interference, in which case a new treaty will open up a much larger portion of China to foreigners, and thus there is great reason to believe that ere long the missionary may traverse many parts of this great nation without let or hinderance. Matters seem to be tending that way, though it may be a few years before it is brought about. Are the churches at home rightly studying the prophecies and the providences of God? Is it at all realized that at present we are upon the mere outskirts of China, the full opening of which would be like opening a score of ordinary countries. Indeed, the spoken languages of China are so different, in their idiom and sound, that each of the eighteen provinces may be said to contain several nations within its borders. But if this by no means incredible event does soon take place, where are the servants of God who are prepared to run to and fro among these multitudes, and proclaim the words of eternal life? If Japan and China are both opened, one would almost regret that it was so, because there are no labourers. Oh! let Christians be awake to a sense of these reflections, and cry mightily unto God for labourers for the great harvest!

April 23*d*.—The people are just now suffering from scarcity of rice, the staff of life to a Chinaman, and an immense number of beggars are to be met with in the city. They have been very annoying to rich people, whose outer doors they besiege in large numbers, begging for something to eat, and in some instances have broken them open. A case occurred a few days since in connection with these wretches, in which the menials of the mayor of the city, (cheheen,) were beaten, and both he and a higher officer were ill-treated.

The latest accounts from the north give no further definite statements of the insurgents, further than that if they succeeded, they intended to drive out the foreigners from China, because of an attack upon them by the Portuguese lorchas. Whether this proclamation is genuine or not, is uncertain.

CHINA: SHANGHAI MISSION.

SKETCH OF THE REBELLION, AND TRANSLATIONS OF PAMPHLETS BY THE INSURGENTS: BY THE REV. M. S. CULBERTSON, JUNE 1, 1853.

We have received full accounts of Chinese matters from our missionary brethren. They possess great interest for all classes of readers, and especially for those who look for the coming of Christ's kingdom. We have not, however, inserted these communications in the Record, chiefly because the material facts of the movement and the various views entertained of its character and probable results, have been widely published in the daily and weekly journals of the country—commonly in advance of our monthly publication. Our missionary friends, moreover, as was to have been expected, are not all agreed in their estimate of this remarkable rebellion or revolution. Some apprehend little but evil from its success. We believe the prevailing opinion, especially at the northern stations, is that of sanguine expectation of great good.

The pretensions of the leader to have spiritual revelations made to him is certainly a bad sign, showing, we fear, more than ignorance; the alleged cruelty to the Manchus and to the Buddhist priests can be accounted for with less difficulty, though not to be justified. On the other hand, the destruction of idols, and the profession of many important points of the Christian faith, with a corresponding example as it would appear, must be regarded as signs of good and great results. But we forbear to enlarge on "the merits of the case."

Our readers will not cease to pray that God would overrule this movement for his own glory and the advancement of his kingdom. It is easy for him so to direct these matters, as to throw the whole country open to his servants for the preaching of the gospel. The Chinese people must now be somewhat aroused from their great apathy as to religious things; their powerless gods have been evidently put to confusion; a large amount of Bible truth has been set forth—these things are fitted to awaken our hopes that the time to favour China and its vast multitudes is drawing nigh.—We need not add that the following paper will be found well worthy of perusal.

The last mail will have carried to you the intelligence brought from Nanking, by the British steamer which recently visited that city. A number of pamphlets published by the insurgents were brought down by the steamer, and I now send you a translation of some portions of them, as they are of deep interest, from the knowledge which they exhibit of Christian truth.

Before giving the extracts from the pamphlets, it may be well to give some of the facts respecting this rebellion, which now seem to be established by satisfactory evidence. The facts respecting the origin of the movement seem to be these. In the year 1846 a literary graduate of more than ordinary talent, a native of the province of Kwang-tung, (Canton) while on a visit to Hong-Kong, received strong religious impressions from a small religious tract, distributed by the agents of some of the Protestant missionary societies. These religious impressions led him to seek more particular instruction, and he then went to his home and disseminated among his neighbours and friends the knowledge which he had acquired. His name is Hung Sew-Tseuen, and he is now probably about forty years of age. He professes to have been confirmed in his religious convictions, and in the course of conduct which he has pursued, by dreams and visions of heavenly things.

In endeavouring to communicate his views, he met with much success, and he extended his efforts to the neighbouring province of Kwang-si. Although many opposed his views, the number of adherents to his doctrine steadily increased. They held meetings for religious worship, and the numbers attending them soon became so great as to attract the attention, and excite the fears of the local authorities. Two of their principal men were seized, and on some pretence of disloyalty or rebellion, were put to death. The others immediately took up arms in self-defence, and it may be supposed that many who felt no special interest in the new doctrines, would easily be persuaded to aid in resisting such tyranny and oppression; and the more so, as it can hardly be doubted that there would be not a few anxious for an opportunity to avenge wrongs which they themselves had previously endured.

It would be deeply interesting, if we had the means, to trace from this beginning the various successes and reverses of this courageous band, until they reached the commanding position which they now hold. We may hope one day to learn the details of their early struggles, but at present, very little is known about them. It is certain, however, that the insurgents were long detained before the city of Chang-sha, the capital of the province of Hunan, and met with some repulses. They succeeded, however, in getting possession of it sometime in November, 1852, and from thence, they directed their course to the Yang-tsze river, which they reached about the middle of December. On the 12th January, they took possession of Woo-chang, the capital of the province of Hupih. This being one of the most important trade depots of the whole interior of the empire, and as most of the foreign goods imported through Shanghai which are taken to the western provinces must pass this point, the trade of Shanghai was almost entirely stopped as soon as it became known that it was invested, and business has not yet been resumed to any considerable extent.

After obtaining possession of this important point the insurgents very deliberately made their preparations for advancing by the Yang-tsze upon Nanking, the ancient capital of the empire. It is not known precisely at what stage of the insurrection, or under what circumstances, the idea of overturning the empire and establishing a new dynasty, was first entertained, but it was certainly at a very early date. They well knew that the prestige which the possession of Nanking would give them, would be essential to carry out this design, and therefore, that they might obtain and hold this glittering prize, they abandoned all the points of lesser note, and left them to be re-occupied by the imperial troops. Thus they kept their whole force in one body, and obviated the necessity for keeping open communications with their rear by the contributions exacted from the cities on their route.

After the fall of Woo-chang, the imperial generals seem to have abandoned themselves to despair, and retired before the insurgent army, without so much as waiting to get a sight of it. Kin-kiang and Gan-king fell in rapid succession, and on the 8th of March, Nanking was invested. On the 19th of that month, a breach having been effected by springing a mine, the city was taken by assault, the imperial troops making but a feeble defence. No quarter was given to the Manchus, citizens or soldiers. The whole Tartar population, estimated at from twenty to thirty thousand, was slain without mercy, and very few escaped.

Chin-kiang-foo is situated at the point at which the grand canal intersects the Yang-tsze river, and on the southern bank of the river. On the 31st of March the insurgents took possession of this important point, the Tartar garrison having previously evacuated it, and the next day they took possession of the cities of Kwa-chau and Yang-chau on the north bank of the river. Thus they have command of the canal, and effectually cut off all communication by this channel between the capital and the southern portion of the empire

Shortly after the occupation of Nanking by the insurgents, a large imperial force, reported to be over thirty thousand strong, took up a position in its vicinity. It is commanded by General Heang-yung, an officer who stands high in imperial favour just now, and who has been entrusted with a kind of dictatorship over seven provinces. From the fulminations he issued, it would have been supposed that the "robbers" would have been at once exterminated. As yet, however, he has done nothing, and the insurgents not only maintain themselves in Nanking and Chin-kiang, but possess the river and its banks between those two cities, a distance of forty-seven miles. They are quietly engaged in strengthening their defences, and laying in provisions, of which they are said to have abundant supplies. There seems little reason to expect that any force which the present government can ever bring into the field will ever be able to drive them from their position, or even effectually to hem them in.

The effect of their success has already been to excite rebellions in other parts of the Empire. A formidable one is in progress in Honan, and another is reported in the province of Shantung. We have just heard also that an insurgent force has taken possession of Amoy. This, however, appears to be local. It is evident now to all, that the government, with an empty treasury, unfaithful officers, and disaffected or cowardly armies, is perfectly helpless. What all these disorders may lead to it is impossible to foresee, but in view of the promises of God we can hardly doubt that they will all tend to the furtherance, sooner or later, of the gospel. The insurgents at Nanking, holding as they do, the same religious faith, profess the most friendly feeling towards foreigners. It is to be lamented that some animosity may be excited in their minds, by the fact that many foreigners are fighting against them on board of a fleet of Portuguese lorches, and of square rigged vessels purchased by the Intendent of Circuit resident at Shanghai, from foreign merchants.*

From the first, this movement seems to have been a religious one. The leaders express their belief in the one living God, and declare that their sole reliance is on him. They ascribe all their success to him, and go forward in the full confidence that they are acting under his express authority and direction. They are enemies to all idolatry, and are uncompromising iconoclasts. Throughout their march they everywhere demolished the idols, and the officers of the Hermes had ocular demonstration of this fact in the fragments of broken images lying in the temples and by the road-side.

They have not only discarded idol worship, but also all the absurd superstitions to which their countrymen are enslaved. Astrology and fortune-telling, lucky and unlucky days, omens and auguries, are all thrown to the winds. We had supposed that ages almost would be required to eradicate these vain notions from the Chinese mind. But it is easy for God to work when the appointed time comes.

A glance at the contents of some of their books will show something of their religious views. In the first place they have reprinted, from Gutzlaff's translation, portions of the Scriptures. How large a portion has been printed by them is not known. All I have seen is the first twenty-eight chapters of Genesis, neatly bound in a separate volume. It is not to be doubted that they have some copies of the whole Old Testament, but there is no evidence that they possessed any part of the New Testament, until two copies were placed in their hands by the captain of the steamer Hermes. It is evident, however, that they take the Scriptures as their rule of faith, so far as they know them.

One of the pamphlets procured at Nanking is an almanac. From this it appears that they have introduced a new calendar, discarding the Chinese notation of lunar months, and making the year to consist of three hundred and sixty-six days, and the months of thirty and thirty one days alternately. It may be fairly presumed that this is in imitation of foreigners, though they seem to be but imperfectly acquainted with the Gregorian calendar, or the calculations upon which it is based. In their calendar the Sabbath days are noted, and correspond with our Sabbath. The year seems to commence on the 4th of February, or the beginning of Spring.

The following is a translation of some portions of one of their pamphlets, entitled "The Book of Instructions of the T'hae Ping Dynasty." The article from which these extracts are made is entitled "A Discourse to Awaken the Age." It is chiefly an argument against idolatry. The arguments are drawn from reason—the silence of the Chinese classics and of the Holy Scriptures—and the express command of God himself, as delivered at Mount Sinai.

All under heaven are one family. All in every place are brethren. If you ask how this can be so, I answer that, with respect to the body, though each has his own parents and his own family clan, just as there are territorial divisions, yet all clans have alike proceeded from a single clan, and that one clan came from a single ancestor. Thus, as to their origin, there is no difference. Then, with respect to the soul, from whence has every human soul sprung, from whence proceeded? They are all derived from the August Supreme Ruler. This accords with the saying "One root spreads into ten thousand branches, and ten thousand branches may be traced back to one root." Kung K'eih says—"That which is derived from heaven is called nature." The Ode says—"The people are all the offspring of Heaven." The Shoo-king says—"It is Heaven produces the people beneath." These are wise sayings, and are not in the smallest degree erroneous. From this it appears that the ancient sages regarded all the world as one family. In those days the people all regarded each other as if cherished in the same womb, and could not bear to forget, for a single day, [their brethren] throughout the world. But in modern times a false notion prevails that there is a demon, Yen Lo, [Pluto] who presides over life and death. This demon, Yen Lo, is the old serpent, the devil, who performs many wonders to entangle and seize the souls of all the world. Our brethren throughout the world ought to destroy him. It is only to be feared they will not be in sufficient haste to do so. On the contrary, men stretch out their necks to him. Why should they themselves put from them the happiness of heaven, and voluntarily bring upon themselves the misery of hell?

With reference to doctrine, there must be that which is certainly true. Now that which prevails at the present time, but was unknown in ancient times; which prevails near at hand, but is unknown afar off, must be false, corrupt, and contemptible doctrine. For example, fiendish men falsely say that Yen Lo presides ever life and death.

* [From an English correspondent we learn that the Jesuits and other Roman priests are bitterly opposed to the insurgents, no doubt on account of their Protestant views; and they are suspected of making efforts to enlist the aid of foreigners for the Imperialists.—Ed.]

But if you examine the Chinese classics concerning this, you find nothing of it; and if you examine the Holy Scriptures of foreigners you find nothing of it. Such being the case, whence has this notion arisen? The fiendish disciples of Buddha have put it forth. They themselves walk in a blind way, and covet, scheme after, and procure gain. They deceive men by that which they cannot understand, and sell their own deceptions. They deceive men by pretending to confer happiness, and performing religious rites, only to fill their own purses. Further, the devil has entered into their heart, and they have fabricated innumerable hellish and corrupt notions, to delude, injure, and entangle men. Thus in the time of the Tsin dynasty, [B. C. 220,] fiendish men lying, said—"In the eastern sea there is the hill of the three divinities." The emperor thereupon sent men to the sea to seek the hill. From this arose the false notion of the existence of genii. If you examine its origin, you will find that it does not reach further back than the time of the Tsin dynasty, which was thus deceived. Succeeding generations imitated this bad example, until the knot became too hard to be untied. Thus "a difference of a hair's-breadth leads to an error of a thousand miles."

Again, in the time of the Han dynasty, in the reign of Woo, [B. C. 139,] fiendish men lying said—"Sacrifice to the god of the kitchen, and you may change red sand into yellow gold." Woo at once believed, and offered the sacrifice. Thereupon from Yen and Tse came a multitude of lying fiends telling of the wonderful genii.

Again, in modern generations, fiendish men lying say, that the dragon demon of the Eastern sea causes rain. This dragon is no other than the demon Yen Lo in another shape. That rain descends from heaven every one can see with their own eyes. [Here the classics are quoted to show that rain is the product of natural causes, and the instance of the flood is cited in proof that it is of God. Then follows a sharp denunciation of the Buddhist books, and especially the idea that Yen Lo presides over life and death. These I omit.—Tr.]

The August Supreme Ruler in every generation produces intelligent and wise sages; and there is no age in which there are not some also who are blown prostrate by the wind [of false doctrine.] In these modern generations there are many who are stupidly ignorant of the August Supreme Ruler, and who obstinately refuse to fear Him. They are completely entangled in the wiles of the serpent, the demon Yen Lo. They are plunging into the destruction of hell, and they themselves do not know it. Alas for future [generations of] men, although they may wish clearly to understand the doctrine concerning heaven, earth, and man, where will they be able to find it? Great indeed is men's love of falsehood. They look not for its source, they do not consider its end. If a thing is but false, they willingly listen to it. All men throughout the world, although they are so numerous, are created and produced by the August Supreme Ruler. If produced by him, it must be he also that causes their growth, and they must be dependent on him for food and raiment. The August Supreme Ruler is the Universal Father. Death, life, calamities, happiness, are all alike from him. Raiment, food, and every necessary thing are made by him. Looking up to heaven—the sun, moon, stars, thunder, rain, wind, clouds, are all derived from the vast wisdom of the August Supreme Ruler. Look down upon the earth, the hills and plains, the waters and streams, birds and fishes, insects and plants, are all the product of the mighty power of the August Supreme Ruler. All these may be clearly seen, and easily understood. Therefore he is the True God. Therefore all in every place under the whole heaven ought every morning and evening to worship him.

Some may yet obstinately cavil and say—The August Supreme Ruler ought indeed to be worshipped; but he must have some to help him, just as all kings in governing a country must have officers to assist them. Do such not know that the officers of kings must be appointed by the monarch himself, and after that may assist in governing? With reference to the idols which men have set up, of wood, and stone, and clay, and pictured on paper, I would ask you whether the August Supreme Ruler has appointed them, or not? No: these are all derived from men's minds, having been so deluded by the devil as to make, according to their own stupid purpose and device, every kind of strange and monstrous thing. Of old the August Supreme Ruler in six days created heaven and earth, land and sea, men and things. He had already appointed thousands and tens of thousands of angels to act as his messengers. Why then does he need those strange and monstrous things which men have made in direct opposition to his will. According to the Old Testament, the August Supreme Ruler formerly came down at Mount Sinai, and with his own hands wrote the ten commandments upon tables of stone, which he delivered to Moses, saying, "I am Lord above, the August Supreme Ruler. All you men must not by any means set up any image of things in heaven above, or on the earth beneath, or bow down and worship them." Now you men who have set up any image, and bow down and worship it, truly rebel against the will of the August Supreme Ruler.

You may say that these images help the August Supreme Ruler to protect men. Why are you so deluded by the devil, and so utterly confused and insensible? Can you not reflect that the August Supreme Ruler in six days created heaven and earth, land and sea, men and things? If in this work he needed none to assist him, who can he now need to help him to take care of men?

I would ask you, if the August Supreme Ruler had only created heaven, and not the earth, would you then have had any place to plant your feet upon? Would you have had any field to cultivate? None. I would ask again, as you have already obtained his favour in creating heaven and earth, suppose he had not created upon the earth mulberry trees, hemp, grain, wheat, pulse, beans, grass, wood, water, fire, gold, iron, and had not created in the water fishes and frogs, or the birds of the air, or the wild beasts of the mountains, or domestic animals, then would your bodies have had anything to clothe them, or your mouths anything to eat? Would you have had anything to boil or roast for your morning and evening meals, or any vessels and implements to use? None.

Suppose again that the August Supreme Ruler for a single year should not send forth the sun to give you light, or for a single year should not send down rain to furnish you with water, or for a single year should not give thunder to banish from you evil and malarious influences, or for a single year should not cause the wind to blow to dispel your vexation and discomfort [lit. repressed breathings], could you then obtain any harvests, and live in peace and prosperity? * * *

Again, suppose the August Supreme Ruler should once be angry with you, cut short your breath, and put an end to your life, then could your mouth talk, your eyes see, your ears hear, your hands handle, your feet walk, your mind conceive and plan? Assuredly they could not.

INDIA: LODIANA MISSION.

JOURNAL OF THE REV. A. RUDOLPH, AT A HINDU FESTIVAL.

Lodging place—Labours commenced—Conversation with a Brahman and a Pandit—The Pandit's question, often repeated.

Jwala Mukhi, April 14, 1853.—I reached this place at noon after a fatiguing march of eighteen miles. I stay in a building called Bárahdarí, or twelve doors, from the circumstance that these houses have generally twelve doors, three on each side, the whole being built generally in the form of a square. They are mostly intended for a summer residence of the chief, or as a public place, where he holds his courts. The one I stay in was built not very long ago by one of the chiefs of the Sikhs, Lena Singh, who had his possessions confiscated at the time of the war; some of these have, however, been restored to him; for Government treats such men with much leniency, notwithstanding their frequent breach of promise. Jwálá Mukhí belongs now to the British, and the building is occupied by travellers whenever they choose to make use of it. The walls are painted all around from top to bottom with birds and trees of fanciful shapes and in gaudy colours. There happens, however, to be no drawings of idols or any obscene pictures on the walls, things that often make such places disgusting to European travellers as a retreat for shelter and repose. The Melá ground is about a mile from this building, which is a nice retreat for the night from the noise and confusion of the Melá, which on such occasions becomes sometimes deafening, and is so incessant that it gives one no rest either day or night.

After having rested a little, I went to the place and found the native brethren, Qádirbakhsh from Lodiana, and Abdulla from Jalandar, already engaged at the preaching tent, the former in speaking to the people, and the latter in distributing books. But few people have come yet, and it is suspected that not many will come together. Some said that the approaching wheat-harvest kept the people back, others that a particular star had become invisible now, and that this was regarded as an unfavourable season to approach the deities.

I found myself soon surrounded by a congregation, and engaged in a discussion with two respectable-looking natives, who had taken their seats by my side. One of the two, a Pandit, pointed out to the other in one of our books some passages of the Shasters quoted in Sanscrit, the purport of which was that man and deities had shown evil propensities during the satjug, (holy age.) I took occasion to show them how contradictory it was to speak of a satjug, and yet to believe that there existed such tendencies to evil at the time. The Pandit seemed to take part with me against the Shasters and left the other alone to defend them. Very soon I discovered that the Pandit had a very correct and probably extensive knowledge of the religion of Jesus; he enumerated the different kinds of miracles performed by our Saviour with the utmost facility, and with the same ease he quoted scripture doctrines very correctly. So long as the other, who was a Brahman, stayed, he assisted me much in explaining to him some of the doctrines of the Bible, and seconded my efforts directed against the idols and incarnations of the Hindús. The Brahman after a while left, and my friend that had so faithfully assisted me, seemed now to become my opponent. He proposed the following question: You missionaries say that a man must believe in Christ, and must abstain from sin, such as falsehood, theft, adultery, etc., to obtain salvation; but now, if a man that does not believe in Christ is brought to forsake these sins, by what means is that change brought about? I told him such a change had never been effected in any single instance without Christ. He asked how I knew that? I said from the Scriptures as well as from my daily experience. He said the Scriptures were not convincing to any one except to him that believed them, and as to my experience, it would be but a limited one, even though he granted that it might be very extensive. He asked the same question again and again, by what means such a change had been effected in those that did not believe in Christ. I spoke to him of the new birth, and told him that the true religion did not only enjoin the forsaking of certain sins, but it included love to God and to our neighbour, it weaned the heart from the world, and caused the affections to be set on things above. He granted all this and said, Now, suppose that some one possesses all this, but does not believe in Christ, how was the change effected? I told him, I believed it to be an impossibility, and the Scriptures said the same. He answered, Supposing I said I possessed all these things but did not believe in Christ. I told him, he might say so, but I would answer, he was a liar but that the Scriptures were truth. I told him he might change his sins but he could not change his heart. Like a man in the mire, he might lift up one of his feet but the other would only sink the deeper. He acknowledged all this, but still asked the former question. I had made several attempts to get away, for it was getting dark, and a storm with heavy clouds appeared to be gathering; besides, I felt quite ready for dinner after the fatigues of the day, but the man seemed not disposed to let me off.

He said, I have come down from Kángrá for the purpose of asking this question. I have spoken to a gentleman, Mr. M., in the civil service about it, and having heard that missionaries attend the Jwálá Mukhí fair, I have come to ask them, and now you do not dissolve my doubts. I really did not know what to say; I felt distressed to see a man in earnest about a matter of such importance, and yet to be so unreasonable, as I thought. I told him he should meekly and humbly seek the divine guide, and not trust to his own heart, which was deceitful above all things and desperately wicked. It might perhaps lead him to think that he had the love of God and of men in his heart, and that he had a new life, while in reality he was no more than a Pharisee. Yes, he said, that was all true; but suppose a man had really obtained these things, and had never even heard the name of Christ, by what means was the change effected? I said, supposing this possible, it would still be Christ, the good Shepherd, that came to seek and to save that which was lost, that did it, though the man knew him not. "Well," said he, evidently much pleased, "at last you have answered my question; it would still be Christ that had taught the heart, though the man knew him not." He now left me, to grope my way through the dark to the Bárahdarí, which I reached, pleasingly tired, just before the storm had fairly commenced.

Inflammable gas worshipped—Appearance of the Temple—A heathen saint—A tiger worshipped—Image of a man worshipped—The gospel preached.

Friday, 15th.—This place is wholly given to idolatry. I went to the temple built over the celebrated subterraneous flame. The gas issuing from under the ground is supposed to be naphtha, but has never been examined. As the Brahmans are unwilling to submit it to an examination, it is impossible to say whether the gas is a spontaneously combustible one, or whether they have to set fire to it, in case it should happen to go out. Some of the people (not the Brahmans, of course,) say that the flame sometimes happens to go out, and it is necessary then to set fire to it again. The flame issuing from between the stones, which are nicely cut square, and arranged by man's hands, is about a span long, and burns with a dim blue light. It is fed plentifully with ghí, (butter,) and I thought I could distinctly see a wick projecting from between the stones. There is no doubt that the combustible materials put on the flame constantly by the worshippers, have a good deal to do with keeping the flame burning. Outside of the temple, there was one little flame, about two inches high, issuing from under the stones, this also is fed with ghí, which I pointed out to the bystanders. Some of the people suspect foul play in reference to the flame, more especially so the Mohammedans..... I had been told that the temple was covered with sheets of gold, but on getting on the roof, and examining it, I found, and the people themselves told me, that it was of copper, washed over with gold. In front of the temple there are two animals, intended to represent lions, gilded over, and placed on high pedestals. All over the place, the eye meets every few steps with idols cut in stone, some of them painted red, and of hideous shapes.

On ascending the hill immediately behind the temple, I found a man, a heathen saint, leaning with his back towards the rock, and his arms stretched out on either side of the body; he was sitting cross-legged, and perfectly naked. He kept his eyes closed; his face indicated not the sweet, calm composure of a true devotional man and believer, but pride and vulgarity were the chief features that I could discover in his countenance. He is believed by the people to have sat in this position for many a year, without getting up, and that consequently his spread arms have worn away the rock that supports them. The chisel of the workman is, however, too plainly imprinted on the rock, for the careful observer to believe so absurd a story. He is said to eat nothing but a little milk, and never to speak, or to get up. I told the people that I knew he sometimes did speak, for when one of the magistrates of H—— called him, not long ago, a great owl, for sitting in such a position, and never talking, the man opened his mouth, and said that sometimes he did speak, and that he was in the habit of getting up in the night. After telling the people how sinful it was for the man to sit thus useless on the rock, and not to make use of the limbs and faculties that God had given him, and that if he did not repent, he had to look for nothing but awful punishment at the hand of the Almighty, I proceeded on my way, and found a tiger shut up in a cage close by. He, as well as the saint, is worshipped by the people. A large quantity of kowries (small shells used in the place of a coin) were thrown into his cage. The brute, being annoyed at the appearance of a stranger, grinned at me with his terrible teeth. On my way up the hill, I met the little stream that the great Akbar, emperor of Delhi, is said to have directed over the flame in the temple, in order to extinguish it, but without effect. On reaching the top of the hill, I found a human image, cut in black stone, very much out of shape and proportion. The people believe that it had been a real man, but was subsequently changed into stone. On inquiring from the Brahmans, who were sitting by, to receive the gifts of the worshippers, they did not repeat to me the absurd story, but simply told me it had been there for so many ages that they could not tell its origin.

Here, in the presence of a crowd of worshippers, I exposed the folly of the people, in minding what the greedy Brahmans said, and in worshipping things so much inferior to themselves, and infinitely so to the great God of the universe. I warned the Brahmans of the coming day of reckoning, when they would have to answer for deceiving the people. Their deceitfulness and covetousness is so well understood by the besotted worshippers, that they said it was all true that I said, and the Brahmans did not dare to open their mouths.

LONDON JEWS' SOCIETY.

Missions in Amsterdam and Berlin.

If we trace further the progress of the Jewish Mission into Europe, we find at Amsterdam and Berlin continued evidences of increased usefulness, activity, and progression; there are few Jewish families in Berlin or Amsterdam, some individual member of which has not embraced Christianity; and even many who do not believe in Christ are convinced of the surpassing excellence of Christianity, and its vast superiority to the Rabbinism of the day. And although at Amsterdam educational efforts upon a larger scale, on our part, are still suspended by the bigotry of the Jews, it is consolatory to know that in Holland, and more especially in Prussia, multitudes of Jewish children are sent by their unbelieving and so-called reformed Jewish parents, to Christian schools, with Christian children, where proselytism being only as it were a gradual and gratuitous work, the same prejudice is not excited, as against the teaching of the missionary. The labours which devolve upon the missionaries at Berlin, are of a varied and diversified character, the standard of the cross is lifted up, the word of God is circulated, missionary journeys are undertaken, the great fairs at Frankfurt, Leipzig and Brunswick are visited, and in these places the missionaries are thrown into contact with vast numbers of Jews who come from distant countries, where missionary labour is prohibited. We are told that "the Bibles and New Testaments there circulated, the tracts distributed, and the truth as it is in Christ there spoken to the Jews, is, in the providence of God, carried to countries where otherwise they would not come." These Jews are often furnished with a special commission from the rabbies and teachers in Russia, Bohemia, and other countries, to obtain as many as possible of these books, and to bring them home. Mr. Bellson, in speaking of the events of the past year observes:—"Jews have come to us from far and wide, for copies of the "Old Paths," to take them home into the very interior of Russia. Not many weeks ago a man bought a copy of that work, and cut off at once the binding in order to conceal it, in single parts, in the lining of his coat, so as to get it safely into the heart of Russia. He has informed us that it is carefully read by the Caraites, and that they consider it the greatest triumph that has ever been achieved over the Talmud."

In Berlin, as at other stations, the more general employment of colporteurs is an additional symptom of the progressive nature of the Jewish Mission, and it is satisfactory to know that Mr. Bellson has succeeded in obtaining greater facilities for the colporteurs to discharge their duties, and that the consent of the government has been obtained to the free journeyings of these useful auxiliaries. A quiet and unpretending colporteur, going to and fro, with his books for sale, has many opportunities of being useful to the Jews, which come not so easily into the way of the missionary. And many are the anecdotes which could be brought forward in proof of the accessibility of the Jews to the colporteur, and the opportunities he has of sowing precious seed beside all waters. We have not space at present but to quote from one:—"A Jew came to a colporteur at L., twelve miles on foot, at a special request of his wife, who for years past had been confined to the house. They had heard that he was in the country, and distributed Christian books. The conscience of this poor woman had been awakened during her long illness. A long conversation with this Jew proved that the family were not far from the kingdom of heaven. They had read the New Testament.

"Another Jew, who had come for some tracts, received also a New Testament, which he took home and read to his wife, until twelve o'clock at night. They were both so taken with the contents, that it filled them with joy and rejoicing; so much so, that they were compelled to speak of it to their Jewish neighbours the next day. One of them was so much excited by the relation, that he took at once his staff, and walked fifteen miles to find the colporteur, to get tracts and a New Testament for himself, and bought also various Scriptures."

Mission in Poland.

One of the most long confirmed and useful of all the Society's Missions is the great Polish Mission; a mission, whose usefulness may be estimated by the fact, that probably nearly one-half of all the Jews that have been baptized by the missionaries of the Society, have some time or other been in contact with the Polish Mission. A mission, singular for its position in the midst of a Slavonic people, and which hitherto, from its integrity of purpose and good conduct, has obtained the sanction of a despotic government. Here also the word of God has been widely circulated amongst the Jews, tracts distributed by thousands; missionary journeys made on an extensive scale, and the cross of Christ widely exalted, and many been led to look to him for salvation. There is not probably a Jewish family in all Poland that does not know something of the mission there.

The Polish Jews are a very different class of men from those of Germany, they have not to the same extent been brought under the influence of the mentally inquiring and searching spirit of the times; we consequently hear of still prevailing remnants of Rabbinic superstition; a Talmud is carried before a Jewess at a funeral procession, and said to be done in accordance with the ignorant interpretation of Scripture, "His righteousness shall go before him." A cock is still sacrificed on the day of atonement as a substitute for that blood which cleanseth away sin; Jews believe that by starving themselves they render an acceptable sacrifice to God, and upon a late occasion, during the prevalence of the cholera, "in order to deceive death, they buried a number of geese alive; dressed up a large puppet and did the same with it, performed marriages in the burial place, and other like proceedings."

"So many hundreds of Jews having been baptized at Warsaw," (writes Mr. Becker,) "there is a considerable number of proselytes, and even proselyte families, who are known to me, but both the latter and the former greatly differ in their conduct. For whilst some behave as Christians, and show the influence of the gospel in their life and conduct, others can hardly be distinguished from the great mass of Christians around them, being careful for many things, but caring too little about the one thing needful."

Mission in Jerusalem.

There is another stronghold of the Jewish Mission which we cannot overlook, although not able to find space for all. There is a land and a city full of latent life and glory, to which Christians, or they would be no Christians, always look with interest; over which Jehovah watches, and to which the eye of the expatriated Jew is always directed. It is still the centre of the thoughts and feelings of the nations of the earth; and God in his mysterious providence, by a succession of marvellous events and remarkable calamities, is always bringing it to our recollection; that city is now the seat of a British Episcopate, with college and schools, and all the appliances of a great mission. We hear that a spirit of inquiry is spreading amongst the Jews in Palestine, that there are many secret believers that would come out and confess Christ, were it not for the peculiarly painful circumstances in which such a confession would involve them, for according to the law, as is there constituted, a Jew on becoming a Christian must give up wife and children, and forsake all which he holds most dear. It is to be hoped the decree of the central government will prove favourable to the persecuted Israelite, and thus that the way will be paved for stronger exertions of missionary effort.

The peculiar position of Jerusalem, and the feelings with which it is regarded by the Jew, render conversions there more than usually important in their influence on the Jews in other lands.

The testimony of the Bishop of Jerusalem, when, in the course of last year he was on a visit to England, was to the like effect; and your committee were cheered by the warm and active spirit of co-operation which he manifested. His absence from the scene of his labours during a great part of the year, has prevented the Bishop from giving your committee the benefit of his usual annual letter. Regretting the circumstance in another communication, he makes the following remarks, which will be read with interest: "I shall only say that although there are, as always, many causes for grief and sorrow, yet, upon the whole, I believe that I can affirm with truth, that considering its many particular difficulties, the mission is in a prosperous state. The services, both public and more private, are well attended—there is, I believe, true Christian love uniting all the members of the mission, and, as far as I know, the proselytes are on good terms among themselves. There is a goodly number of inquirers receiving regular instruction, although we must be prepared to see some of them go back to the Jews, and to their bad habits. But what encourages me most, is, that there is a considerable stir among the Jews, with much hatred against some of the proselytes, which is generally a sign that there is some good being done among them."

There is no doubt the mission there is progressing in the right way.

Increasing Demand for the Scriptures.

One of the most cheering signs of the missions in the East is the wide and increasing circulation of the Holy Scriptures. From Jerusalem, and Bagdad, and Cairo, they find their way into Arabia, and Asia Minor, Persia, Hindustan, and Tartary; the Jews themselves often officiating as the agents of distribution, not only of the Old Testament Scriptures, but also of the New.

Mr. Stern observes: "One of the most animating and cheering features in our field of labour, is the readiness with which all classes listen to our message, and accept the books which we offer them. Rabbies and teachers, bankers and merchants, toiling artizans and itinerant pedlars, all are grateful for one of these silent messengers of the gospel, which have already greatly agitated the stagnant waters of Jewish unbelief, and will continue to exert a benign influence among the thousands of Israel who reside in this place. The leading rabbies have made many attempts to oppose the irresistible tide of light and knowledge, which is sapping the foundation of their revered system, but their endeavours have only tended to stir up disunions and controversies amongst their respective flocks."

The testimony of the Rev. C. L. Lauria, at Cairo, is also equally satisfactory, and confirmative of what we have already said. "It is not alone at Cairo," he tells us, "that we are privileged to see the gradual success Christianity is gaining over the retreating and vanishing zeal of Judaism." "The Jews of Arabia Felix, who for a long time formed the phalanx of Judaism, but still subdued under the heavy iron sceptre of the Arabian pseudo-prophet, begin to receive the Gospel, which proclaims 'deliverance to the captives,' from the country of their ancient bondage. Several Jews of that country, who were here, called on me and heard the word of God preached to them. They bought of me, for their countrymen, 160 Bibles, and 20 Pentateuchs. I sent 10 Bibles gratis to the poor Jews in Sana, and also 50 copies of the Gospel according to St. Matthew, which the Jews pledged themselves to distribute amongst their countrymen; and, I trust, soon to be able to send them more Bibles and New Testaments. Thus the seed of the Gospel is scattered also in that remote region, where, for the present, no missionary can penetrate, and may God bless it to produce the desired fruit in due season."

"And so also from Jassy, we hear that there is a general and increasing demand amongst the Jews for the Judeo-Polish and German Scriptures. The majority of them are unacquainted with Hebrew: hence, those Scriptures which are printed in the vernacular tongue meet with the most ready sale, and the intercourse which your missionary has with these Israelites proves that they are becoming diligent in reading the New Testament as well as the Old. As the true principles of Christianity are better understood, and the objects of our Mission are brought before their attention, so we find that the prejudices of the Jews are shaken and subdued. They can, moreover, fully distinguish between the Protestant religion and that of the Roman Catholic Church, and the absence of picture and image worship operates favourably in gaining the confidence of those who are seeking after truth.

Thus not only in the Western world, but also in the East, Rabbinical Judaism becomes every day more powerless to resist the spread of the Gospel, and the Jews begin to look with anxiety and trembling to the future. After all, it must not be forgotten, that the work which we have already done is only a preparatory work. We have but thrown a little leaven into the mass, and our duty and privilege is to pray "that the breath of the Spirit" may breathe upon Israel, and that the "dry bones, exceeding many, and exceeding dry," may begin to stir in many valleys. We have only begun the work, and are not unconscious how many obstacles are in the way.

Encouraging Statistics.

Once more, it is encouraging to remember that the number of baptisms recorded in the register of the Society's Chapel in Palestine Place, amounts to 676, of which 44 have taken place during the past year; that 331 Jews have been baptized in the Protestant Church since the commencement of the Mission at Warsaw, many of whom are now the heads of Christian families, to say nothing of other stations. It is a privilege to have been permitted to instruct 624 Hebrew children in our schools, in London, and more than 7,000 in our schools in one single province, the Duchy of Posen, to say nothing of the schools at Jerusalem, Cairo, Bucharest, Smyrna, Constantinople, and other places. We are thankful that we can speak of 50 clergymen of our Church of England, who are of the House of Israel, and of at least three times that number, as engaged in the Protestant Churches, Universities, and Schools in Germany and other parts of Europe, as Ministers, Professors, and Teachers, all having learned to renounce the errors of Rabbinism, and been led to embrace that Gospel which they thus publicly bear witness to.

If we inquire concerning the number of those who are members of different Christian Churches, we find that it is to be computed in some places by hundreds, and in others by thousands. On Mount Zion above 100 are, or have been, members of our Protestant Church; a number small indeed compared with that which we are taught to pray and to hope for, but large enough greatly to encourage us in our labours, and large enough, we are thankful to say, to form the germ and the nucleus of a church which is composed of Turks and Mohammedans, Bedouins, and native Christians, who join the little band of Hebrew Christians in the worship of the Saviour of the world. In London, the number of Christian Israelites is estimated at 2,000, and, in Berlin, at 2,500.

But still we feel that the great question for us to ask is, "Have we been faithful as witnesses for God?"

If we knew nothing of any results, we might be quite certain that it cannot be in vain that we have circulated 61,620 copies of the entire Old Testament in Hebrew, and 167,034 copies of portions of the same in Hebrew and Jewish dialects, and 55,745 copies of the Hebrew New Testament, exclusive of many thousands of single books of the New Testament, and 1,039,655 tracts and other publications, besides those printed on the Continent.

If we could not speak of Hebrew Christian communities in London and Amsterdam, in Berlin and Warsaw, in Jerusalem and other places, we might be quite certain that when men of faith and prayer go, as our missionary brethren do, to the scattered tribes of Israel, who live in Palestine and Persia, in Egypt and Turkey, in Poland and Prussia, in Holland, in Germany, in France, in England, and elsewhere, the word of truth cannot fail to produce a blessing, the bread cast on the waters will be seen after many days.—Jewish Records, June, 1853.

OUR COLPORTEUR FUND IN ARREARS.

As our Colporteur Fund is now considerably in arrears, we would respectfully and urgently request our friends to make an effort to replenish it. It is impracticable to sustain our colportage system without the contributions of our churches generally, and if the system is to be extended, as it ought to be, the pecuniary means furnished by the benevolent must be correspondingly increased. We would be much obliged to pastors if they would bring the claims of the Board of Publication before their people, and request them to come up to our help. Is it not sufficient to inform them that we need at present their prompt and generous aid?

THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION IN NOVA SCOTIA.

We are gratified in announcing to our brethren the favourable and intimate relations which the Board of Publication has been able to establish with the Synod of Nova Scotia, and trust that the benefits of it will be reciprocal. At the recent meeting of the Synod on the 28th of June, the Rev. J. I. Baxter, of Onslow, read the report of the Committee appointed last year by the Synod, with a view to the introduction of the books of the Board, after which, the Committee was re-appointed with former powers, and "a very general expression was given of the amount of obligation under which the Church had been laid by the Presbyterian Board of Publication."

The Report has just come to hand, in the September number of "The Missionary Register of the Presbyterian Church of Nova Scotia," and we think a few extracts from it will gratify many of our readers.

"In presenting their First Annual Report, the Committee of Colportage embrace the opportunity of referring to the origin of the business intrusted to them, which is already assuming some importance amongst the schemes of our Church. In comparing our various schemes with those of other and greater churches, in Great Britain and the United States, we seem to be following in their wake almost unconsciously, and at a respectful distance. They have their Bible Societies, so have we; they have their Foreign Missions, so have we; they have their Domestic Missions, so have we; they have their Boards of Education, so have we; but they have also their Boards of Publication; and here the parallel ceases. We have nothing to correspond with this fruitful source of information for ministers, elders, and people. This deficiency was painfully felt, more especially, when other denominations were beginning to supply our lack of service, and light literature, and even infidel productions were coming in upon us like a flood, by private speculation. In reviewing our resources of men and means to supply this deficiency, they seemed inadequate to the work; yet the necessity was urgent and seemed to require that in this department we should take advantage of other men's labours in more extensive fields. An overture was therefore introduced into the Session of Onslow, which was duly forwarded to the Presbytery of Truro, and through them laid before the Synod last year, proposing a plan for raising a fund for the above purpose. In the mean time a correspondence was opened with various offices of Publication, to ascertain on what terms we could be supplied with books. Several liberal offers were made, but those from the Board of Publication of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, United States, were the most liberal; and their principles and practice being also most congenial and similar to our own, they were cordially accepted. Of their several offers, viz: a liberal discount for cash down, or a moderate discount with six months' credit, or a permanent supply and pay all expenses, if a Committee of Synod became responsible and managed local arrangements, the last was accepted as requiring no funds, and your Committee were appointed to carry it into effect.

Thus authorized, we immediately constituted and proceeded to business. Three colporteurs have been labouring diligently ever since they have commenced, excepting a short period when our supply in Nova Scotia was exhausted, and our orders unexpectedly delayed. Mr. Fraser, we believe, has been in every Presbyterian congregation, and indeed in every Protestant settlement in the Island, from East Point to Cape North. Mr. McLeod has been through all the congregations in the eastern section, excepting Antigonish, Guysboro, and Mabou; and Mr. Dickie has been through all the western section, excepting Shelburne and Yarmouth, which though distant, must not be overlooked. Their visits in the several congregations we may say have been universally well received, and their success in distributing books and tracts has not disappointed our sanguine expectations. The number of volumes put into circulation, or on hand for that purpose, is about 8000; a portion of which has been given to the poor, besides probably an equal number of tracts, of which is kept no special account. The prime cost of these at catalogue prices as charged to us, was about $3000; and so liberal were our employers that they advanced over one-half of this amount, or $1600 worth, before we were able to make any return. This was chiefly in order to get a good supply before the winter. This liability was reduced on the first of January to $1200, and on the first of April to about $1000, and is now probably not much over $800, which we think is near the minimum, as we find it will require about that amount either in hand, or under way, to keep the colporteurs constantly employed.

Should the Synod approve of our labour and continue our appointment, we have it in view to continue, and even increase and extend our efforts, till the influence of these religious publications be felt in the remotest bounds of our Church in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward's Island, and even Cape Breton and New Brunswick. The amount of good that would be effected by the blessing of God upon our labour in putting into circulation thousands and tens of thousands of such works as those of Alexander, Boston, Bunyan, Baxter, Calvin, Flavel, Edwards, Alleine, Miller, and a host of others, who being dead yet speak and aid the living messenger, we leave it to the Synod to contemplate. Surely this would be fulfilling the prediction, "Many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." This would be scattering the leaves of the tree of knowledge, which are for the healing of the nations. Again, the benefit to the clergy must be considerable, when the discount allowed them during the past year is about $40. This shows that they have purchased to about five times that amount. Finally, the benefit to the poor must be considerable, when the discount for libraries and gratis circulation has already amounted to about $100. Now it cannot be supposed that all these advantages can be enjoyed by us without expense somewhere, and we find it is at the expense of the free contributions of the Church in general, which supports the Board of Publication. They have allowed us the same privileges allowed to their own Church; but these privileges to the Church in general, and to the clergy, to libraries, and the poor in particular, they could not allow even to their own Church, were it not for the free contributions of the same Church, to the support of the Board. If, therefore, we are allowed the same privileges of the Church which supports the Board of Publication, is it but just and fair that we should in manner contribute our quota to the same object. Our attention is turned to this subject, by a letter from the Secretary of the Board, (Dr. Musgrave,) from which the following is an extract. 'The profits derived from the sale of the books is very far from being sufficient to meet the expense of colportage. We are, therefore, obliged to depend in a great measure upon the contributions of the benevolent. If the circulation of our publications amongst your people is deemed useful and beneficial, they will, we suppose, cordially aid us by their voluntary contributions. If this matter was fairly brought to the notice of the pastors and other officers of the churches, we think they would approve of it as reasonable and just.'"

BOARD OF COLPORTAGE OF THE SYNOD OF PITTSBURGH.

It is gratifying to learn that a number of the congregations of the Presbytery of Ohio are promptly responding to the recommendation of the Presbytery to raise certain sums toward the five thousand dollars proposed by the Synod to be contributed to the funds of the Board of Colportage. This is as it should be. The Presbytery simply regard this as a suitable method of equalizing a common obligation of the Church to itself and the community. It is not an arbitrary tax laid upon any, but a recommendation by which to secure an equitable distribution of an expenditure under the direction of an institution established by the Synod for the common benefit of all.

We also learn with much satisfaction that the congregation of Pisgah, though yet small among the tribes of our Israel, have contributed fifty dollars toward that fund. This is especially gratifying, from the fact that they were overlooked in the appointment by the Committee of Presbytery. They have been forward to bear their proportion of the fund, and more than their proportion.

Let other churches do likewise, and the Synod will hear at its next meeting that its resolution is something more than a mere resolution that produces no practical results.—Presbyterian Advocate.

WHAT PEOPLE READ.

A correspondent of the London Morning Chronicle gives an account of the sale of small periodicals from a shop in Manchester, England. After supplying a list of sixteen minor novels or tales, some of them of the worst description, which circulate at the rate of six thousand a week, he goes on to give an account of eight penny weekly publications, mostly of a corrupt moral class, which circulate among them five thousand in the week, and he adds: "The young people, of both sexes, in the families of the mechanic and the shopkeeper, are now habituated to a course of reading in which felony, forgery, adultery, murder, and all other crimes, are treated of as the common occurrences of life. The consequence is, that the minds of thousands are depraved by that very exercise which ought to improve them."—The Christian Age.

DEMAND FOR BOOKS.

Extract from a letter recently received from Texas.

There is another great disadvantage, and I do not know how long it may continue. We have no church—no preaching. The nearest Presbyterian preaching is twenty-five miles from us, at Austin. We have here at ———, a good population, and a thrifty town. I do think a Presbyterian minister here might do a great deal of good.

We are also sadly destitute of good books. If we cannot get preaching—if no man has courage enough to come to this destitute corner of the Lord's vineyard to cut down the weeds and sow the good seed, in what I think is promising soil, yet if we could only get books, we could live. No preaching—no books. It is too bad. It must not be. If you will make arrangements for me, I will endeavour to act as a colporteur to some extent.

EXTRACT FROM A LETTER RECENTLY RECEIVED FROM ONE OF OUR COLPORTEURS.

I have been attending a protracted meeting in the Rev. W. H. Mitchell's church in Alabama for three weeks. The church members have been very much revived, and some twelve or fourteen conversions have taken place. The work was going on when I left there. There is a work of grace going on in several Presbyterian churches in the Tennessee valley. What influence our books have had cannot be known until the great day of account. I have been over the ground scattering our books for nearly two years past. No doubt they have had influence on some. W. H. A.

From the Bible Society Record.

WHAT ONE BIBLE MAY DO.

A few years since, an ardent friend of the Bible cause was distributing the Bible in one of the counties in North Carolina. He spent from three to four months in the work of faith and labour of love, without compensation, save the satisfaction of doing good. In a very dark corner in the county, there dwelt an old man, the head of a considerable family, notorious for his wickedness and opposition to all that is good.

When he saw this gentleman approaching his house, he met him at the gate and said, "Have you got your Bibles?" The gentleman replied "Yes." With a loud voice, and in a stern manner, he said, "Don't bring them here. We are bad enough now, and if you bring those books, it will only make us worse." As the gentleman dismounted, his saddle-bags being filled with Bibles, he took them from his horse. The old man exclaimed, "Don't bring them into the house." The gentleman replied, "My Bibles must go where I go." After some parleying, he suffered him to bring them into the house, and set them by the door.

After dinner, the distributor exhibited the Bibles, and the old man exclaimed, "Why they are nice books! I don't know that they will hurt anybody. You may leave one; perhaps the old woman and children may read it." After the distributor left, the old woman read the Bible, and became deeply interested, and some of the children also. The old man, seeing the effect produced upon his wife and children, by reading the Bible, asked them to read it to him. They did so, and he became affected also. He sent for a minister to come and visit his family and preach to them. In a short time, the parents and several of the children indulged a hope of pardon and salvation through the Redeemer. They all made an open profession of religion, and united with the Church. There was no house of worship in a number of miles, and as the old man possessed considerable wealth, and now felt a deep interest in religion, he determined to build a church himself upon his own land. This he did. Many others now became interested in the subject of religion, a church was organized, and a preacher employed to preach once a month to the people. A great change has been produced, not only in the family first named, but in the whole community. Intemperance, the desecration of the holy Sabbath, and many other vices, have been abandoned; and a commendable interest in the cause of religion has taken their place.

What a change produced by one Bible! God's word shall not return unto him void, but it shall accomplish what he pleases; and prosper in the thing whereunto he hath sent it. M. S.

OUR NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE INFANT READER, or Easy Lessons in Reading for Little Boys and Girls. Pp. 107. 30 and 35 cents.

This will prove a very interesting and useful little book to those for whom it is intended. The lessons are short, the style is perspicuous and simple, and the matter both entertaining and useful. The beautiful illustrative engravings with which it abounds, will also greatly add to the attractiveness and usefulness of the Infant Reader.

REMEMBER LOT. By the Rev. J. C. Ryle, Rector of Helmingham, Suffolk. Pp. 53. 6 and 12 cents.

This is an admirable and practical discourse, eminently suited to the times, founded upon Gen. xix. 16, "He lingered."

The author shows—

I. What Lot was himself.

II. What the text already quoted tells you of him.

III. What reasons may account for his lingering.

IV. What kind of fruit his lingering brought forth.

After showing these things with remarkable ability and pungency, the author makes the following application:

"Let me speak a few parting words to all who read this little book, and especially to all who call themselves believers in Christ.

I have no wish to make your heart sad. I do not want to give you a gloomy view of the Christian course. My only object is to give you friendly warnings. I desire your peace and comfort. I would fain see you happy, as well as safe, and joyful, as well as justified. I speak, as I have done, for your good.

You live in days when a lingering, Lot-like religion abounds. The stream of profession is far broader than it once was, but far less deep in many places. A certain kind of Christianity is almost fashionable now. To belong to some party in the Church, and to show a zeal for its interests, to talk about the leading controversies of the day, to buy popular religious books as fast as they come out, and lay them on your table, to attend meetings, subscribe to societies, and discuss the merits of preachers, all these are now comparatively easy and common attainments. They no longer make a person singular. They require little or no sacrifice. They entail no cross.

But to walk closely with God, to be really spiritually minded, to behave like strangers and pilgrims, to be distinct from the world in employment of time, in conversation, in amusements, in dress—to bear a faithful witness for Christ in all places, to leave a savour of our Master in every society, to be prayerful, humble, unselfish, meek, to be jealously afraid of sin, and tremblingly alive to our danger from the world, these, these are still rare things. They are not common among those who are called true Christians, and worst of all, the absence of them is not felt and bewailed as it should be.

Reader, I give you good counsel this day. Do not be angry with me for plain speaking. I bid you give diligence to make your calling and election sure. I bid you not to be slothful, not to be careless, not to be content with a small measure of grace, not to be satisfied with being a little better than the world. I solemnly warn you not to attempt doing what never can be done, I mean to serve Christ, and yet keep in with the world. I call upon you, and beseech you. I charge you, and exhort you, by all your hopes of heaven, and desires of glory, do not be a lingering soul.

Would you know what the times demand, the shaking of nations, the uprooting of ancient things, the overturning of kingdoms, the stir and restlessness of men's minds? They all say, Christian! do not linger.

Would you be found ready for Christ at his second appearing, your loins girded, your lamp burning, yourself bold and prepared to meet him? Then do not linger!

Would you enjoy much sensible comfort in your religion, feel the witness of the Spirit within you, know in whom you have believed, and not be a gloomy and melancholy Christian? Then do not linger!

Would you enjoy strong assurance of your own salvation, in the day of sickness, and on the bed of death? Would you see with the eye of faith heaven opening and Jesus rising to receive you? Then do not linger!

Would you leave great broad evidences behind you, when you are gone? Would you like us to lay you in the grave with comfortable hope, and talk of your state after death without a doubt? Then do not linger!

Would you be useful to the world in your day and generation? Would you draw men from sin to Christ, and make your Master's cause beautiful in their eyes? Then do not linger!

Would you help your children and relations towards heaven, and make them say, "We will go with you?" and not make them infidels and despisers of all religion? Then do not linger!

Would you have a crown in the day of Christ's appearing, and not be the least and smallest star in glory, and not find yourself the last and lowest in the kingdom of God? Then do not linger!

Oh! let none of us linger. Time does not, death does not, judgment does not, the devil does not, the world does not linger. Neither let the children of God linger.

Reader, are you a lingerer? Has your heart felt heavy, and your conscience sore, while you have been reading these pages? Does something within you whisper, "I am the man?" Reader, listen to what I am saying; how is it with your soul?

If you are a lingerer, you must go to Christ at once and be cured; you must use the old remedy. You must bathe in the old fountain. You must turn again to Christ and be healed. The way to do a thing is to do it. Do this at once.

Think not for a moment your case is past recovery. Think not because you have been long living in a dry and heavy state of soul, that there is no hope of revival. Is not the Lord Jesus Christ an appointed Physician for the soul? Did he not cure every form of disease? Did he not cast out every kind of devil? Did he not raise poor backsliding Peter, and put a new song in his mouth? Oh! doubt not, but earnestly believe that he will yet revive his work within you. Only turn from lingering and confess your folly, and come, come at once to Christ. Blessed are the words of the prophet, "Only acknowledge thine iniquity." "Return, ye backsliding children, and I will heal your backslidings." Jer. iii. 13—22.

Reader, remember the souls of others, as well as your own. If at any time you see any brother or sister lingering, try to awaken them, try to arouse them, try to stir them up. Let us all exhort one another as we have opportunity. Let us provoke unto love and good works. Let us not be afraid to say unto each other, "Brother, or sister, have you forgotten Lot? Awake! and remember Lot! Awake and linger no more."

Varieties.

A Royal Bible-Distributor.—The king of Prussia, at his own expense, circulated 307,314 copies of the New Testament, and 2155 Bibles among the troops in his army from July, 1831, to May, 1849; they were printed in six different languages.

Rome and the United States.—The Pope has sent Cajetan Bedini, the Archbishop of Thebes, to visit the Government at Washington; and also to acquire the most exact information respecting the interests and condition of the Roman church in this country. This is the first Papal nuncio ever sent to this country.

Hindu Liberality.—The Rev. Dr. Scudder writes, that in October last, "a native of Calcutta, named Baboo Rammohun Mullik repaired last month to the common jail in Calcutta and released eighty debtors who had been confined under warrants from the 'small cause court,' by paying their debts to the amount of three thousand rupees."

Missions in China.—There were in December, 1852, six missionary stations in China, at which there are 81 Protestant missionaries; of these, 46 are from eight different American societies, 24 from five English societies, 4 from two German societies, 3 from one Swiss society, and one from a Swedish society. The London Missionary Society have 14 missionaries, the American Board of Commissioners have 12, and the Presbyterian Board 11.

Mendi Mission.—Mr. Brooks writes that he has become acquainted with a tribe of the Mendi nation, living back of the colony of Liberia, who observe the Christian Sabbath. "By visiting that colony, for the purpose of trade, they have received and carried the custom of Sabbath-keeping home with them, and now they say the whole tribe work six days and rest on the Sabbath. A violation of this rule is punished by fine. Two of this tribe have been with me a few days, from whom I learned these facts, and that the habit is so strong that neither of the men had missed their reckoning, although they had been travelling for many weeks among a Sabbath-breaking people.

A Model Church.—We have just received a donation of $100 from the church of Rev. Mr. Coan, at Hilo, Sandwich Islands, with a letter which we shall publish in the next Record. Mr. Coan says, this is a part of $2000 which that church has contributed to benevolent objects during the past year, and in course of which time 400 members have been added to that church. Surely there is encouragement to labour for the heathen.—Bible Society Record.

Revival in Concord, North Carolina.—A letter in the Watchman and Observer, of Richmond, dated August 22, says:

"Dr. Baker passed through Charlotte last Thursday night, and preached for us. He had just left Concord, where he had been preaching a week or ten days, and he said it was the most interesting meeting he had ever attended. There were a hundred and eighty inquirers. Of the conversions, three-fourths were men, among whom are some of the most influential in the community. A number of young lawyers are brought in, some of whom, it is expected, will turn their attention to the ministry."

The Scotch citizens of Boston have made arrangements to bring to this country, from Glasgow, Rev. Mr. Muir, one of the most talented and eloquent ministers of the Free Church of Scotland.

Portuguese Refugees.—On the 16th of August, the Free Presbytery of Glasgow held a very interesting meeting in the Presbytery House, for the ordination of M. H. Vierra as pastor over the Portuguese refugees in Trinidad. Mr. Vierra was educated in this country, and chiefly in Glasgow, and has served that congregation for a year or two as a missionary labourer. He returned to this country some time since, bringing with him a request, signed by ninety-seven members of the congregation, that he should be ordained as their pastor. A small congregation of the friends of the cause in Trinidad, and others, assembled. Mr. Bonar, of Renfield street church, Convener of the College Committee, preached and presided; and the usual services being ended, the ordination was completed, and Mr. Vierra received the right hand of fellowship, as minister of the Portuguese refugees in Trinidad. We understand that he sails immediately. The Portuguese, in the midst of their persecutions, struggles, and poverty, are collecting money to build a church.—Edinburgh Witness.

Conversions from Romanism.—The New York Observer says, that in Burlington, Vermont, there have been remarkable conversions to Protestantism, eight adults in one day having publicly disowned the Church of Rome. Two of this number were men of education, sent out as faithful missionaries to the States among the French. By many their lives are thought to be in danger. One of the number was conspicuous as a Bible burner, at Champlain, some years ago, who represents his conscience as being a tormentor.

THE HOME AND FOREIGN RECORD.

By the late General Assembly it was "Resolved, That it be recommended to all our pastors to endeavour to increase the circulation of the Home and Foreign Record, the organ of the Boards of the Church, in order that our churches may be better acquainted with their respective plans and operations, and be induced to contribute more liberally towards their support."

We would respectfully solicit the attention of our ministers and elders to this recommendation at the present time. There are also a number of our subscribers in arrears, and though no one owes more than $1.50, yet in the aggregate the amount is near $2000; and at present we have not funds to meet our expenses. We solicit the attention of our friends to this matter.

☞ All moneys sent at our risk; but those who remit will please have their letters registered at their post-office.

THE ADVANTAGES OF THE STUDY OF HISTORY: BY THE REV. ROBERT DAVIDSON, D. D., NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.

If entertainment is the object in view, we know not where a more healthy and rational entertainment can be found. It brings into play enough of thought to prevent stagnation, and to give a gentle fillip to the mind; while it does not tax the intellect so severely as the differential calculus, or some profound professional text-book. We may have been jaded by the toils of our daily occupation, but the perusal of "Robertson's Charles V.," or "Macaulay's England," acts as a refreshing restorative. "When I mix with the world," observed Voltaire, "I am subject to every man's humour; but when I enter a library, every man's humour becomes subject to me." "A chair in a tavern," said Dr. Johnson, "is the throne of human felicity." "He would have been more correct," remarked Dr. Rush, "had he placed that chair in a library. It is in this repository of the fruits of intellectual labour that we find an epitome of human knowledge. Here the historian informs, the traveller amuses, the poet delights, and the philosopher instructs us. Here, past and present time unite; here all the quarters of our globe, with their kingdoms and customs, are seen in miniature; and here we find an abstract of all the opinions and systems of knowledge that have ever existed in the world."

People must have amusement, especially the young. And it is of the last importance, that they should have such amusements as will relax without debasing them. The degenerate Romans demanded bread and games; the modern Romans are bribed with fireworks and illuminations; the Spaniard is never so happy as at a bull-fight, or a fandango; the Americans, have scarcely any popular amusements at all. Hence it is that in the dearth of innocent excitement, so many resort to low and sensual stimulants, and prepare for themselves a downward path of shame and degradation. But our very amusements should contribute to the encouragement of virtue, and furnish a rational mode of spending time, and relaxing the mind, without the aid of frivolty or vice. Such a rational, profitable, and elevating recreation we possess in history.

"Intent on high designs, a thoughtful band,"

Where can we find more varied or elegant entertainment than in the pages of Plutarch, or Froissart, or Robertson, or Carlyle's French Revolution, or Alison's Europe, or Macaulay's England, or Lamartine's Girondists, or Bancroft's United States? In truth, history may vie with poetry and romance in the thrilling interest of its revelations. Shakpeare diligently worked this rich mine in his historical plays, to which some, oblivious of the sources whence they were drawn, have acknowledged themselves indebted for nearly all their acquaintance with British annals! The student seats himself in his quiet nook, as the shades of evening close around, and other suns, long since set, rise again to view; "the famous dead" are evoked from their remote sepulture, and the panorama of the world's eventful progress silently unrolls before him.

"'Tis pleasant through the loop-holes of retreat
To peep at such a world; to see the stir
Of the great Babel, and not feel the crowd:
Thus sitting, and surveying thus at ease
The globe and its concerns, I seem advanced
To some secure and more than mortal height,
That liberates and exempts me from them all.
It turns submitted to my view, turns round
With all its generations; I behold
The tumult, and am still. The sound of war
Has lost its terrors ere it reaches me;
Grieves, but alarms me not. * * * * *
He travels and expatiates, as the bee
From flower to flower, so he from land to land;
The manners, customs, policy of all
Pay contribution to the store he gleans;
He sucks intelligence in every clime,
And spreads the honey of his deep research
At his return—a rich repast for me.
He travels, and I too. I tread his deck,
Ascend his topmast, through his peering eyes
Discover countries, with a kindred heart
Suffer his woes, and share in his escapes;
While fancy, like the finger of a clock,
Runs the great circuit, and is still at home."

We are not shut up to fiction. Truth has a novelty and an interest not a whit inferior. Were we permitted to visit another planet, how eagerly would we investigate its productions, its inhabitants, its laws, its manners, and customs! We would be absorbed in this occupation, to the exclusion of every other. But, in fact, the history of past generations of our own planet is hardly less new or strange, and may be made fully as attractive.

The sources of a river, the Niger or the Nile, have been investigated with the greatest eagerness. Why should there be less curiosity to trace the history of a nation to its fountain-head, and learn what influence the character of the progenitors had on that of their posterity! We are not restricted to the limited range of our forefathers. We have escaped from the dreary prolixity of Rapin, and the parliamentary abstracts of Smollet. Modern writers have found out the difficult art of blending imagination with reason. Robertson, Michelet, Lamartine, but above all, England's latest brilliant and fascinating historian, have sufficiently demonstrated that a volume of history may be made as interesting, and as much sought after, as the last novel. And why should it be otherwise? Imagination, well trained, is able to re-people the past, not with rigid, unimpassioned skeletons, but with warm, breathing, living men. It shows us the same human heart, with its susceptibilities, its deep emotions, its mysterious undertones, its faith, its enthusiasm, its strange inconsistencies, pulsating alike beneath the toga, the cuirass, the jacket, and the chasuble.

"The proper study of mankind is man;"

and it is the office of history to make us acquainted with our species, and show us all the varieties of the race, civilized or savage. Thus doth this Mysterioarch of the Ages revivify the past, solve enigmas, reconcile contradictions, and hold up the lamp of Experience to the dim and misty future.

Such are the elevated entertainments, such the pure delights which the muse of history unfolds before the youthful and observant mind, and which need not the false lights of fairy land, nor the exaggerations of as unreal romance to enhance their attractions. These are

"Cups that cheer, but not inebriate."

We do not rest our apologetics for the study of history upon the ground of entertainment merely; it claims respect for the rich instruction with which it teems. The sentiment which the sage of Halicarnassus dropped near two thousand years ago, has been endorsed by the wisdom of succeeding generations, and has grown to the dignity of a proverb: "History is philosophy teaching by example."

Instruction communicated in this way is very lively and impressive. Horace tells us that it was thus his father inspired his youthful mind with detestation of vice, and love of its opposite. The grave Senator, the spendthrift Albius, the profligate Trebonius, in turn were made the occasion of wholesome advice. But it is not always judicious, or safe, to make free with the names of contemporaries. It is more prudent to select illustrations from the storied page, "rich with the spoils of time." Let Phocion and Regulus, Aristides and Fabricius, continue patterns of integrity to the youth of future generations, as they were to our own. Let Alexander's drunkenness and Cæsar's ambition still "point a moral and adorn a tale." Let the Roman emperors illustrate the precariousness and corrupting influence of irresponsible power. Let Cincinnatus and Washington furnish examples of pure and disinterested patriotism. Let Arnold and like names, "whom 'tis unblest to mention," be the beacons to warn from a traitor's grave. Let Cornelia exhibit her jewels, and Cleopatra point her asp. Let Margaret of Anjou teach her own sex courage, and the fate of La Valliere confirm them in modesty.

Historical researches furnish a fruitful source of political philosophy of the profoundest and most practical sort. Once, battles, sieges, and the actions of kings, were thought the sole facts worth recording; and these were set off with all the beauties of style and the particularity of an amateur. Whatever concerned the masses were kept up in the back-ground as unworthy of attention; as in the wall paintings of Egypt, the king is magnified into a colossus, while his own and the opposing armies dwindle into pigmies. But those days are past. Wars now are viewed by the philosophical historian as blemishes and excrescences; subjects of regret, rather than admiration; occasional and insignificant trivialities, compared with the great sum of human destiny; retarding the progress of the human race, and putting further off the millennial era of universal brotherhood,

"The parliament of man, the federation of the world."

RESIGNATION OF THE REV. C. C. JONES, AND ELECTION AND ACCEPTANCE OF THE REV. G. W. MUSGRAVE, D. D.

Through the newspapers of our Church the readers of the Record have already been made acquainted with the resignation of the Rev. C. C. Jones, as Corresponding Secretary, at a special meeting of the Board, September 26th; and the election, at the same meeting, of the Rev. G. W. Musgrave, D. D., to that office. At the meeting of the Board, October 10th, Dr. Musgrave made known, in a written communication, his acceptance to the Board.

We state with pleasure that Dr. Musgrave will enter upon his duties on the 1st of November.

In this number of the Record we publish the letter of resignation, and the action of the Board thereupon.

MISSION ROOMS,
Philadelphia, September 26th, 1853.

To the President and Members of the Board of Missions.

Rev. and Dear Brethren—Before the meeting of the General Assembly in May last, I had concluded to resign my office as Corresponding Secretary of the Board, and to do so while that body should be in session; but upon the solicitation of friends, who were members of the Board also, and for reasons urged by them, which were of weight with me at the time, I was induced to postpone action in the matter.

At your first meeting after the adjournment of the Assembly on the 13th of June, you were pleased unanimously to pass the following preamble and resolution:

"Whereas, The health of the Rev. C. C. Jones, the Corresponding Secretary of the Board of Missions, has been greatly impaired by his close attention to the duties of his office, and great labour attending the faithful discharge of those duties; and whereas, it appears by the written opinion of his medical advisers, that it is absolutely necessary that he should have time to allow his system to recover from the severe shock it has received; therefore,

"Resolved, That Dr. Jones, the Corresponding Secretary of this Board, have leave of absence from the duties of his office for the term of six months, at his discretion."

Availing myself, in part, of your kind action, I have spent some five weeks in retirement and exercise, and have watched the effect upon my general health, and have also given the subject of my resignation renewed consideration; the result is, that I now respectfully tender to the Board of Missions my resignation as its Corresponding Secretary, to take effect on the 1st of October; or, as I do not desire to embarrass your operations, so soon as you may be able to elect and secure the services of an efficient and proper successor.

As you are entitled to know, so I frankly give you the reasons which have brought about this determination on my part. The first is the conviction, from three years' experience, that the necessary confinement to the constant duties of the office, and to the city, has been gradually impairing my constitution; nor can I reasonably anticipate, in holding on my way, any other consequence than a continuation of a decline in health; and, after reaching a certain point, perhaps a very rapid and irremediable decline. The confinement of which I speak has been more constant than I have ever before been subjected to, either as a pastor, or as a missionary, or as a professor, and the labour more unremitting. This statement may strike some with surprise; but I fully understand what I say. The office of Corresponding Secretary of the Board of Missions is no sinecure. Passing by the moral, the religious, the intellectual and social qualifications, which should be of the highest order, the office requires firmness of purpose, sleepless vigilance, business knowledge and habits, active, patient industry, and constant working. The Secretary, if he understands his business, and is a faithful, conscientious man, has no leisure to devote to any other pursuits than those of his office; nor should he, for that office "fills his hand."

Again, for many months past it has been the conclusion of medical gentlemen, whose opinions are entitled to the highest respect, that I should seek retirement and relaxation, and occupy some other position which would afford more opportunity for suitable and sufficient exercise, and the recovery of lost physical energy, and, through the Divine blessing, a prospect also of longer life and usefulness in the Church. And let me add, that to avail myself of six months absence, (considered by some of my medical advisers too short a period,) would, in all probability, but protract the day of my resignation, and not obviate its necessity; since, at the expiration of the six months, I might not be sufficiently restored to resume my duties; or, resuming them, I might, after a short term of service, be brought back to the condition I was in before. With so much doubt hanging upon the issue, I do not consider it advisable to make the experiment. Besides, I think it but an act of justice to the interests of the Domestic Missionary work of the General Assembly, that I should not. I know the relation of the Corresponding Secretary, as the chief executive officer of the General Assembly's Board of Missions, to the work; I know his responsibilities and his duties; what is expected of him, and how much necessarily depends upon him; and am convinced that his place is in the office. Nor can he be spared out of it but for a few weeks at most, at a time, without serious injury to the work over which he is called to preside. You are all as deeply impressed with this view of the case as I am; and we should be specially impressed with it at this moment, when, by the good hand of our God upon us, the Board is in a better condition for action than it has been for three years past; and our Church, perhaps, was never more generally awakened to the duty and necessity of enlarged and vigorous efforts for the advancement of the great cause confided by the General Assembly to our care. I feel, therefore, (however desirous I may be of doing all in my power to meet your wishes, and through Divine grace and mercy, make myself useful to our Church and country,) totally unwilling to jeopard the progress and prosperity of the missionary work by withdrawing from the active discharge of the duties of my office for so long a season, and so entirely as would be necessary to insure personal benefit. I am convinced the judgment of the Church itself will harmonize with my own as now expressed. Individual interests and preferences, cherished partialities and friendly attachments, must all yield to the general and higher interests of our Lord's kingdom. No man may serve himself, and no man may serve his friends, to the injury of that kingdom. I embrace the principle, also, that no man should continue to hold any office of responsibility in the Church, whose duties he cannot in person fully and successfully discharge; nor should he suffer his name to be connected with acts and doings, and he be considered responsible for the same, in whose origin and consummation he has had little or no hand whatever. The praises of wisdom and of success belong not to him, while in cases of serious error or failure, he will not be allowed to plead his absence in arrest of judgment.

I retire just at a time when the prospect of easier and pleasanter labours is opening before us, and when we have attained a tolerable comprehension of our duties, and some facility in their arrangement and discharge, and an extensive acquaintance with the field of our operations, and its numerous wants, and with measures most proper to be adopted and pursued, in order to wider influence and success. To say that I retire without regret, would be doing violence to my sincere love for the missionary work, so directly connected with the salvation of immortal souls, with the welfare of our Church, our country, and the world, and with the glory of our exalted King and Redeemer; and it would be doing violence also to my kind and respectful associations with you all, and to very tender associations with some of you in particular, my personal friends and brethren, beloved in the Lord. I trust my successor may find his connection with you, and with the Church at large, as agreeable as mine has been.

I beg leave, also, as a matter personal and most agreeable to myself, to express the uniformly pleasant association with, and the cordial and constant support which I have had in, the Brother who has been my Assistant; and my best wishes attend him for health, happiness, and success in his future labours. I would include, also, in the same expressions of kindness and confidence, the Treasurer of the Board, who has conscientiously and faithfully discharged the duties of his responsible office, and given me entire satisfaction.

And now that you have gone forward in execution of the high trust imposed upon you, and on the just and successful principles laid down by our fathers from the earliest times, for the conduct of our Domestic Missions—principles re-affirmed and sustained by the General Assembly, and approved and upheld by our Church with a unanimity as perfect and cordial as we may ever anticipate among Christian men in this world; I can but fervently wish and invoke for you, individually and officially, a continuation and fuller measures of your piety, prudence, and impartiality—of your kindness, judgment, resolution, and zeal; and also the undiminished and merited confidence of the Church, and the richest blessings of the God of our salvation. Respectfully and very truly yours in our Lord,

C. C. Jones.

The above letter having been read, the resignation of Dr. Jones was accepted, and the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, The Rev. C. C. Jones, D. D., on mature and anxious reflection, and impelled by considerations of health, has tendered to the Board of Missions his resignation of the office of Corresponding Secretary, which resignation has been accepted; therefore,

Resolved, That while appreciating the motives which prompt such resignation, and sympathizing with the Rev. Dr. Jones in his present trial, we desire to express our regret at the circumstance which renders such a step imperative.

Resolved, That Dr. Jones has earned our thanks, and the gratitude of the Church, for the able and faithful manner in which he has discharged the duties of his office, in connection with the Board, the proof of which is in its present prosperous condition, not a little of which prosperity is due to his fidelity to the important trusts committed to him.

Resolved, That by his consistent example he has greatly commended himself to our esteem as a minister of the gospel, and that, by his uniform courtesy as a Christian gentleman, he has greatly endeared himself to us, and that we follow him to his retirement with best wishes for the complete restoration of his health, and continuance of his usefulness; and with many prayers that God will bless him in all his relations in life, will ever have him in his holy care and keeping, and at last grant him an entrance into his everlasting kingdom.

MONTHLY REPORT OF THE BOARD OF MISSIONS.

Monthly Report of the Board, and Review for the first half of the year, six months, from April 1 to October 1, 1853.

We invite the attention of our ministers, elders, and members, to this Report, presented to the Board October 10th. It contains facts and statements which will encourage the hearts and strengthen the hands of all who are interested, and all who are labouring, in the work of Domestic Missions.

Mission Rooms, 265 Chestnut Street,
October 10, 1853.

I. MISSIONARY APPOINTMENTS.

We give the number commissioned and re-commissioned for six months, the first half of the year, from April 1st, to October 1st, 1853; comparing the number with the same period last year.

At the office in Philadelphia, 151.

For same period last year, 138; being an increase of 13.

At the office in Louisville, 98.

For same period last year, 75; being an increase of 23, and a total increase of missionaries of 36.

This is a gratifying increase thus far. There is a scarcity of ministers in our Church, and from the changes which are from time to time occurring—our churches going off self-sustaining, and our missionaries being called to self-sustaining churches—it is impossible to say at the close of the year, whether our register of names will be increased or diminished. Let prayers be offered and efforts be made for the increase of labourers in the vineyard of the Lord.

II. STATE OF THE TREASURY FOR SIX MONTHS.

1. Missionary Fund.—We give our receipts into the Treasuries in Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, and Louisville, (omitting the several Presbyterial Treasuries, which are in a favourable state,) for six months, from April 1st to October 1st.

Philadelphia,	$17,476 52
Pittsburgh,	2,686 59
Louisville,	5,123 91	—Total, $25,287 02

The receipts for the same period last year (1852) were $28,860.58; being $3,573.56 over what they are the present year. The loss in the Treasury in Philadelphia has been $5,142.82. The gain in the other two Treasuries, Pittsburgh and Louisville, $1,569.26, which gives a total of $3,573.56, as above stated, less income than the same period last year.

This deficiency has occurred in the two items of Miscellaneous Contributions and Legacies; in miscellaneous contributions $5,597.20, in legacies $3,068.32, making a total of $8,665 52. But we have had AN INCREASE FROM THE CHURCHES in Philadelphia Treasury of $3,994.02; in Pittsburgh, of $124.17, and in Louisville, of 973.77, making a total of $5,091.96; which, subtracted from $8,665 62, the loss in miscellaneous contributions and legacies, leaves the general deficit of $3,573.56.

Had our legacies in one office alone, the past six months, equalled the amount received in the same office from the same source, and for the same time, last year, this deficiency would have been more than made up.

This statement of our finances demonstrates two important facts. The first is, what we have frequently expressed—that we cannot rely upon miscellaneous conributions and legacies but to a limited extent, as a permanent income for carrying on our missionary operations. They fluctuate from year to year. But on the contrary, our reliance must be upon the regular contributions of our churches. Our Church in her organized capacity must sustain, as she is well able to do, all her schemes of benevolence. The second fact is most cheering in its nature; that this conviction is increasing throughout our bounds. And as an evidence of it, we have an increase in our receipts from the churches the past six months, (the more unfavourable half of the year for collections,) over the same period last year, of $5,091.96! Here is true progress; progress in the right direction, and it demonstrates an increase of missionary zeal in the churches. The cause of Domestic Missions is advancing. Let the churches go on, and it will be cause of gratitude and rejoicing at the meeting of the next Assembly, for the Board to be able to report, that the CHURCH HERSELF, IN HER ORGANIZED CAPACITY, HAS SUSTAINED HER DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

We trust our receipts from miscellaneous contributions and legacies will come up during the next six months so as to equal the amount obtained from these sources the last year.

The working balance which we had in the Treasury at the meeting of the Assembly, has diminished during the summer, but we are confident it will last until our fall and winter collections come in.

2. Church Extension Fund.

Receipts for the past month,	$542 00
Balance in the Treasury October 1st,	4842 83
Receipts for six months since April 1st,	2,145 03
For the same period last year,	2,394 58

deficit, $239.55. There is the same pleasing fact in respect to this fund that we noticed in the Missionary fund; namely, that the contributions from the churches are larger this year than they were for the same period last year, and the small deficit has been in miscellaneous contributions.

For the six months we have made appropriations to fifteen churches, and eighteen have been completed, and drawn the amount granted to them. The balance in the Treasury is entirely exhausted by appropriations to churches, and we are in pressing need of funds.

III. STATE OF RELIGION.

The reports from the missionaries of the Board generally do not indicate anything beyond an ordinary state of religion in their respective charges. There are a few exceptions. In some portions of our country, the Lord has poured out his Spirit, and we earnestly hope that his mercy may in like manner be extended to our missionary churches. The general dearth of Divine influence calls for self-examination on the part of pastors and people throughout our Zion. We mention with pleasure and gratitude that the visits of our agent, Rev. Dr. Daniel McKinley, to the churches in Pennsylvania, have been attended and followed with much interest on the subject of religion, and in several instances with encouraging revivals.

IV. MISSIONARY INTELLIGENCE AND NEW OPENINGS AND PROSPECTS.

Our present settlements from Texas to Minnesota were never in a more interesting state, nor have their wants ever been more urgent and extensive. The missionaries sent out by the Board recently, are employed in missionary work with encouraging success. The letters of these brethren from Texas, from Northern Louisiana, and from Arkansas and Missouri, give interesting details of religious meetings, of travels, of destitutions, of points for occupation, and the general religious condition of these frontier States. They cannot be inserted in this brief report, but will appear in the Home and Foreign Record, so far as our limited space in that paper will permit. There are several calls for missionaries to the negroes in Louisiana and Mississippi. A missionary agent has been suggested by the brethren in Iowa, and authorized by the Board; and one also in Wisconsin. Itinerant labours are greatly needed in those important States. We are happy to announce the fact that our missionary in Minnesota, Rev. Mr. Riheldaffer, has just returned from a collecting tour, and that his house of worship will be finished for occupation this fall, although it will not be entirely completed. He will be joined by another missionary who has just been sent out to the same field. The Board is desirous of sending still another missionary into Minnesota, and then, at the meeting of the next Assembly, the three may be set off and constituted the PRESBYTERY OF MINNESOTA. Our Church will thus lay her foundations in that Territory, and be preparing to advance westward, as our people flow onward and occupy the Nebraska country.

A missionary goes out this fall to California, and we hope that one of our gifted, energetic, and useful ministers in the South, will make California his future home, and the future scene of his labours. He will be a great acquisition to our Church in that State.

Recent accounts from Oregon are, on the whole, favourable. Brother Whitworth has, by this time, reached the Territory with his company. Our band of missionaries is increasing, and we trust our Church will, ere long, by God's blessing, be established in strength on our Pacific shores.

The great work of supplying our vast country with the Gospel of Christ, in which our Church, in common with other evangelical churches, is now so much engaged, is earnestly commended to the prayers and assistance of the people of God.

By order of the Board of Missions.

FROM A MISSIONARY IN LOUISIANA.

Great Destitution—The right spirit manifested.

Dear Brother—I know you expected to hear from me before this; but I wished to explore the field thoroughly before writing. I have been labouring in north-western Louisiana since the first of July, the place designated in my commission. When I arrived here, my intention was to remain quiet until the summer months had passed. But I soon found this was impossible, so great was the destitution in our Church, and the people were so anxious for preaching, that I could not think of resting. To make the matter short, you can form an opinion of what I have been doing, when I tell you that I have preached twenty-seven sermons during the months of July and August. I have ridden all over this parish, Bosher, Caddo, De Soto, and Brenville. In each of these parishes I find Presbyterians, who have long been without the gospel—men of warm hearts, and the spirit of Christ. In Claiborne we have three infant churches, organized recently by brother Ford. In De Soto we have two, one of them collected since my arrival. This last one is in Mansfield, the parish cite. I spent five days with the brethren there, preaching to a large and attentive audience. The Spirit of the Lord was with us. Three or four will unite with the Church at the first opportunity. I cannot describe my feelings to you at the close of our meeting there. The people of Mansfield had never seen but one other Presbyterian minister. Some of the members of our little band wept bitterly when I left them. Never did I feel so forcibly the magnitude of the work which ought to be done here. I pray that the Head of the Church may give me the will and strength to labour earnestly and faithfully in this long neglected field. Seventeen miles from Mansfield, there is another small band, organized by brother Ford, about six months ago. This church has but seven white members and fourteen or fifteen blacks. The two elders are men of some means, and of a liberal spirit, which they exhibited by building a neat frame church, and paying for it themselves. The church is not finished yet, but will be in two months. I preached for them the first Sabbath in August, in the morning, to a large audience of both colours, and in the evening to the coloured people alone. Yes, even here, in this new and wild country, we have slaves who are Presbyterians, and who love the Church as dearly as they do their own lives. I preached to them in the parlour of one of the elders. They were quiet, well behaved, and attentive. After service, they remained and sung a number of hymns; truly, it was sweet music. They "made melody in their hearts to the Lord." I cannot give you an account of all the places at which I have preached and continue to preach. But after a good survey of the field, and consultation with the most active of our members, I am prepared to say that the prospect is encouraging. If the men can be had to labour, Presbyterians must take a good stand here. Although everything is yet to do, more churches to organize, houses of worship to build, and the people to be instructed, yet there is much to encourage us. Our ministers are respected. The continued cry of the people is, "Let us have educated men to preach to us. We are worn out with this continued prattle of uneducated men, who always sing the same song." My field will, after the fall meeting of Presbytery, be Caddo Parish. We have not yet organized the new Presbytery to be called the North Louisiana Presbytery; but we have done something towards it. So far as we can see, at this time, the formation of the Presbytery depends upon my ordination; we must not fail. I hope the Lord may favour us in this effort to plant the Church firmly among a people long without the means of grace.

I wish to devote all my time to preaching the gospel. We need men all the time in the field. The cause demands it; and I hope that I am willing to do all in my power to establish self-sustaining churches here. J. E. D.

Another Appeal from Louisiana. Who will go?

"Permit me to say a word or two on another subject. Can the Board of Missions not do something for this destitute region? I don't mean in the way of money, but of labourers—devoted, hard working labourers. I never have been in a region so perfectly ripe for harvest. All are anxious to have the means of the gospel. There are very few professors of religion. There is a great deal of wealth and intelligence. The country is yet rather thinly settled, and some of it always will be, because of its belonging to so few wealthy planters. There will always be a very dense negro population, however, which will afford an interesting field of labour.

"Two or three ministers might be pleasantly and usefully located around where I am. The people at Monroe, the parish seat of Washita, an interesting little town of about 1200 or 1500 inhabitants, have just built a "pro bono publico" house of worship, and want some one to preach to them. There is no Protestant minister there and very few professors of religion, but nearly all Protestant-inclined. If the Board could send a man of the right sort there and support him for a few months, I have not the slightest doubt but that the Presbyterians would soon have a flourishing congregation.

"My friend ——, Esq., is wanting a preacher for his negroes. He proposes to give $500 per annum, and furnish a horse for the use of the preacher also. I mention this, that if you meet with any suitable man who would like to become a missionary to this needy class of people, you may send him on. R."

We shall be happy to hear from any brethren in the ministry, who feel disposed and moved by convictions of duty to enter the field, here presented by our missionary brother, who is labouring faithfully and successfully among the people in the region from which he writes.

THOUGHTS ON GIVING.

The intelligent Christian, acknowledging himself to be God's steward, will regard his possessions as a trust put into his hands for important uses. They are not to be misapplied, not to be wasted, not to be buried, but to be used. And the Christian contracts guilt who wastes his Lord's goods, who spends them in riotous living, or who hides them in a napkin. They are a deposit, made by the Lord, and subject to his draft. And whenever he, who is their real and rightful owner, calls for any portion of them, in order to carry on his work in the world, the faithful steward will not withhold them, but will "honour the draft."

The Lord never overdraws; for his demands are always proportioned to the amounts he has put into the steward's hands; of those to whom he has given much, he requires much, and he asks little of those to whom he has given little. "As the Lord hath prospered us" is the rule of giving; a just rule too—much from much, little from little, nothing from nothing. If he sees fit, as he sometimes does, to withhold prosperity from some of his people, no providential call to give is addressed to them; they must serve God's interest in this world in some other way.

Not only does the Lord not draw on empty treasuries, but he does not exhaust them by his drafts. Although all is his, yet he does not take all. Temporal subsistence and comfort are left to us. Capital for the prosecution of business, the gains of which are used, is left to us. Self-impoverishment would be poor husbandry. It is the mission of some to make money for the Lord's purposes. The servant that traded with his lord's money, and made gain thereby, was approved. Indolence and improvidence are not Christian virtues. "Go to the ant, thou sluggard, consider her ways, and be wise." He that, with an eye to the glory of God, improves his time and talents conscientiously, in labours of body and mind, will regard the fruits of his toil as the Lord's. Business talent and capital are given to some, to be employed by them for a lifetime, and only on the gains of them does the Lord issue his current drafts.

Neither may the Christian indulge caprice in selecting favourite objects. Each interest of God is to have its due share, and, in order to do this, no one must have more than properly belongs to it. In the tables of the Minutes of General Assembly, we like to see all the columns filled up, clear across the page. It shows congregations to be thoughtful of all the enterprises of our Church, and it looks pleasant. And I have no doubt, the accounts of individuals who are thoughtful of all the Lord's interests in their contributions, will look pleasant to them in that day when they shall give an account of their stewardship.

The frequency of calls for contribution is frequently complained of. I rather think that the complaints are more frequent than the calls. The complaints would be just, if the calls were not anticipated by supplies. But God does not draw on empty treasuries; if we have not received, he does not ask us to give; that would be "gathering where he had not strewed!" But if, in answer to our prayer, we have, "day by day" been crowned with his blessings, is it unreasonable or "austere" in him, to require, even daily, our thank-offerings, in acknowledgment of his bounties? "Freely ye have received, freely give."

I do not say that we ought to give at every call, but at every call of God. When any interest solicits our aid, it is proper for us to deliberate and judge. "Shall I give, or shall I not give?" is a pertinent inquiry for the Christian, and shows deliberation and conscientiousness. The motives for giving, and the reasons for it, are proper subjects of consideration. When he gives with judgment, it will "not be by constraint, but willingly" and cheerfully; and "the Lord loveth a cheerful giver."

EDUCATIONAL EXCURSION.

REPORT TO THE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

Having been invited by a Committee of the Synod of Wheeling to deliver an address at the inauguration of Dr. Scott as President of the Synodical College at Washington, Pa., I promptly accepted the invitation. As the excursion gave me the opportunity of visiting several of the institutions of our Church in Western Pennsylvania, I thought it might be interesting to the Board to learn something of their condition. My thoughts are somewhat in the form of a Journal.

Washington College, Pa.—On September 28th, I left Pittsburgh in the company of Dr. Elliott, with whom I had much delightful and profitable intercourse. We reached Washington the same afternoon, and were most hospitably received by brother Brownson. In the evening, I attended a meeting of one of the Literary Societies of the College, and enjoyed the performances which brought to mind college life at my own Alma Mater. Washington College, now under the care of the Synod of Wheeling, is evidently destined to a career of prosperity, with the blessing of God upon its plans. The endowment of $60,000, undertaken by the Synod, has been substantially completed through the labours of Drs. Scott and Chester, and the next session of the College will be opened on the scholarship basis. The friends of the institution are now aiming at doubling the endowment. This increase seems to be necessary to secure entire financial soundness of condition. The Rev. John Kerr has been appointed to undertake the completion of the good work. The inaugural exercises were witnessed by a large audience in the College Chapel, on the 20th ult. Addresses were delivered by Dr. Elliott, President of the Board of Trustees, by Dr. Scott, inaugurated President of the College, and by the Corresponding Secretary of the Board of Education. The subject of my own address was "the importance, nature, and extent of religious instruction in colleges." The oath of office was administered to Dr. Scott by the Hon. J. Black, Chief Justice of the Commonwealth. The good influence of Synodical supervision was never more signally exhibited than in the revived prospects of Washington College. The town of Washington is healthy, beautiful, and orderly; and is eminently adapted to a literary institution.

Dunlap's Creek Presbyterial Academy was the next institution visited. It is located four miles east of Brownsville, in Fayette county, and is under the supervision of the Presbytery of Redstone. It was commenced by the Rev. Dr. Samuel Wilson, an instructor after the good old order. The Academy is a large brick building, two stories high, with two large rooms on each story, erected at a cost of about $2000. The examination was conducted with tact and precision; and I was struck with the entire confidence the teachers had in the ability of their classes to stand any test ad aperturam libri. The two points about the Academy which appeared most prominent were, 1st. Accuracy of scholarship, founded upon thorough drilling and familiarity with rudiments; and 2d. the prompt, wide-awake, educational vivacity which pervaded the institution. The Principal, Mr. J. C. Power, is decidedly a man of note in his profession; and his assistant, Mr. Downs, bears a marked family resemblance. The Academy has about seventy students, and among them some youth of special promise. The subject of my address to the students and audience was "the characteristics of an old-fashioned education—its principles, its discipline, and its spirit."

Jefferson College. On Saturday, the 24th, I left brother Wilson, and rode to Canonsburg, thirty-five miles. In the evening I had a meeting for prayer, counsel, and exhortation with the candidates for the ministry under the care of the Board of Education. The young brethren are about twenty in number; they are highly esteemed by the Professors of the College, and without exception bear a "good report." On the Sabbath, I preached in the morning at the old Chartiers Church, about a mile from Canonsburg, where father McMillan, of precious memory, officiated in old times. In the afternoon, I had the privilege of addressing a large and attentive audience of students, on "the religious work of pious students in colleges;" and in the evening preached in the Chapel on a subject which had some adaptation to the young. At Canonsburg, I had much conversation with President Brown and Dr. Smith. Jefferson College is a valuable institution to the Church, and ought to be sustained by Presbyterians. In my judgment, its prospects were never better. The unfortunate juxtaposition of Jefferson and Washington Colleges, which are only seven miles apart, has always given rise to some jealousy, which has by no means subsided. Since the two institutions cannot at present be united, the true policy is to sustain both.

Alleghany Theological Seminary. On Monday the 26th, I rode to Pittsburgh with President Brown; and was met there by the Rev. Dr. A. D. Campbell, who drove me over to the Seminary, where I was to hold a meeting with the students at 4 P. M. The subject of my address was "the candidate warned and encouraged," in which I endeavoured faithfully both to probe the conscience and to administer healing truth. The students, notwithstanding the plainness of speech, listened with attention, and seemed to appreciate the importance of the subject. The prospects of the Seminary are good. The old number of students, about fifty, are expected to attend, and perhaps more. The number at Princeton having considerably decreased, I was led to expect a corresponding decrease at Alleghany. But the general diminution throughout the Church, which (with other causes) has affected Princeton, has not so seriously affected Alleghany. Indeed to retain the old number of students is, under the circumstances, a relative advance. The financial affairs of Alleghany Seminary are in a good state; and the two houses for Professors Elliott and Jacobus are nearly completed.

A Female Academy at Pittsburgh. At Dr. Campbell's beautiful mansion, a mile or two below Alleghany, the subject of a female academy was discussed by a clerical party, who enjoyed the hospitalities for which that country-seat is famous. The ministers present were McGill, Jacobus, Howard, Annan, and Conrad, with Dr. Campbell and myself. The subject had been talked over before, and had already elicited much interest. Brother Paxton has it much at heart. A public meeting to take initiatory measures is to be held at Pittsburgh to-night, (Oct. 6th.)

Blairsville Female Seminary. On the 27th, I visited Blairsville, where brother Hill has been instrumental in establishing a large female Academy. The number of scholars during the last term was eighty. The examination was well sustained, and exhibited much proficiency on the part of the young ladies; the class in Butler's Analogy, under the instruction of Mrs. Shepley, commanded especial attention. The Rev. S. H. Shepley is the Proprietor and Principal of the institution, and is assisted by his accomplished lady and other excellent teachers. In the evening, having been previously invited to deliver an address, I took for my subject "the true principles of female education, and our country as a field for their application."

Elders' Ridge Presbyterial Academy was the next and last institution I was enabled to visit. On the 28th I rode to Elders' Ridge, about fourteen miles north-west of Blairsville, where I found a beautiful brick academy, with cupola and bell; the first story is a large school-room; the second story is divided into two rooms for the two literary societies. The examination, when I arrived, was going forward in Horace. The Rev. Alexander Donaldson is Principal of the Academy. To him belongs the credit of its establishment; and a more successful enterprise was never undertaken within our Church. It is under the supervision of the Presbytery of Blairsville. The number of students for the year has been 113. One of the assistant teachers was absent at Court, and the other was sick, so that I had not a good opportunity of judging of their methods of instruction. The students, however, appeared remarkably well. In the evening an interesting and refreshing prayer-meeting was held. On the next day, the 29th, the annual exhibition took place. A procession marched from the Academy to the church, about a quarter of a mile. A very large concourse of people were assembled from the surrounding country, so that the building was literally crammed; pews, aisles, platform, window-sills, &c., being occupied to the utmost. The performances by the young gentlemen were all that could be desired; decidedly good. Very creditable music was discoursed at short intervals by a band of the students. At the close of the exercises I delivered an address before the two Literary Societies, on "The Common School and the College;" the subject having been suggested by the two leading objects of the Academy, which are to supply the common schools with teachers, and to prepare young men for college. I ought to add, that Indiana county, where Presbyterianism has an immense predominance, has now four flourishing Academies.

I shall close this Report by a few reflections, naturally suggested by the objects and incidents of the excursion:

1. The inhabitants of Western Pennsylvania form as noble a Presbyterian population, probably, as there is on the face of the globe.

2. The educational wants of that section have not been adequately supplied as regards academies. The tendency to improvement is, however, strong and manifest. Within a few years, several very flourishing institutions have been established, and the spirit that is abroad will soon occupy every prominent position.

3. The claims of the two Colleges, one of which is managed by a private corporation and the other by a Synod, threaten to produce divisions and alienations, which neither true religion nor sound policy can sanction. Where religion is definitely taught in a college, the mere fact that the institution is not under the care of the Church ought not to excite enmity. On the other hand, the determination of the friends of Synodical supervision to support and endow a college of their own, is perfectly lawful and innocent. This is a free country. As there are two sides to the question, let individuals and churches be left to their own choice. There is no reason why both Colleges may not flourish. The old rivalry between them, if duly moderated, will be healthful; but if allowed to take the form of open hostility, and to break forth into personal bitterness, the most injurious consequences must be experienced. May God watch over both institutions and "send prosperity."

4. Candidates for the ministry will, by divine grace, be multiplied by establishing good Academies. Already some precious youth, connected with the institutions visited, have been led on towards a preparation for the ministry by influences connected with their academical training.

5. How sweet and refreshing is ministerial communion! Never have I enjoyed, with more heartfelt delight, intercourse with my brethren in the Lord, than during this excursion. Memory has furnished many new and pleasant associations of men and things.

6. The slander, or carelessly conceived notion, that minister's wives are not generally suitable helpmates, has received on my late tour the most effectual refutation. Never have I come across more congenial, accomplished, pious, and ministerial wives than those of my brethren, who shall be nameless.

7. Educational interests are at the foundation of all other interests. The great subject of training up youth, from the cradle to the college and seminary, and of training them up on the principles of Christian nurture, has relations with Church and State, with home and country and world, of inconceivable magnitude. The Board of Education, as now organized, has a work before it which angels would love to be agents in carrying forward. Alas! my brethren, that we possess so little love, self-denial, perseverance, enterprise, large heartedness, and piety! Help, Lord; help the whole Church to sustain Education throughout the length and breadth of our borders!

All which is respectfully submitted.

C. Van Rensselaer, Cor. Sec.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

DECREASE OF CANDIDATES AND INCREASE OF MEMBERSHIP.

The deficiency of candidates is IN STRIKING CONTRAST WITH THE GENERAL INCREASE OF MEMBERSHIP IN THE CHURCH. Our communicants have advanced in ten years from one hundred and sixty thousand to two hundred and ten thousand. But where are the fifty thousand? What impression have they made on the increase of the ministry? None. They have scarcely prevented a decline. It is true all are not Israel who are of Israel; nor does the same amount of piety prevail in different periods of the same outward administration. If the latter were the case, an increase of candidates might be naturally expected with an increase of communicants. If our Church had 250 theological students, with 160,000 members, the rate of increase of the latter would give at the present time 310 theological students. And why are there only 240? Let our ingenuous youth answer before God for this decline of zeal for the sanctuary, on a comparison with past periods, and explain why ten years of additional privilege, and opportunity, and general increase, should witness diminished resources for preaching the word of salvation.

SCARCITY IN THE BAPTIST CHURCH.

Scarcity of Ministers.—Rev. T. F. Caldicott, in an appeal to the Baptists of New England, in behalf of ministerial education, makes the following statements:

1. There are now four thousand more Baptist churches than there are Baptist ministers.

2. The number of newly organized Baptist churches has for some two years exceeded the number of men ordained as Baptist ministers.

3. There never was a time in our denomination when there was such a demand for educated ministers as the present; but unless the number of students for the ministry be vastly increased, this demand cannot possibly be met.

EFFECTUAL PRAYER.

"Have poured out my soul."—1 Sam. i. 15.

She was in bitterness. She had wept sore, and she had fasted. But all had been of nought avail. Her adversary still provoked her, and the desire of her heart was yet unfulfilled. Again she will go up to the house of the Lord, and seek anew the fulfilment of her long proffered petition. And thither she goes, and while there, pours out her soul before the Lord.

She pours out her soul. How beautifully significant! Like some gushing crystal stream, long pent up beneath the earth's surface—long struggling and striving to be free—at length bursting its barriers, pours itself like a flood around; so, just so, her struggling—striving—woe-embittered spirit, throwing aside every barrier and restraint, poured itself out before its God. How many Christians pray, but O, how few Christians pour out their souls before God. Before we can expect a blessing upon Zion—before we can expect a blessing upon our own souls—we must first learn to pour out those souls before God. Much is implied in the expression; and

1st. An insatiable longing for the thing we request. The publican's was no half-framed desire. The jailor's cry to be saved, was one of terrible anxiety, and most unutterable desire; and poor Hannah's soul almost broke for the longing it had. The Psalmist in his prayer, was no stranger to this longing, so essential to the fulfilment of the Christian's petition. How beautifully he describes it. "My soul waiteth for the Lord," says he, "more than those that watch for the morning." "Yes, the poor fagged-out and weary sentinel, who the live-long night has paced the battlements of my watch-tower, longs not more for the breaking day, than I long, O Lord, for Thee." O! if all Christians had such a longing, what a pouring out of souls there would be; and what a pouring out of God's blessing, too, upon those souls in return! And it implies, too, something else. It implies

2d. A firm confidence in God. A confidence both in his ability and willingness. It is not upon the shifting sand that the gushing stream pours out its most copious flood, but where it has the everlasting rock for its channel and support. And so it is with the soul. It must feel that it has that whereon it can firmly base its hopes and desires, before it will throw open its flood-gates, and pour forth the full tide of all its wants and woes. David calls God a "rock"—a "strong tower"—and because he is such, able to defend, and ready to shelter, "therefore, ye people," he says, "pour out your souls before him."

Here, then, we have the two essential elements of the effectual prayer—the prayer that availeth much. So Hannah longed, and trusted, and prayed. So the Psalmist, in his time, tells Christians to long, and trust, and pray; and so must Christians now, pour out their souls before God, ere they may hope for his blessing upon their souls—or the souls of those around them.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION
IN SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

EBENSBURG PAROCHIAL SCHOOL, PA.

The following is the first Report of a new parochial school, founded by the Session of the Church at Ebensburg, Cambria county, Pennsylvania. The Rev. R. S. Morton is pastor of the church. We are glad to learn that a beginning has been made, under favourable circumstances.

The session of the Presbyterian Church of Ebensburg present the following report to the Board of Education.

The exercises of the school commenced about the first of June, and this day closed a session of four months. The school has been taught by Miss Nancy C. Barnett, who is a member of the Presbyterian Church, in full communion.

All the exercises in the school have been under the direction and control of the session of the church.

The religious exercises of the school are,

Reading the word of God, singing his praise, and prayer, at the opening of the school each morning; and reading the Scriptures at the opening of the afternoon exercises.

In addition to which, the Shorter Catechism is recited by all the pupils capable of learning it, on Monday and Wednesday mornings of each week, and the primary Catechism is taught at the same time to the young pupils. A rehearsal of all that has been learned during the week, by all the pupils, takes place on Saturday.

The branches of literature taught are such as are taught in the best schools, rating no higher during the present session than Grammar, Geography, Arithmetic, and Algebra. But we purpose, as occasion may require, to introduce all the branches of a sound and substantial English education.

The number of pupils on the roll during the session is forty—the average number in attendance, twenty-five. The average number for the last two months, thirty. Of these, thirteen are not connected with the Presbyterian Church, and two are the children of Roman Catholics.

FORT WAYNE ACADEMY, INDIANA.

The Rev. J. Edwards, of Fort Wayne, Indiana, writes as follows:

"I have now transcribed the Basis and By-Laws of the Fort Wayne Academy, not knowing that they will have the least value in your sight, except to certify you that for the present at least it is sound. Such is the unhappy crudeness of Indiana legislation that we can count (legally) only upon the present. A change in the mind of the stockholders may effect at any time a change of the entire basis. But for the present we feel secure. The present stockholders honestly aim at securing a 'sound, liberal, and Christian education' for their youth."

LEGAL BASIS.

To all to whom these presents shall come, Greeting:

Be it known that the undersigned have associated, and they do hereby associate themselves together, for the purpose of founding, endowing, and maintaining in or near the city of Fort Wayne, an Institution designed to promote sound, liberal, and Christian education.

And for the greater assurance that this shall ever continue to be the aim and character of this Institution, the undersigned, its founders and original stockholders, do declare that the appointment of Teachers in this Institution by the Board of Government thereof, and the course of study prescribed by the same, shall be submitted to the inspection and approval of the Presbytery of Fort Wayne; said Presbytery being and continuing in connection with the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States: And in default of said connection, or in default of said Presbytery accepting or continuing such oversight, then it shall be subject wholly and for ever to the Board of its Trustees appointed according to law.

The Institution of Learning thus constituted and characterized shall be styled the Fort Wayne Academy.

The funds and possessions constituting the endowment of this Institution, exclusive of its Tuition fees, shall be derived from subscriptions, donations, bequests, or scholarships, as may at any time seem expedient or practicable to the Board of its Trustees.

The whole amount of endowment proposed to be secured from all these sources, exclusive of Tuition, is not now intended to exceed Ten Thousand Dollars.

The whole amount now due or donated to this Institution, does not exceed Fifteen Hundred Dollars.

Stock in this Institution shall be divided into and represented by shares of Twenty Dollars each.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,
No. 23 Centre Street, New York.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

Mission House, October 12, 1853.

India.—Letters have been received from the Lodiana station from Rev. J. Porter of the 27th, and from Rev. A. Rudolph of the 30th June, and from Rev. J. H. Morrison, of the Lahor station, as late as the 8th July. Mr. Porter speaks of an interesting work of grace going on at a place called Rawalpindi on the Jilham, about half-way to Peshawar from Lahor, where as many as sixty-one persons had openly renounced idolatry, and were now desirous of being instructed in the principles of the Christian religion; and this work is the more remarkable, inasmuch as there is no missionary station in a hundred miles of the place. Mr. Porter asks, therefore, with great emphasis, "who will come and break unto this people the bread of life." Mr. Rudolph writes that a young Hindu, by the name of David Wells, who was educated at Lodiana, and also had been employed for some time as a Scripture reader, was extremely ill with pulmonary affection, but was in a most happy frame of mind. Mr. Morrison mentions the conversion of two Mohammedans, of whom a more particular account will be given in a subsequent number of one of the missionary journals.

Africa.—A letter has been received from Rev. J. L. Mackey of the Corisco Mission, of the 22d June. He gives an account of a journey he had recently performed, accompanied by the Rev. Mr. Preston of the Gaboon Mission, to the mountains near the source of the Muni river. They ascended a branch of the Muni that had not been previously explored, and after following it up as far as it was navigable, crossed over the first spur of the mountain on foot, but were prevented by the natives living in that part of the country from proceeding farther. The opposition made by the people was nothing, Mr. Mackey thinks, but what might have easily been removed, if they could have remained with them a few days; and he apprehends no difficulty from this source when he shall be prepared to renew the journey. He penetrated to the distance of eighty-five miles, and ascertained that the journey over the mountain would be about a day and a half, when he would emerge into an open country densely populated. "I am well satisfied," he says, "that we shall be able to push forward faster than the men will be here to occupy the ground. We have the fairest prospect of finding a populous, healthy country, that can be reached and opened up to missionary effort. Let us have a few enterprising, energetic men, and with the blessing of God upon our efforts, a field will be opened up of the greatest extent and promise. In the meantime we must have Corisco well manned. Here our main educational operations must be carried on, and here, for a time, must be our head quarters." Mr. Mackey also speaks encouragingly of the health at Corisco. Mr. McQueen continues his labours, both in teaching and preaching, without any interruption from ill health. He adds further, that Mrs. Mackey had not been kept out of her school a single day from sickness since her arrival in the country, now more than a year and a half.

Indian Missions.—Letters have been received from Rev. H. Balentine of the Chickasaw Mission, dated 31st July, from Rev. S. M. Irwin of the Iowa and Sac Mission, and from Rev. William H. Templeton of the Creek Mission, of the 18th August, and from Rev. William Hamilton of the Otoe and Omaha Mission of the 16th September. Mr. Balentine speaks of the good health of all the members of his station, and expresses the hope that the number of pupils in the female school at Wapanucka would be increased to one hundred by the 1st October. Mr. Irvin complains of the difficulty of securing suitable assistants for the missionary work, but gives an interesting account of the routine of duties performed by the missionaries who are on the ground, which will be published in full in one of the future numbers of the missionary journal. The missionaries at this station do not witness all the results from their labours, which they would like to see; but when they compare the character of the people, who have been under steady instruction, with those who have kept themselves entirely aloof from the preaching of the gospel, they feel that a decided impression has been made, and are encouraged to persevere in their labour of love. Mention is made in Mr. Templeton's letter of the safe arrival of Mr. and Mrs. Byers and Miss Stanislaus at the Kowetah station.

Irish Mission.—Mention is made in the August number of the Home and Foreign Record, that the Rev. Thomas Warren of the Presbytery of Baltimore, and formerly pastor of the Aisquith street Church, had been appointed a missionary to the Roman Catholics in Ireland. He embarked for that field on the 2d of July, and a letter has been received from him, from Belfast, dated the 4th of August, in which he mentions his safe arrival, and his cordial reception by the brethren of the Presbyterian Church of Ireland. He had not at the time he wrote, determined upon the field of labour which he would enter, wishing to have further conference with Dr. Edgar and others on the subject. It is probable, however, that he has selected his field and entered upon his labours before this time.

Departure of Missionaries.—On Monday the 19th of September, the Rev. John L. Nevius of the Presbytery of Rochester City, and Mrs. Nevius, sailed from Boston in the ship Bombay, for Ningpo, China.

On the same day, from New York, in the barque Gem, Captain R. E. Lawlin, the Rev. Edwin T. Williams of the Georgia Presbytery, and Rev. William Clemens of the Presbytery of Washington, and their wives, for the Corisco Mission, Western Africa. Previous to the sailing of the brethren for Africa, a farewell missionary meeting was held in the First Presbyterian Church in the city of New York, on Sabbath evening the 11th of September, at which an address was delivered to the missionaries by the Rev. J. Leighton Wilson, one of the Secretaries of the Board; after which addresses were also made by the missionaries. The audience was large, and the religious exercises were solemn and interesting.

The former of these companies of missionaries will be more than three months on their voyage, and the latter more than two. They both go to distant, but promising and interesting fields of missionary labour, and are earnestly and affectionately commended to the prayers of the Church.

INDIA: AGRA MISSION.

JOURNAL OF THE REV. JOSEPH WARREN.

During the journey which I have recently made, I have written and sent to the Record two articles relating to particular places. My intention was, not to send a journal, but rather to seize upon any things that might seem more especially worthy of notice, and present them separately. But now that the journey is ended, on looking at that part of it which was in the hills, I find that I cannot well give a view of it as a whole, and that it will be better to attempt to carry those who may do me the favour to read my articles along with me.

After I arrived at Landour the weather became very stormy. Mr. Woodside and I had determined to make a preaching tour in the hills, but we were detained many days, partly by his business, and partly by the rain. The Lodiana Mission had recommended him to travel in the interior for his health, as well as to attempt to carry the gospel to those who might have no other opportunity to hear it. The Agra Mission had thought that it would be profitable, in both these ways, for me to join him, and had accordingly authorized me to do so. I began to be weary of the detention; but at last the weather changed. On the 27th of April we made our first march.

The march was a short one, and the halting-place not near a village. We took a walk after dinner, and went down into a valley, to a brook. On the way we found five or six of the hill people, and sat down with them, and explained the doctrine of the cross to them as simply as we could, and as long as they would hear. They said they had far to go, and could wait no longer. The road to-day was not severe, and the life so far seemed to be a pleasant sort of gipsying affair, rather than laborious.

April 28th.—Rose early, and climbed the first hill on the road by moonlight. Went to a village a little way from the road, and preached to all the men and boys who were in it, for about half an hour. Forward, and did the same in another village, where we bought some wheat meal for the people and ourselves. Went on to a third village, and got permission to sit in the shade outside a house. Here we had our breakfast prepared. While waiting for it the whole village crowded around us, and we talked to them about the gospel a good while.

The people of these villages seemed very ignorant. They appeared to be afraid of us in some respects. At first they stoutly maintained that they had nothing to sell; but when they saw us begin to pay money for meal, they began to bring it freely from all their houses for sale, and we heard several hand-mills commence operations. We found a man who said that a neighbour, who was absent, could read Hindi, but he would not take a book, which we wished to leave for him. Another man said that his son, who was also absent, could read well; and after some persuasion, he allowed us to leave some tracts for him. But just before night he came to our tent, a distance of at least three and a half miles, and over a most tiresome road, to return the books. He said that Mr. Woodside had told him that he would make inquiry, on his return, whether they had read and understood them, and that the whole village were frightened at the idea of such an inquiry, and were persuaded that if their knowledge did not give satisfaction, they would be punished in some way. We could not persuade him to keep the books. He then made a demand for a few coppers, which he said one of our hill-men had run off with without paying. But it happened that both of us saw the money fully and honestly paid. We set out with a rule that everything should be paid in our presence, to avoid disputes of this kind. After he found that the case was going against him, he said that his honesty in bringing back the books, when he found that they could not be used satisfactorily, ought to cause his story to be believed. The fact is, he thought in this way to make us believe his falsehood about the money, and it was this that caused him to take all that trouble, and give up the tracts.

About noon we left this third village, and went down into the valley of the Jumna. We thought we should have a good deal of shade on the road, but were disappointed; the sun beat upon us with constantly increasing fury, as we left the elevation of the hills. The road was the sharpest ascent which I had ever attempted; it turned sharply to the right and left, forming a zig-zag; it was fully three miles down, and so steep that we had to go on foot; the horses slid frequently; I had to plant my foot carefully, in order to prevent a disastrous slide. I reached the river at last, feeling that I had never before exerted myself physically to the same degree. How grateful it was to sit down, and find plenty of water! We then went to a shady ravine near by, where was a brook, that ran into the Jumna below. Here was a pretty waterfall, which had hollowed out a kind of amphitheatre in the rocks, at the bottom of which was a beautifully clear pool of water. In this place we spent a great part of the afternoon, sitting with our feet in the water. The tent was set up on the bank of the Jumna, and we spent the night there.

The Jumna, at this place, was a stream about forty feet wide, running very rapidly over a stony bed, probably falling four feet in every hundred. It presented every appearance of being a raging torrent thirty feet deep in the rains. There is an iron suspension bridge over it, built by the Government. The hills on both sides are precipitous, leaving only a narrow patch of bottom land here and there.

We found a solitary hill-man living here, who looks after the bridge. We talked to him about Christ.

April 29th.—A severe morning march up from the Jumna. In many places the road was too steep to ride. When our breath was much expended, we took hold of the horses' tails, and made them assist us. After ascending, we stopped at a pretty large village, the name of which I forgot to record. There was a large two-storied temple here, and close to it a three-storied public building, the lower story of which was a kind of store-house for the temple, and the upper stories empty, and used as sleeping places for strangers. The temple is one of Siva, containing only the usual ling. This god, called in the plains Mahádeo, [the great god,] is here, and wherever we went in the hills, called Mahásoo—the last syllable being doubtless a corruption of Shiva, or Siva. The temple stood in the middle of an oblong court, with houses on two sides belonging to the temple establishment, which seemed to be numerous. In the shade of the temple we had our breakfast cooked, and our little table set out. There we talked a long time to the assembled villagers about Christ. Afterward we spent part of the day in the strangers' apartments, talked again to the people, and dined.

By the side of the large temple was a very small one, with an image of Kalee, all smeared with the blood of kids that had been offered to her.

In the course of this day, an old woman belonging to the temple dressed herself up in all her absurd finery, and offered to dance before us. We gave the people to understand that we did not like to encourage bad women. They told us that in this part of the hills there were no such women; and that though none but bad women dance in the plains, here respectable women do so, before idols and at weddings. However, we still declined to encourage the thing, because they intended the dance to be in honour of the idol; otherwise we would have witnessed it, in order to see as much as possible of their manners and customs.

A singular exhibition of spiritual vanity and desire of applause to-day. Our coolies made an offering to Mahásoo, and boasted to us that they had given twelve and a half cents each—a large sum for such a purpose. When we mentioned this to the people of the temple, they replied, with indignation, that all our people together had given three cents, and wished for the credit of a large donation. Poor human nature is the same everywhere. After dinner marched again, and talked at another village.

April 30th.—At half-past seven this morning we found a shady place, and a spring of water running across the wood, but we thought it too early to stop for breakfast, and hoped to find a village by going farther. But we were miserably disappointed; found no village and no spring till we had completed the whole day's march. Got breakfast at one o'clock. Here, by incautiously sitting in the wind without a neckcloth, when heated, I took a cold in my throat, which afterwards gave me much annoyance.

May 1st—Sabbath.—Remained in the same place to keep the Sabbath, and very welcome it was as a day of rest. No town near enough for us to visit; but several people came to us, to whom we talked and gave books.

We had milk and other provisions from the people of this town, and the headman has impressed himself on my memory as the most avaricious man I have ever encountered. After we had paid the full usual price for all that we had obtained through him, and given him a small present for his attentions to us, he began to question us as to how much more money we would have given him had we not given the people books; and offered to gather up and return the books, if we would give him the very smallest sum of money. He complained because we had paid for one article to the man who brought it, saying that it ought to have gone through his hands, in order that he might have secured a part of it. When we expressed some contempt at such extreme cupidity, he said he saw no reason for it; money was the highest good—and "Oh, how I do love money!" came out with an emphasis and unction that would have been the best of all possible reproofs to some close-fisted Christians at home.

Our last march was very pleasant, the road running mainly along a ridge of land. We had frequent views of the snowy range, standing up sharp and glistening against the clear blue sky. In the valleys below us on either side there was a great deal of cultivation, and many villages, but all too low down for us to reach them. This region would afford a good field of labour for one who could spend a month here, and take time to visit the villages.

May 2d.—Marched over the Deobun mountain. After passing the summit found a fine sloping valley, with grass and water, where we had breakfast prepared. Rested here after the sharp work of climbing the mountain. In the afternoon we descended a part of the hill. Our road lay through groves of splendid pines, many of them at least a hundred and fifty feet high, and as straight as an arrow. Passed patches of snow, and stopped to put our hands in it. We had a severe descent of about two miles, and encamped near a village. Spoke to the few people whom we could find. We happened to touch a small conical stone, which was lying on a large rock near the border of a field, and one of the villagers immediately cried out against us, that we had desecrated his god, and that it would cost him a goat to atone for our transgression. We declined to pay for the goat, and advised him to seek a different object of worship.

The village near us is named Kachánoo. We here found the first apricot and walnut trees.

May 3d.—On the march Mr. Woodside preached in the village called Bundrowlee. I was too hoarse to assist him much. In the evening reached a place called Shilowra, where the same thing occurred.

During this afternoon's march, we came in sight of the Tounse river. This is one of the tributaries of the Jumna, and quite as large as that river where we crossed it. Our first view of it was gained on rounding the shoulder of a high mountain, when the valley, with a large nice village and a great amount of cultivation, opened upon us through a shower of rain, on which the sun was shining. Our elevation was such that not the faintest murmur of the vexed stream below reached our ears—while we could trace the white foaming torrent for a long distance. Here, as in many places, our road was a narrow cut, from two and a half to five feet in width, in the side of the hill, while there was a clear slope below us, apparently clear down to the river, appearing as if a person once started would roll without remedy a mile and a half to its rocky bed. There is something exhilarating in these mountain paths; but not till after one's nerves get used to them.

May 4th.—Descended nearly to the Tounse river, and halted for breakfast on a shady shelf of rock. There was a village high on the hill above us; but the path to it was practicable only for goats and hill people.

After breakfast went down to the river and bathed. The bridge is made of wood. Pine logs were fastened firmly into stone piers—the lowest tier of logs projecting but little way over the stream, the next farther, and so on till the space at top became narrow enough to be covered by long timbers, on which the plank road-way was laid. It was rude enough, and the logs on one side had sunk considerably, giving a great appearance of insecurity to the whole. The piers were not of masonry, but were stone walls bound together by timbers, and filled up with clay and stones.

Told our servant, who went forward with the tent, to pitch it at the first village; but he went on to the third, and we could not overtake him till it was becoming quite dark. The ascent from the river was very hard to surmount—we were tired and hungry—got our dinner at 9 o'clock in the evening—thus being deprived very nearly of all opportunity to preach to-day.

May 5th.—Marched in the morning from Mandhour to Tikree. Here we found a village on the top of a ridge, with a temple and very small lodging house with open sides. Rested part of the day and preached a good deal.

The architecture of this region is peculiar. The roofs are like the top of a tent: flattish towards the eaves, becoming more steep as they ascend, and ending in sharp points at the top. Around the eaves hangs a fringe of turned wooden pins, fastened loosely on nails, so that they swing in the wind and rattle against each other. The architecture is decidedly Tartar, or Chinese, rather than Hindu.

Forward to Pientra, crossing two small streams, and consequently having a great deal of down and up. Reached the tent late, and dined at near 10, P. M.

May 6th.—Could not leave this beautiful valley without proclaiming the good tidings to the people, and therefore did not march. Mr. Woodside preached, and I was obliged to be nearly silent on account of my throat. This is the most delightful place we have yet seen in the hills. There is a long slope of a mile and a half up from the little river which we last passed, towards which, a little stream runs through the whole slope. The land is all made into wide shelves or terraces, and the water from the brook is carried over it all, in small streams, just when and as much as the people please. The land falls just enough to make all this easy. The fields were delightfully covered with wheat, and rice was being transplanted into beds covered with water. There is one main village, and three or four clumps of houses are scattered about. There is such an air of quiet, security and prosperity about this little place, that, were medical attendance to be procured, I would like to live here. Would it not be possible to send a medical missionary and some one of our invalid families to such a place?

In approaching this village we were passed by a party of young men and boys before we crossed the river. They came armed with spears, knives, swords, and hatchets. They were perfectly civil. Before our road crossed the river they forded it, and were joined by some others; and when opposite to us they set up a howl and brandished their weapons, going through with some steps of a dance at the same time. We had all reason to believe that they meant nothing but to show themselves off; and very glad we were of it. They would not have been a very pleasant party to encounter had there been any thing more serious in it. They had been at a wedding. It is a custom in this part of the hills for the young men of several villages to attend, a wedding armed, and exhibit their agility and skill, as a part of the entertainment. The young women, or at least a selection from them, attend, dressed in their best, and dance for the amusement of the company. A day or two after this we met some young women going to such a place. They were dressed in complete Bloomer costume. Alas! inventions of our own, which we conceive to be quite original, have often been known long before.

About 11 o'clock we left this place, and marched to a brook, where we spent a part of the day, and afterward went on to a place called Ohhipál. A large temple, a police station, a shop of sundries, a government dispensary with native doctor, and several ordinary houses, made up the village. The elevation must have been considerable, as the cold was a serious annoyance. We talked to all the people whom we could get together, and left some books. The greater part of the people showed the greatest degree of indifference to our message.

The road here is much wider than on the other side of the Tounse; but the severity of the ascents and descents is not much less. We had hard work this afternoon. The people have evidently had more intercourse with Europeans, in some respects to their great advantage, and in others not.

May 7th.—Our first halting place was called Pathar Nala—a very pleasant place, but near no village, nor did we pass any on the road. This place is reckoned one of the usual stages; but as the day was Saturday, and we did not wish the Sabbath to be a day of idleness as well as of rest, we marched in the evening to the next village that was near the road, the name of which was Udai. We found our tent pitched near the village. A beautiful watercourse brought down a stream for the irrigation of the fields, and a fine orchard of apple and apricot trees was on one of the slopes of the hill. On making inquiry, we learned that the place belonged to the estate of the Rana of Balsan. Rana is a title given to small chieftains, though they sometimes have sovereign authority in their territories. The headman of the village sent off information of our arrival to the Rana, whose residence was at a distance of about a mile and a half. We could not but admire the scenery here. We had passed over a fine wide hill road, latterly along the side of a finely wooded mountain; and our encampment was on one of five ridges, which descended and converged towards a point in a large valley that lay below us. Numerous villages were in sight, and the lower parts of the hills were prettily terraced and cultivated. Here would be a very fine place for a hill mission, eighteen miles nearer to Simlah than Pientra, which I have previously mentioned.

May 8th—Sabbath.—This morning about 10 o'clock the Rana and suite came to see us. We had offered to go and see him first, as a compliment to his rank; but his people would not hear a word of it, saying that the Rana would think himself disgraced if he failed to pay clergymen the compliment of visiting them first, because he felt that ecclesiastical office placed a man above all worldly rank. The people of the village gathered around us, and we preached about an hour to them, addressing what we said to the Rana, who assented to it all as good. He then told us something of his history—pointed out, on the top of a neighbouring hill, the ruins of a fort, which had once belonged to the Goorkhas, who had driven him from his territories, and kept possession of them four years. When the Goorkha power was broken by the English, he gathered his people, took and demolished the fort, and handed over his prisoners, three hundred and eighteen in number, to General Ochterlony. The people here have a curious corruption of this general's name—they uniformly call him Lúniákhtar, placing the two first syllables after the two last. The Rana had evidently been a man of action and energy. His grandson, the heir-apparent, gives small promise of being a worthy successor of him; he is about the dirtiest and most ignorant fellow that we met in the hills. The old gentleman has a great-grandson, about sixteen years old, a fine boy, whom I wish we could educate. We pleaded with his dirty father to send him to the plains to school, but I fear in vain.

In the evening we returned the Rana's visit. Mr. Woodside talked a little while to the people at his house. The house was four stories in height, built on three sides of a court-yard. The lower story seemed to be mostly occupied by the cattle, and the courtyard was full of manure. We returned, on the whole a good deal disgusted at the palace. But though we could not fancy the peculiar kind of civilization seen here, yet justice requires me to say that the Rana and his people are far in advance of the great body of the hill people. I have no doubt but that he would receive, and treat well, a mission that would include a medical man, a school, and some mills—a saw and shingle-mill, and a grist-mill—and I have also no doubt but that a well-conducted establishment of this kind would be profitable in many ways, if setting it up were practicable. The Rana has a good hill road made through his estate; it was here for the first time that we had to inquire which was our road to Simlah—previous to this time we had seen but one road, pretending to be more than a mere footpath, branching off from the road which we travelled.

May 9th.—In the morning marched six miles, across the valley that lay before us; bathed in a stream at its bottom, and ascended a little way, to a town in the territory of the Rana of Theog. Spent a part of the day here, and preached.

Here we saw the singular custom, which prevails in this part of the hills, of putting children to sleep with a stream of water running on their heads. A portion of a stream is turned so as to run through a small spout; below the spout a bed of flag stones is laid, and a little bower made over it; the child is wrapped in a blanket and laid on its side on the flag stones, so that the water from the spout runs against the top of its head, and falls down, and passes under the stones. The children sleep soundly under this treatment, and the people think that it makes them strong in the head and back. About six children were under treatment at this one spring.

In the afternoon made a long ascent of six miles, though not a steep one, to Fagoo, where the Landour road, and that leading northward from Simlah, meet. Preached in the Bazar, where we found people belonging to the hills, Panjabees, Kashmirees, &c. Talked in two places, in one to Hindús, and in the other to Mohammedans. Found a number of mules loaded with Pushm, the wool of which shawls are made, belonging to some Kashmiree merchants, who had brought it from the upper hills, and from beyond the passes, and were carrying it for sale to Lodiana, Amritsar, and Lahor, where the shawls are now chiefly made. The oppression of native rulers has nearly driven this manufacture out of its native Kashmire into the English territory, where alone protection is certain.

May 10th.—Marched into Simlah. On the way met a Tartar woman merchant, going up through the passes to the north side of the mountains, with a large flock of sheep loaded with rice. Each sheep carries about twenty pounds. It was a singular sight. The sheep had brought down loads of salt, borax, quicksilver, and other productions of that country. Passed a tunnel near Simlah, the only thing we had seen on the road to remedy the great evil of constant ascents and descents. Before night, got settled with Mr. and Mrs. Janvier, of our Lodiana mission, who are living here on account of Mrs. Janvier's health.

As nothing particularly worth noticing occurred during the five days I spent at Simlah, I will here close this article. The labour of this journey has been severe, but I see nothing in it with which to be dissatisfied, except that our time was so limited. If we had been able to halt three or four days in each of the more important localities, and visit the villages that lie in the valleys around, we could have preached very much more, and our work would have been much more satisfactory. It would be well to make an arrangement by which invalids from our missions should visit the principal places in the hills, and preach in circles of villages. This would give them much more opportunity to preach than is afforded by a mere residence at a hill station; and it would probably be the means of restoring them to health much more quickly.

CHINA: SHANGHAI MISSION.

CONTINUATION OF THE TRANSLATION OF ONE OF THE PAMPHLETS PUBLISHED BY THE KWANG-SI INSURGENTS.

"Again, I would ask, could any one in the whole world dispense for an instant with the gracious care of the august Supreme Ruler? Assuredly not. It appears, then, that it is He who protects men. Yet you set up idols, and ask protection, food, and raiment from them, and say, "My God is a spiritual intelligence." If you attribute to corrupt devils what is manifestly derived from the favour of the august Supreme Ruler, then these corrupt devils dare to assume to themselves the dispensing of celestial blessings, and they ought, therefore, undoubtedly, to be destroyed. Oh! all ye men, your consciences are utterly dead, and you are exceedingly ungrateful to heaven! Your sin is to unite with corrupt devils in rebellion against heaven. How stupid! Alas! alas! Since there exists, most evidently, this adorable and most high true God, the universal heavenly Father, who ought to be worshipped every morning and evening, to refuse to worship him, and on the contrary worship devils, whose only object is to delude and entangle in snares the souls of men, is stupid indeed! Since there exists, most evidently, this adorable and most high true God, the universal Heavenly Father, who ought to be worshipped every morning and evening, of whom, if you ask, you shall receive: if you seek, you shall find; if you knock, it shall be opened unto you; to refuse to worship him, and worship images destitute of all knowledge and sensation, made of wood, and stone, and clay, and pictured on paper—senseless things, which have mouths but cannot speak, noses but cannot smell, ears but cannot hear, hands but cannot handle, feet but cannot walk, is stupid indeed. Nevertheless, the muddiness of the stream arises from want of clearness in the fountain. The error of later ages arises from a want of care in the former.

"In the whole world, there is no man who can for an instant dispense with the gracious care of the august Supreme Ruler. Why, then, are there now so few who thank him for his favours? Whence has this sad state of things arisen? According to the historical records of China from the time of Pwan-koo [the first man] to the time of the three dynasties, [which period ended B. C. 220,] false gods were to some extent received, and also the error of using living men [in place of an effigy,] to represent the corpse of the dead. Yet at that time both princes and people still continued as before, the worship of the Supreme Ruler. When the Tsin dynasty arose, [B. C. 220,] they introduced the false notion of genii, thus climbing the dangerous ladder [of error,] and paid divine honours to Shun of the Yu dynasty, offered sacrifices to the great Yu, and sent men to seek for genii. This was the heighth of obstinacy and perverseness. The august Supreme Ruler is one only; there is no other. Wan of the Han dynasty said there were five. This also was extreme wickedness and perverseness. Woo of the Han dynasty [A. D. 25,] in his old age repented, and said, "At first I thought there were genii; now I know that all this is false and vain." He had, at first, sacrificed to the god of the kitchen, and to Thae Yih, and had sent Taouist priests to seek for genii. This also flowed from the example of Tsin, and was one step higher (on the dangerous ladder of error.] Again, Seuen of the Han dynasty, [B. C. 72,] sacrificed to the earth, and sent men to seek for golden horses, and fowls of jasper. Ming of the Han dynasty [A. D. 58] gave heed to Buddhist priests, and sent men to India to inquire about the laws of Buddha. Hwan of the Han dynasty [A. D. 147) sacrificed to Laoutsze. Woo of the Liang dynasty (A. D. 502] three times wished to cast away his body, i. e. to dedicate himself to Buddha, as a meritorious act. Heuen of the Tang dynasty went to meet the bones of Buddha. Hwuy of the Sung dynasty [A. D. 1107] changed the name of the august Supreme Ruler to "Sombre Heaven Golden Hall Pearly August Great Ruler." As to the "Sombre Heaven Golden Hall," it might be allowed; but to call him "Pearly August Great Ruler," is to blaspheme him in the highest degree. The august Supreme Ruler is the universal Father. Is it right, then, that men should be permitted to change his name? This Hwuy was taken captive by King, and with his son K'hing; died in the northern deserts. * * * Of all things between heaven and earth, man is most honourable and most intelligent. They are the sons and daughters of the august Supreme Ruler. Must they not, then, be honourable and intelligent? Images of wood, stone, clay, and pictured on paper, are but things; men are more honourable and intelligent than things. Why do they not, then, regard themselves so? There have always, in all ages, been men who could not be deceived by the vain belief of the existence of genii; yet even such men, although possessing knowledge in respect to one thing, have been destitute of it in respect to others. If enlightened in respect to one, they have still been in the dark in respect to others. Men with protruding eyes, so as to see on all sides at the same time, there have never been. Closely examining from beginning to end, we find none who could penetrate and clearly comprehend the mysterious deceits of elves, fairies, and sprites. Thus Woo of the northern Chow dynasty, cast off the doctrine of Buddha, and destroyed those temples of superstition. Tih-Jin-Keih memorialized the throne to burn the superstitious temples, to the number of seventeen hundred. Han-Yu opposed the sending to meet the bones of Buddha. Woo-Tih of the Sung dynasty, burnt and destroyed innumerable idolatrous temples. Hae-Chuy of the Ming dynasty, opposed the establishment of sacrifices. It cannot be said that all these men did not possess extraordinary intelligence; yet they destroyed, burned, or opposed but a single item, and did not reflect that those which remained, and which they did not destroy, burn, or oppose, ought to be similarly dealt with. * * * Besides the august Supreme Ruler, there is no God. All the images of wood, stone, clay, or pictured on paper, are, without exception, of recent origin, and are made by men—men whose minds have been darkened by the devil, and utterly prostrated, and who have themselves provoked the demon Yen-Lo to entangle and seize them. Therefore I now, with perfect truth and sincerity, declare it to you. How can you, Oh ye men, know God? The august Supreme Ruler is the true God. When you men bow down and worship idols, you truly bring upon yourselves the devil. Of the idols which you have set up, some [of the men represented] had some merit, and have long since ascended to heaven. Have, then, the services offered by men reached them? As to the whole tribe of worthless things, without note or name, they are all square-headed, red-eyed, fiendish disciples and impish troops of the serpent devil Yen-Lo. * * * How can you men know the Ruler? I will truly tell you. The august Supreme Ruler—he is the Ruler. Those who are lords in this world may be called Lord, and nothing more. The least degree of usurpation among them is not permitted. Jesus, the Saviour, is the Son of the august Supreme Ruler. He also may be called Lord, and nothing more. In heaven above, or on earth beneath, who is greater than Jesus? Yet Jesus may not be addressed as the Ruler (Ti.) What man, then, is he that dares shamelessly to usurp this title of the Ruler? [Ti—the common title of the Emperors of China.] He does but puff himself up with a vain idea of his own greatness, and will bring upon himself the eternal misery of hell.

"Ah! reverently worship the august Supreme Ruler, and then you shall be his sons and daughters. In this life he will protect you, and after death, your souls shall ascend to heaven, and in heaven enjoy everlasting happiness. What blessedness! what dignity is there! But if you are overwhelmed in the belief of false gods, you will become fiends and imps. In this life you will bring on yourselves the entangling snares of the devil, and after death will be seized by devils and endure eternal torment in hell. What shame, what contempt, what wretchedness are there!

"Which, then, of these is to be desired? which to be avoided? Consider it for yourselves. Brothers and sisters throughout the world, should you not awake? If you do not after all awake, you must, indeed, be base-born; you must, indeed, be deluded by the devil! When happiness is offered you, you will not accept it; when there is evidently in heaven above, for thousands and tens of thousands of years, this everlasting happiness and dignity — even this great happiness you are unwilling to receive, you take delight in violating the commands of heaven. Together with devils, you sin against heaven, and provoke the just anger of the august Supreme Ruler. Thus you will fall into the eighteen hells, and endure eternal torment. It is most deeply to be deplored. It is truly a subject of commiseration." On the foregoing Mr. Culbertson remarks:

The above pamphlet would seem to be the production of the leader of the insurrection, Hung-Sew-Tseuen himself. It is written in a style of elegance quite superior to that of the other pamphlets. The general correctness of its doctrines, the knowledge it exhibits of the main facts of Scripture history, and its high moral tone, contrast strangely with two other pamphlets issued under the sanction, if not from the pen of this interesting character. From these it would seem that he imagined himself to be favoured with visions and revelations from heaven, and personal and visible intercourse with "The Celestial Father," and "The Celestial Brother, Jesus."

No one interested in the missionary work among the Chinese can fail to regard, with deep interest, the bearing of these pamphlets on the controversy, with reference to the proper word to be used for translating elohim and theos in the Scriptures. It was objected to the word "shin," that it was unidiomatic—that it means "spirit," and can never be applied to the true God, except in that sense. Here, however, we find native scholars of the highest attainments using the word in precisely the sense in which it has been proposed to use it in the translation of the Scriptures, and in which it is used by a large majority of the missionaries in China. These native scholars use it with perfect freedom, and evidently without the least suspicion that it is at all objectionable. Moreover, they never use any other word in this sense; the language does not afford any other. Again, it was objected to the word "shin," that it could not be used for God κατ ἐξοχην, but in these tracts we find it used in this way, without any adjunct whatever. The writers, it is to be observed, never had seen the word so used in any work prepared by foreigners. A translator of these pamphlets may, if he please, make his author say "spirit" where he knows he means "God;" but this will not alter the facts. He may make him say, "Besides the great God, there is no spirit," but no one will believe that this is what he means.

These writers also use the word "Shangti" for the true God; but they use it only as a title, or a proper name. As such it has never been objected to by any one on philological grounds. The only objection to it has been the idolatrous associations with which it is connected in the Chinese mind. When this is done away by the general overthrow of idolatry, the objection will lose its force. But there is nothing in these pamphlets to sanction its use as a translation of elohim or theos, or as applied to false gods. It may be hoped, therefore, that this controversy, which has given rise to so much discussion, may now be considered as finally settled. There can, at least, be no further argument, and no one can doubt that a "usus loquendi" thus adopted must eventually prevail.

OBITUARY.

NOTICE OF THE REV. JOHN BYERS.

From the short stay which Mr. Byers made in China, and the absence of any one from whom the facts of his early life might be gathered, this notice must be less full and minute than I should have desired. Most of the facts with which I am acquainted were learned incidentally during his stay with us. A short time also before he left, feeling a strong desire to know more of his early life, I asked him, as we were walking one evening, to state some facts respecting his early history, and especially the steps by which he was led to become a missionary.

Mr. Byers was born in the south of Ireland, of pious parents, who from his infancy dedicated him to the ministry. With this object in view he was sent to the University of Glasgow, Scotland, where he graduated with honour in his seventeenth or eighteenth year. I think that it was during his college course, that, knowing he was designed for the sacred ministry, and feeling at the same time a repugnance to entering it without a change of heart, which he felt he did not possess, he determined to avoid it altogether. Still the wishes of his parents seemed to weigh heavily on his mind, and to carry out his purposes least offensively to them, he made up his mind, with their approbation, to go to America. His father furnished him with what means he could, and when he left his native land, I think his intention was to engage in some mercantile business on his arrival in the United States. During the voyage he was much occupied with serious thoughts, which appear to have disturbed his future plans. He landed in New York in the fall of 1848, and, as he afterwards remarked, about the same time that the party of missionaries he was afterwards to join, sailed for China.

Soon after his landing he became acquainted with Rev. J. W. Alexander, D. D., through whose instrumentality he found himself, within ten days after his arrival, on the way to Princeton, to enter the Theological Seminary. He became a member of Dr. Alexander's church, [whether by letter from home or by profession at a future period he did not say—I suppose the former, from the fact of church membership being required in order to enter the Seminary,] but his own conviction was that he never met with a change of heart till his first year in the Seminary. He found himself, as he said, in a different atmosphere from what he had ever before been in. Whatever may have been the change, the principles of religion seem to have taken at this time a more deep hold of his quiet yet earnest spirit. In his studies, which he loved now both for their own sake and the relation which they had to his future course, he seems to have embarked with intense zeal. Trusting too much to what he supposed was a good constitution, he soon found himself a dyspeptic, with its accompanying fits of melancholy. His zeal to engage in the work which he had before avoided seemed to have led him to the choice of the Foreign Missionary field. After completing his three years' course, and having been appointed a missionary to Shanghai, China, he left on a visit to his parents in his native land. While in Ireland he was very much impressed with the coldness and deadness of many of the churches which professed the orthodox faith. Many of the ministers, he felt, entered upon their duties without having themselves met with a change of heart, and as a consequence their preaching was cold and lifeless. Some doubts appear now to have entered his mind whether he ought to have offered himself as a foreign missionary. He compared himself to the man out of whom the devils had been cast in the country of the Gadarenes, and who was commanded to return to his own house and show how great things God had done for him. Embracing the opportunities which were afforded him, he seemed to have preached the truth with great earnestness and power, so much so that some whose hearts did not burn with the same love for Christ, thought him enthusiastical and fanatical. The same coldness did not, however, prevail universally, though extending over many churches nominally sound in the faith. Nothing in the state of the churches in his native land seemed to interest him so much as the missionary efforts in the destitute parts of Ireland, and among the Roman Catholics. The great success which had crowned these labours, and the warm vital piety of that deeply earnest race, cheered and comforted his heart. After spending nearly a year visiting his native land, and portions of England and Scotland, during which time he was married, he embarked again for the United States, and a favourable opportunity occurring, he embarked soon after his arrival for Shanghai, China, where he arrived August, 1852.

I well recollect the first time I met him—a meeting of no little interest to us both, as he was the first reinforcement to our mission, and one with whom I hoped to labour many years. I looked upon his tall form, met the gaze of his full clear eye, down into the depths of which one could see a warm, affectionate heart. His manner was mild, yet earnest. His lips appeared sometimes to quiver modestly as he spoke, yet they closed with decision. At the time he appeared strong and in good health, and I did not even notice a slight cough, which attracted the attention and aroused the fears of some. It appeared that on the voyage out he applied himself quite closely, too much so, as he afterwards confessed, and that a week or two before he arrived in China, after remaining on deck all one night with the captain, while passing through the Straits of Sunda, he had a cough, which never fairly left him.

After two or three weeks he became an inmate of our family, and remained with us until his departure on the 9th of November. He soon began to apply himself to the study of the language, with what he afterwards styled a miserly feeling—too grasping and greedy in that which to a proper extent was commendable. He did, however, listen to some extent to the advice given him, that the best way was to work more gradually at first, until he knew what his strength would bear. His strength, however, failed rapidly, we fancied sometimes daily. The physician told me his situation before he thought it best to disclose it fully to him; but his strength went so rapidly that he called him aside one day and told him that he would have to return home; his lungs were already diseased, and that he could not expect to live and labour in this climate. The stroke was a severe one, yet he did not seem then to wake up fully to the reality of it. The same day he received the news of the death of a beloved sister by the same disease which was preying upon his own constitution. His wife burst into tears, and could not speak. It seemed to them both a warning that he must soon follow. He spoke, however, calmly, and handed us the letter which told how sweetly the sister had gone to sleep in Jesus. She seemed to possess much of the vigorous intellect and ardent piety of her brother.

After this he sat himself down to study the providence of God in this matter. For a while it seemed dark; the old doubt came up, that he ought to have gone back to his own native land, and then he felt as if this was a punishment sent upon him for not having done his duty. But how was it, he said, that all this expense should have come upon the Church, when nothing was accomplished by it? He was struggling for some light in this dark providence. I tried to comfort him, and told him it was not in vain. I still fondly hoped that God had a work for him to do, and that even though he had been here but a short time, yet his interest in the cause of Christ in this part of the world would be greatly increased by having been amongst us. But alas! I was looking for light where the event proved none was to be found. At last, however, light came in the right direction, from above, the result of casting all his cares upon God. Into the future he could not see, nor did it seem necessary for him to look there. His thoughts turned one evening on the passage found in Phil. iv. 6: "Be careful for nothing, but in every thing by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known unto God. And the peace of God which passeth all understanding shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus." Here was want of anxiety and care, but not carelessness nor indifference; there might still be the strong desire making itself known in requests to God—the earnest wish, yet submission—as the result of this, came the peace of God which passeth all understanding. I cannot now reproduce the thoughts which he presented on this passage, but he seemed to be enjoying the rich fruits of consolation which it afforded in quiet trust and confidence in God.

The time soon came for him to leave. It was ascertained one Monday that about a week from that day the ship in which he came would sail for New York, and that a physician of another Board, whose health needed recruiting, would sail in her. Arrangements were immediately made for the return of Mr. and Mrs. Byers. In the hurried work of preparation and departure he could take but little part. His strength seemed almost gone, and on our part it seemed almost as though we were burying him; but the cold sharp winds of our northern seaport seemed to make death certain if he attempted to brave the winter. He left us, and we heard no more from him until the news came that he was dead. We heard that during the first part of the voyage it was hoped that he might live to reach New York, and perhaps his native land, but after crossing the Equator on the Atlantic side he sank rapidly, and died March the 7th, a few days before the vessel reached New York. His body was however taken thither, and the funeral took place in the same church in which less than a year before he had been ordained to the gospel ministry.

It is pleasant to me, and it may be to others, to note some of the more prominent features in the character of Mr. Byers. As a man, in his intercourse with others, he was remarkable for a fine sense of propriety. He did not carelessly and wantonly offend. He did not place himself above those inferior to him in intellectual abilities and attainments; neither was he fawning and yielding to those above him in station and influence. He was kind and dignified; careful of the feelings of others, yet willing and ready to maintain his own opinion. His clear discrimination of character, in the case of individuals, and of reasons, in the case of facts, enabled him to maintain his own opinions in a way which showed that he had carefully weighed the premises on which his judgment was founded. His carefulness of the feelings of others, and yet his willingness to give reproof when needed, I had more than once pleasant experience of. Being asked one evening in our walk to stop at a friend's to tea, I refused rather gruffly. As we left and were on our way home, he said, "We could not have staid out this evening, but was there enough of the 'suaviter in modo' in your refusal?" Though a man of superior abilities and attainments, there was nothing haughty and overbearing—nothing even boastful. Sometimes his wife would, when we were alone, refer incidentally to some facts in his former life reflecting credit upon him, when he would stop her by a look, or some disparaging remark. When a mere lad, under eighteen, he obtained some prize at the Glasgow University. The fact was out, and there was no help for it, but he said it was only got by a system called in the English Universities cramming. Once after hearing a sermon from a text full of meaning, but which was not at all developed in the sermon, he went on for some time, not so much with a criticism on the preacher as a development of the text. His thoughts were rich, mature, and good; but suddenly recollecting himself, he remarked that it was perhaps not cultivating the right spirit to be criticising when it was our object to profit. I told him I thought it depended very much on the manner in which it was done. But he, seeming to think it was a difficult thing to handle properly, turned the conversation to something else.

He was keenly alive to his own faults, which, with the co-operating grace of God, tended to keep him humble. He thought, though I never saw any instance of it, that he was trifling in his conversation; allowing it, especially with the ungodly, to run in the same direction with theirs, without attempting to make it elevating, instructive, and profitable.

He felt also that he was irritable, and had not sufficient patience. Sometimes a careless remark would wound him deeply, and it would be seen in his change of colour or sterner expression; and sometimes would find vent, but generally he did not trust himself to a reply, lest the tartness of it should both wound the person addressed, and excite his own feelings. His disease made him irritable at first, but it was almost always quickly and successfully subdued. Once or twice before he left, he apologized, and said he found himself strangely irritable, even with his best friends, and feared that he might have offended. The Christian, however, triumphed over the man, and he generally appeared with a smile of cheerfulness.

Mr. Byers had been most of his life a student, and he delighted greatly in being so employed. He feared that he might err in this respect, and not be disposed to engage enough in the practical duties of his calling, yet he began at once to accommodate himself to these, and showed that he was here, as well as in intellectual furniture, admirably qualified for the work of a missionary. He was sympathizing and easily approachable, and yet dignified, gaining both the confidence and respect of the Chinese, as far as he was brought into contact with them during his short sojourn among us.

Both for the sake of his own advancement in knowledge and growth in grace, he was accustomed to spend much time in studying the Scriptures in their original languages. He compared scripture with scripture, not only one passage with another, but words, noting how the same words were used in different connections. In preparing a sermon, his first work was to take a Greek Testament, with a Greek Concordance, and see the force of noun, preposition, and verb. The result of such study in the clear full development of the text we never enjoyed but once during his stay, when he preached in a little English service held every Sabbath morning, mostly for the benefit of missionaries and their families, from the text Rom. viii. 32—"He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him freely give us all things?" It was a sermon rich in evangelical truth, magnifying the grace of God in sending his Son, and showing, as the greater gift involved the less, the strong ground of hope that the work begun would be completed. He delivered this sermon extempore—his usual manner, I believe, though he generally wrote more or less in the preparation.

It was evident to all who knew him here, that God had endowed him with a quick, vigorous, and discriminating intellect. He grasped knowledge quickly and thoroughly. His judgment was clear and good, and for a man of his age uncommonly trustworthy. Even in matters new to him which came up soon after his arrival, he soon saw and understood what course was best to be pursued. In disposition he was gentle; he was neither rough nor forward, neither rash nor stubborn; and yet he was not easy and inactive, but full of strong and earnest feeling; ready, where judgment and Christian principle sanctioned, to push forward in any good work. His piety took in some measure the shape of his disposition. It was practical, extending to his whole life, yet not officious; still it was earnest, and had possession of his whole nature. Practical duties were performed not merely as duties, but as the result of the inner life. His religion swelled up from a heart living by faith in the Son of God, and was manifest, not so much because his object was to manifest it, as because it existed; because the truth was loved and felt, and operated on the outward life; because out of the abundance of his heart his mouth spoke. It was seen in his face and conduct; in the constant spiritual conflict and final victory even over the last enemy, death, when in peace he went home to God. J. K. WIGHT.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE FUTTEHGURH ORPHAN ASYLUM.

This communication from a gentleman in India, in no way connected with the mission, will give additional interest to the article which appeared in our August and September numbers, in relation to the importance of this flourishing Institution.

The following account of this admirable and praiseworthy Institution has been condensed from its published reports, in the hope that it may prove interesting to those who may regard it as giving promise of becoming a nucleus of native Christianity in these provinces, when the hearts of the heathen around us are opened to the reception of its saving truths.

It was one of the calamitous effects of the famine of 1837 and '38, that hundreds of poor children, deprived of parents, were left alone amid the prevailing distress, without a friend on earth to care for them, or feel interested in their behalf.

Through the liberality of a Christian public, and the exertions of a generous and humane officer, whose name is not unfamiliar to those who, like himself, are engaged in the noble work of alleviating the sufferings of their humble fellow-creatures and raising them from their degraded condition, a considerable number of these helpless orphans were rescued from want and placed by themselves, in a separate house, where they received all the nurture and attention which the most affectionate solicitude could suggest.

It was not in Futtehgurh alone that these philanthropic efforts were made. Dr. Madden at Futtehpore, and Mr. Clarke, C. S., at Barielly, were distinguished labourers in this field of benevolence, and their exertions were well supported by the public of India, to whose sympathy and charitable feelings it is seldom that an appeal is vainly made.

The blessing of heaven has descended upon the good work begun by these gentlemen, and continued and perfected by those messengers of a Saviour's love and mercy, who have quitted home, with its comforts and associations, to minister to the spiritual and bodily necessities of the friendless Hindoo orphans in a land far removed from their own.

We are now permitted to behold and admire the happy results of their united labours; and what do we see? A colony of native youths of both sexes reared in the knowledge of the true God, and worshipping in his holy temple, amid the regions where their fathers bowed down to wood and stone; we see some of them peaceably engaged in the pursuits of agriculture and of commerce; we see others employed as artizans, and their wives producing the finest lace and net-work by the labour of hand, which could otherwise have known no occupations, save that of grinding corn from morn to night. Some are teachers, some are acting as pioneers in bringing their benighted countrymen into the way of life; and it is indeed an object of devout thankfulness to see an orphan Hindoo youth, who had been left to perish in a season of calamity, rescued from death, nurtured in the truths of our holy faith, and now devoting his own energies in the blessed duty of preaching to idolaters the glad tidings of heaven and a Saviour.

There are several who can hold converse with the European in his own tongue, and one has crossed the wide Atlantic to visit the land of the good missionaries, who have, under divine blessings, been the instrument of making him what he is, and he has written a book, giving an account of his voyage and his impressions.

How different is their present condition to what it might have been! It is painful even to dwell on the possible contrast! Shunned and despised as degraded and outcast, they must have sought fellowship with the lowest of the low, or perhaps endured all the miseries of slavery, ignorant and besotted, and not knowing the love of parents or the regards of friends, their souls grovelling from one place of vice to another still more wretched. Theirs must, indeed, have been a cheerless and weary existence.

The origin of the Asylum may be dated from the close of 1838. In the month of October of that year, the Institution at Futtehpore, formed and superintended by Dr. Madden, was broken up in consequence of the death of his lady. Some of the orphans were sent to the church missionaries at Benares, and forty-eight were made over to the Rev. Mr. Wilson, who brought them on to this place, where the number was increased to ninety-five.

Mr. Wilson was an American missionary of the Presbyterian faith, although he had been educated for the medical profession. He was accompanied by a converted Hindoo, named Gopeenauth Nundy, a native of Calcutta, who had been for years in the employ of Dr. Madden as teacher. The Baboo has since received ordination, and his services are now chiefly employed in preaching the gospel and attending to the interests of a little school at the station, though the missionaries bear testimony, in their reports, to his usefulness and zeal within the walls of the asylum, where the presence of a superintendent who could fluently speak the language of the country was needed to guide and manage its affairs under superior instructions.

Mr. Wilson was shortly after joined by Mr. Scott, and the Institution remained several years under the joint care of the reverend gentlemen. In 1845, the continued ill health of his wife compelled Mr. Wilson to return to America; and in 1850, Mr. Scott's presence was required in Agra. The Asylum is now under the charge of the Rev. Mr. Walsh. A regular monthly subscription was at once opened at this station for the support of the infant Institution, and with the help of donations from the neighbouring districts, it was started into existence with the fairest prospects of success. During the period of eight years, for which the accounts have been published, we find that the receipts on account of subscription and donation were pretty nearly equal, for the average of the one is $1900, and of the other $2000 per annum; or, in other words, a sum of $325 per month, exclusive of the product of the industry of the orphans.

The first care being to provide sufficient accommodations for their charge, the missionaries applied for and obtained from Government the grant of a tract of land containing an area of sixty acres, used formerly as a race-course. The lease is for fifty years, at a nominal rent of sixty dollars per annum, renewable after that period on the same terms. The ground is in a retired part of the station, and a better spot could not have been selected. Here several buildings were erected in 1841, at a cost of $4642, the principal of which are the following:

A dwelling-house of ten rooms, with a long verandah, bathing-room, godown, &c., for the girls; a play-ground of more than an acre, surrounded by a high wall. No male servant permitted to enter the enclosure.

A comfortable puckā building of two large rooms, with verandahs, to serve as a school-house and chapel for the girls.

In a separate compound, to prevent contagion, is a girls' hospital of two rooms, with two verandahs.

In another enclosure is a dwelling-house and dormitory for the house, of four large rooms, with verandahs and bathing-rooms attached, &c.

The boys' school-house—a separate banglow of two rooms, with pucka floors, and having verandah on four sides.

The boys' hospital, which has a separate compound.

A granary—a large two-storied building for the carpet manufactory, &c.

But of all the buildings with which the missionaries have studded what was not long ago a piece of waste land, by far the most important and of the highest permanent interest, is the Christian Village, with regard to which the following extracts from the fourth report of the Institution will doubtless be read with much satisfaction:—"We have been permitted satisfactorily to carry into effect that part of our scheme which contemplated the colonization of those of the orphans who have completed their minority and rendered themselves capable of self-support. These have been married at their own request, and to each couple a house and comfortable outfit have been given, and they have commenced the world for themselves, under pleasing and promising circumstances. The men are employed on a salary in the carpet factory as weavers and teachers of the younger boys; whilst their wives are employed either in spinning wool for the carpet factory, or in fancy work, which is sold for their benefit; by which means they earn a comfortable maintenance.

The object being to render the Institution a self-supporting one, the missionaries, with happy forethought, introduced into it the business of manufacturing carpets, such as are made at Mirzapore, and which are held in great esteem. They had at first to employ some artists from that place to give the boys instructions; but to such a degree of proficiency, had these attained in a comparatively short space of time, that the instructors were soon dispensed with.

At the beginning, this did not promise to be a profitable undertaking. Since we find the superintendent writing in the following terms in the second report:—"If the question be asked, as it often has been by those visiting the Institution, what are the profits arising from the carpet factory? We answer, nothing at all; on the contrary, this has been a heavy tax upon the friends of the Institution. It must be remembered that the carpet shop is a school for the purpose of teaching the children an art by which they may provide for themselves in future life, rather than a place for the execution of work, by which to make gain. The expense of procuring looms, tools, and materials for the carpets, added to the hire of men to instruct the boys, has more than equalled the sum realized in the sale of carpets. But the judicious selection of this branch of trade very soon became manifest when the early difficulties were surmounted by the large commissions that poured in from all quarters; and we learn from the third and following reports that the resources of this department were not equal to the demand. This satisfactory state of things continued until nearly one-half of India was supplied with carpets.

The following memorandum of sums realized on this account gives the results of the experiment in a financial point of view, to say nothing of the important advantage of teaching the orphans a useful trade.

1840, ...	1813 "
1841, ...	1066 "
1842, ...	1764 "
1843, ...	2455 "
1844, ...	3248 "
1845, ...	2452 "
	14,756

But all this must not be looked upon as clear gain; for the expenses have yet to be deducted, and those expenses were very heavy, principally in consequence of the unavoidable waste of materials in teaching the younger children. We shall then find that the actual profit derived to the institution for the eight years above specified, does not average more than 366 Rs. per annum, or 20 per cent. only in the total income for the year, yet when it is considered that the institution had no means of support beyond the regular subscription, the sum of 30 Rs. per mensum by the product of their own labour was not to be despised, small though it be.

To the carpet manufactory was added the tent making business in 1844, chiefly to secure employment and maintenance for the rising colony of married orphans, and in the following year it was resolved to open a speculation in saltpetre. While the tent business has flourished beyond expectation, the hazardous venture in the latter commodity, has proved a total failure, inflicting a loss on the institution to the extent of 2500 Rs.

The immediate cause of this untoward result is thus explained in the report of 1847. "At the time our saltpetre reached the market, the price of the article, owing to the scarcity of ships in port, was very low, and it had to be sold at a considerable sacrifice. It may be interesting to add, that from 1844 to the close of 1846, the latest period to which accounts have been published, tents to the amount of 60672 had been sent out from the Asylum to different parts of India. There is yet another source of income, the mention of which will close this part of the subject, viz: The fabrication of fancy articles by the orphan girls, the annual sale of which, has averaged 600 Rs., and this gives a return of 51 Rs. per mensum from 1839 to 1846. This fact satisfactorily demonstrates how usefully the time of the girls must have been employed under the fostering care of the wives of the missionaries, and what an excellent foundation of industrial habits has been laid for their benefit in after life.

At the stated meeting of the Board of Publication, held at their rooms in Philadelphia, on the 18th of October, the following letter was received from the Rev. George W. Musgrave, D. D., tendering his resignation of the office of Corresponding Secretary and General Agent of the Board.

Office of the Board of Publication,
Philadelphia, October 18th, 1853.

To the President and Members of the Board of Publication:

Reverend and Dear Brethren—Having accepted the office of Corresponding Secretary and General Agent of the Board of Missions, I hereby resign the office of Corresponding Secretary and General Agent of the Board of Publication—my resignation to take effect at the close of the present month.

The reasons which have induced me to consent to the transfer from the one Board to the other, are, I believe, understood by all. I avail myself, however, of the occasion to say, that I have been influenced by no want of appreciation of the importance of the objects contemplated by the Board, nor by any dissatisfaction arising out of my official or personal relations with the officers and members of the Board. On the contrary, I have felt a constantly increasing sense of the magnitude and importance of the work committed to your care, and have experienced the utmost kindness from all connected with the Board. Indeed, one of my chief regrets in severing my official connection with the Board, arises from the strong attachment which I have formed for those with whom I have been so happily and pleasantly associated.

Having been persuaded, however, that the general interests of the Church may be promoted by the change contemplated, I have felt it to be my duty to consent to it.

Praying that the great Head of the Church may continue to prosper the Board, and expressing the kindest regards towards all its officers and members individually, I remain, dear brethren, fraternally yours,

G. W. Musgrave.

This letter having been read, it was resolved that the resignation of Dr. Musgrave be accepted, to take effect on the first of November next. The following preamble and resolutions were then unanimously adopted:

The Board of Publication cannot accept the resignation of their late Corresponding Secretary, without recording their testimony to the fidelity and wisdom with which he has discharged the duties of his office. The important interests confided to him have been conducted with signal ability and efficiency; and by the favour of Providence his labours have greatly contributed to extend the usefulness of this Institution. Dr. Musgrave's personal and official relations with the Board have been of the most agreeable character; and we sincerely regret that we are called upon to relinquish him. We do not, however, feel at liberty to oppose a decision which he has made after mature deliberation; and we surrender him to our sister Board with the hope and belief that his administration of that trust will be found equally advantageous to the Church with the services he has performed here.

Resolved, 1. That Dr. Musgrave be requested to render this Board such services as may be compatible with his relations to the Board of Missions, until the place vacated by his resignation shall be filled.

Resolved, 2. That a copy of this minute be sent to Dr. Musgrave, and that the same be published.

It was then resolved to go into an election for a Corresponding Secretary, when the Rev. Benjamin M. Smith, of Staunton, Virginia, was unanimously elected.

THE CONFESSION OF FAITH.

The General Assembly at their last meeting, "Resolved, That in view of the destitution of many Presbyterian families, of our Confession of Faith, it is hereby earnestly recommended to all our Pastors and Elders to endeavour to induce every family in our connection to supply themselves with a copy of the standards of our Church; and the Board of Publication is requested to furnish, through their colporteurs, every practicable facility for this purpose."

It has always been a prominent object with the Board, not only to meet, but to create, a demand for the standards of the Church. Since their organization, they have published not less than 46,000 copies of the Confession, in a neat, substantial style; and lately a new and improved set of stereotype plates has been ordered. The colporteurs of the Board are always furnished with a sufficient supply, and it is made an item in their quarterly reports to state how many Presbyterian families have been found without the Confession of Faith. Before the Board was established, the book could not be purchased for less than 62½ cents. We sell it for 37½ cents, with a discount to ministers of 20 per cent.; and any person paying $10 at one time, is entitled to 36 copies, which is not quite 28 cents per copy. It has been suggested that if the Confession was brought out in a much cheaper form, it would be more widely circulated. We apprehend this would not remedy the evil complained of. It is true, the Board might furnish a volume on coarse paper, and in a style of binding inferior to a Sabbath-school library-book, ten cents lower than the present; but if we rightly apprehend the judgment and taste of our church-members, they are not disposed so to depreciate the standards of their Church, which should be viewed with respect even by the children of the family. It should be understood, the fault of "destitution" does not rest on the Board. The resolution of the Assembly does not imply this. It recommends, in the first instance, to "the Pastors and Elders" to move in the business, and merely requests the Board to second their efforts by furnishing "every practicable facility." Some pastors and churches have come up nobly to the work. Let others "go and do likewise," and the Board will not be found to "move slowly" in supplying the demand.

OUR NEW PUBLICATIONS.

The Faithful Mother's Reward: A Narrative of the Conversion and Happy Death of J. B., who died in the tenth year of his age. With an Introduction by the Rev. Charles Hodge, D. D., Pp. 323. 18mo. Price 40 and 45 cents.

This is decidedly one of the most interesting and instructive books of its class that the Board has ever published; and we predict for it a rapid and wide circulation. The subject of the narrative was a remarkable example of the power and glory of divine grace, and the story is narrated in a beautiful and fascinating style. We give the following extracts, although a proper appreciation of the work requires a perusal of the whole narrative:

Hitherto, although I had had abundant reason to entertain the most sanguine hopes in regard to this interesting child, I had not ventured to flatter myself that he was yet other than any child of equal sensibility and docility, carefully instructed by a fond parent, might have been: but from this day it was evident that the Holy Spirit, not his mother, was his teacher. I had always regarded our Catechism as an admirable and useful compendium, and therefore desired that he should commit it to memory; but little did I imagine that it would be employed as the means of spiritually enlightening his mind—of convincing him of sin—of making him feel the necessity of an atonement for it—of revealing to him how all-sufficient an atonement had been made, and of exciting him to seek with his whole heart and soul that faith in a crucified Redeemer, by which alone he could be saved. Yet these, through divine teaching, were the blessed fruits of this little work.

The very first sentence of his study, "Man's chief end is to glorify God, and to enjoy him for ever," seemed to be carried home to his heart. Many were his questions upon it, particularly as to what was meant by glorifying God. I answered him as simply and as fully as I could. He listened with an air of intense interest, then looked very serious, and presently, resting his head upon my shoulder, said in a melancholy tone, "What a naughty boy I am, mother! I've never done any thing at all to glorify God. I never even wanted to glorify him." The little creature appeared so distressed, that I replied almost unconsciously, "No doubt, my love, you have not sought to glorify God as it is our duty to do, but you have often tried to please him." "Yes, mother, I have tried sometimes to be good, but then it was only because I knew it was bad to be naughty; it wasn't because I wanted to do like the Catechism says, to glorify God." I was exceedingly surprised, more by the solemnity and dejection of his manner, than by his words, and when I reflected how very young he was, [he was in his sixth year] and how easily his feelings were affected, scarcely knew what to think, or how to reply.

But I will not attempt to repeat our conversation. I have said enough perhaps to convince you, who are acquainted with the closing scenes of his life, that the enlightening work of the Spirit had now commenced in the heart of this almost babe, and as it would be impossible to detail all the evidences of its progressive operations, I must confine myself to general statements.

The second answer in the Catechism, "The word of God, contained in the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, is the only rule to direct us how we may glorify and enjoy him," though perfectly understood, was not passed over more carelessly than the first had been. One of his remarks upon it, I remember, was, "That answer shows me, mother, that I ought to read the Bible a great deal, so as to learn how I can glorify God. I can never learn, if I don't read 'the only rule' till I know it so well that I won't be always forgetting, like I am now."

After some talk with me upon the third answer, "The Scriptures principally teach what man is to believe concerning God, and what duty God requires of man," the dear boy was silent for some moments, and then observed with an earnestness, which quite affected me, "What a great book the Bible is, mother! Other books only amuse us, or tell us about common things that won't do us any good when we die, but the Bible tells us about the two greatest things of all. It is worth more than all the other books in the world." The fourth answer, describing the nature of the Deity, closed this day's lesson, and never shall I forget the eagerness with which he listened to my explanations of the terms used to express the divine attributes, or the ease with which he embraced their meaning. It was not, you may suppose, the first time these attributes had been mentioned to him; but although the definitions in the Catechism were more concise, and apparently less intelligible to a child than those I had given him on former occasions, yet it certainly was the first time that he had evinced such a capability of comprehending and appreciating them. His whole heart and mind seemed engaged, and though his questions and remarks were uttered with his usual infantine simplicity, they yet betrayed a surprising clearness of conception; and as light gradually broke in upon him, his speaking countenance assumed an expression of awe and admiration not easily described.

The book was now laid aside, but not with it the feelings nor the disposition to inquiry it had excited, as was manifest from the tenor of his conversation throughout the day, and from his prayer at night, that "God would give him sense to understand the Scriptures, so that he might learn how to glorify him always."

On bringing his Bible to me the next morning, he observed that he "did not know what was the reason, but somehow he felt a great deal gladder today that he could read God's book, than he used to do." As he read, it was very perceptible that not only his desire for information, but also the disposition to apply what he read, had increased. His questions followed each other so fast, and were of such a nature, that it was almost as impossible to answer them, as to hear, without emotion, the self-condemning inferences he drew from different passages of the holy volume.

When the Catechism was again produced, the doctrine of the Trinity, which, of course, I could not explain clearly, and which, nevertheless, he was unwilling to pass over without comprehending, puzzled him a good while. Seeing this, and that he was inclined to reason too much on its probability, I reminded him, that man, compared with God, had not so much sense as he had, compared with me; and that, as he ought not to expect to understand everything that I could, so neither ought grown persons, no matter how sensible and learned they were, to expect to understand all about so wonderful a being as God, who was so much greater than themselves, and who must be so different from any thing they had sense enough to imagine. The dear child's reply struck me forcibly—"Then, mother, my not understanding about God, is only a sign how much grander he is than I am." "It is, John, just as your not being able always to understand things that seem very plain to me, proves that your mind is not yet so strong as mine, but never should make you doubt my word." "Yes, I see, mother, and so my not understanding how God can be like he is, only ought to make me think a great deal more of his greatness, and believe the better about my foolishness. It is my being so different from him, that keeps me from knowing about him. Isn't that the way of it, mother?" "It is, my love, and whenever you think about the Godhead, try to remember, that as you cannot comprehend how your soul and body are united to make one boy, you should not expect to comprehend the nature of the Almighty." The little dear caught at the idea. "O! mother, I'm glad you put me in mind of that, for now I think about my being two things, it don't seem half so hard to think that God is three, when he is so much grander than I am."

The exposition of the decrees of God, which followed next in the Catechism, that they "are his eternal purpose, according to the counsel of his will, whereby, for his own glory, he hath foreordained whatsoever comes to pass," shocked and alarmed him greatly. Never shall I forget the distressed tone in which he exclaimed, the moment he understood the meaning of the words, "May be then, mother, it is fixed now, that I am never to go to God, and can't do anything to help it, if I try ever so hard. Oh! mother, what a dreadful thing that is! What shall I do?" I endeavoured to persuade him that he took a wrong view of the subject—that he had no ground to form such a conclusion—that this was one of the doctrines of religion which were far too deep for his comprehension, and that, therefore, he must wait till he had a more general knowledge of the Scriptures, before he attempted to think much about it. But he had now experienced the first pang of real alarm, and it was not so easily to pass away. He insisted, "But, mother, for all I'm too young to understand all about it, it must be true if it is taken out of the Bible." I admitted that it was drawn from the Bible, but tried to explain it, in a degree, by God's foreknowledge of what the conduct of each of his creatures would be. "Well then, mother, may be my being so often naughty, and my never thinking the least bit about glorifying God, is a sign that I'm not good enough to go to heaven." "If you are as bad as you say you are, my darling child, it is nevertheless only a sign that you are not now fit for heaven—but God may, and I trust will, put so much of his Holy Spirit into your heart, that from this time you may seek to glorify him—and Jesus may procure forgiveness for all your past and future sins." He had not yet, however, any conception of an appropriating faith in the Redeemer, and could not be comforted. His answer was, "But may be he don't mean to, mother, and that is such a dreadful thought, that I can hardly bear it." The little fellow was moved to tears, and it was long before I could divert his mind sufficiently from the painful ideas to induce him to proceed.

The two succeeding articles being less doctrinal, we got through them without difficulty, and I proposed putting the book away, but he had become so anxious, that he begged to be allowed to learn one more answer. This described man as God had created him, "after his own image, in knowledge, righteousness, and holiness." John had certainly heard this description before, but the train of thought now awakened made the most simple and familiar truths appear new to him. He talked a great deal of the joys of paradise, and more than once observed, "What a great happiness that must have been of Adam's and Eve's!—I don't mean about the pretty garden, mother, but about knowing that God loved them, and about having nothing but good thoughts in their heads." What seemed however to impress him most, was the declaration that our first parents had been created "in righteousness and holiness." "That shows, mother," he said, "that God wanted them to be so, or else he wouldn't have made them so—and I'm not in that way at all, and that shows I'm not in the way God wants me to be." "Well, my love, if you have already been made sensible of this, I hope you will also soon be enabled to improve." "Oh! but mother, 'knowledge and righteousness and holiness,' are such great things! How will I ever be able to get them?" After indulging him for some time in conversation of this kind, I proposed his going to play, but he objected, saying he would rather talk with me. I told him I thought we had had talk enough, that a little play would be good for him. "Oh! no, mother, not half so good as talking with you. The Catechism makes me feel so sorrowful, that it takes away all my wanting to play. Please to let me stay here." Not well knowing what to think, I said, that perhaps, as the Catechism made him so dull, he would like to stop learning it, but he eagerly interrupted me—"No, indeed, mother, I wouldn't, for somehow, the sorrier it makes me, the more I want to learn it—it don't make me feel the same kind of dull that other hard lessons do, it only makes me sorrowful about my badness, and I want to be sorrowful about that, for God hates it."

He remained with me during the rest of the morning. After dinner I sent him to play, but in about an hour he returned to me. The gravity of his countenance, so unlike the cheerful, animated expression it usually wore, struck me so forcibly, that I hastily inquired if anything was the matter. He answered that he did not know what was the reason, but such sorrowful thoughts kept coming into his head, that he had no pleasure playing, so he was come to talk more with me about God. I was surprised and affected, but feeling it my duty to meet his inclination, took him on my lap. Our conversation was long and interesting—his questions very remarkable in such a child—the feelings he betrayed, still more so. At night I observed, too, an alteration in the tones of his voice in prayer; it was that of the most earnest entreaty, and at times he seemed on the point of bursting into tears. He talked again, and still on the same subject, until he fell asleep, when I remained for some time gazing on him, and wondering what all this could mean, yet still fearful of indulging a hope that it was other than temporary excitement from natural causes. You may wonder at my difficulty of belief, but you know the result, which was then hidden from me, and my child was so mere an infant, and could so imperfectly express the state of his mind, that I dared not presume to believe what I so ardently desired. In the morning I awoke before him, and as I lay reflecting on the probability of the impressions of the preceding day having entirely passed away during the night, he opened his sweet eyes, and after embracing me in his usual endearing manner, immediately said, "Now, mother, please to talk religion a little before we get up, it is such a nice, quiet time." You may imagine how grateful the sound of these words must have been to my ears, and with what heartfelt satisfaction I met his wishes. I will not however attempt to relate our conversation, though I well remember that it was of a nature to increase my hopes. Many of his questions and remarks were such as it appeared impossible could have been suggested to him, but by the Holy Spirit. His anxiety of mind seemed rather to have increased than diminished, and my own became great, to know how I ought to address him; my heart prompting me to soothe his alarms, while the dread of doing so prematurely, as often withheld me from yielding fully to its dictates. Sometimes I felt almost persuaded that the Father of spirits had vouchsafed to touch the heart of my little darling; and again I doubted, for we are prone, my dear cousin, to set times for the Lord, and this was years in anticipation of the period when I had hoped he might graciously manifest himself to this sweet lamb. My joy was therefore mixed with fear and trembling. I watched every look, and listened to every word, with a painfully eager solicitude, more easily conceived than described, but could not yet see my duty to be other than that of setting the mercies of God before him, avoiding every unnecessary excitement of fear, and availing myself of his desire for instruction, to impart to him all the knowledge on spiritual subjects which he was capable of embracing. My eyes were unto the Lord, my prayers before him, that I might be directed in duty, and preserved at once from presumptuous expectations, and from a difficulty of belief dishonourable to him.

THE PRESBYTERIAN SABBATH-SCHOOL VISITOR.

The third year of this periodical is now nearly completed. We are much encouraged in our labours in behalf of the children of our Church, by the words of approbation addressed to us from time to time, by parents and teachers. This is the more gratifying, as we confine ourselves in our selections to such reading as is appropriate to the Sabbath. It would be easy to make our little sheet more attractive by inserting articles of a secular character, but such a course would not satisfy our consciences. Our subscription list has been steadily advancing from the beginning, and if the increase in 1854 at all approximate that of former years, we will issue between fifty and sixty thousand copies. There are yet more than one-half of our churches which do not receive a single copy. Who among our pastors will introduce it next year?

We must remind our subscribers that our terms are cash in advance, and that all papers not re-ordered and pre-paid, must be stopped at the end of the subscription year. We hope none will be offended with this; we began with a more liberal policy, but this course has been insisted upon by so many of our subscribers that in the ensuing year it will be adhered to strictly.

The terms to those who receive it in packages from our agents, or by mail, and pay their own postage, will continue to be,

For a single copy, - - - - -	$0.25
For six copies to one address, - -	1.00
Twenty copies to one address, - -	3.00
Forty copies to one address, - - -	5.00

For the benefit of those who wish to take advantage of the late Post-office law, we will affix stamps and supply the paper free of postage at the rates in the following table:

For $2, 10 copies.	For $7, 40 copies.	For $12, 70 copies.
" 3, 15 "	" 8, 46 "	" 13, 76 "
" 4, 20 "	" 9, 52 "	" 14, 82 "
" 5, 26 "	" 10, 60 "	" 15, 88 "
" 6, 32 "	" 11, 65 "	" 17, 100 "

The Visitor is sent free of expense for transportation to the following places:

Carter & Brothers, 285 Broadway, New York.
Rev. S. Guiteau, Baltimore, Maryland.
D. W. Harrison, Charleston, South Carolina.
Heman Packard, New Orleans, Louisiana.
Luke Loomis, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.
J. D. Thorpe, Cincinnati, Ohio.
L. L. Warren, Louisville, Kentucky.
Keith & Woods, St. Louis, Missouri.
R. Crangle & Co., Wheeling, Virginia.

Orders for the Visitor, and remittances of money, should be addressed to Joseph P. Engles, Publishing Agent, 265 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

MINUTES OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

The members of the Presbytery of Mississippi are informed that copies for them were ordered to be sent through Mr. Heman Packard, New Orleans, and were shipped from Philadelphia on the 24th of August.

THE HOME AND FOREIGN RECORD.

By the late General Assembly it was "Resolved, That it be recommended to all our pastors to endeavour to increase the circulation of the Home and Foreign Record, the organ of the Boards of the Church, in order that our churches may be better acquainted with their respective plans and operations, and be induced to contribute more liberally towards their support."

We would respectfully solicit the attention of our ministers and elders to this recommendation at the present time. There are also a number of our subscribers in arrears, and though no one owes more than $1.50, yet in the aggregate the amount is near $2000; and at present we have not funds to meet our expenses.

☞ All moneys sent at our risk; but those who remit will please have their letters registered at their post-office.

VOLUME IV. No. 12. | PHILADELPHIA, DECEMBER, 1853. | PRICE PER YEAR, Fifty Cents.

"IT IS BETTER TO GIVE THAN TO RECEIVE."

"And so you strip yourself of comfort, for the sake of adding to this rich merchant's gains?"

The widow replied with flushed cheek, "It may seem a light thing to you, but the thought that I am slowly and surely wiping every stain from my husband's honour, is my greatest earthly comfort. Mr. Miner is his last creditor, and, God willing, every cent shall be paid."

Her coarser relative responded with an emphatic "fiddlestick," and angrily left her presence.

"At last I have it," said a silvery voice, and a sweet face, glad and brilliant, brightened up the gloom.

"Only see, mother! ten dollars, all my own; ten more make twenty; so we shall have a nice little sum for Mr. Miner."

Tears trembled on the widow's lashes, and glittered on her pale cheek. "It is to be the price of thy life, my precious one?" she thought. "Is the canker worm at the heart of my beautiful flower? Must I give thee up to weary toil, a sacrifice upon the altar of duty? Can it be that God requires it?"

Eva knelt at her mother's feet, where she had fallen with all the abandon of a child, her glance fastened to the shining gold.

Lifting her glance she met that of her mother, full of anxiety, touched with sorrow. A sudden smile broke over her delicate features.

"I was only thinking of the endless things this money would buy—don't look so grave, mamma; such a beauty of a warm shawl for you, and a neat crimson cover for that untidy old arm chair; a bit, ever so little bit of carpet, to put down by the bed, that your feet need not feel this cold floor; and a pretty cap, besides coal, and tea, and sugar, and such nice comfortable things. But never mind,"—and she sprang to her feet, brushed back her brown curls, and drew on her neat little bonnet,—"never mind, I'll maybe write a book one of these days, that'll make you and I rich. And, dear mother, you shall ride in your own carriage, and maybe those that scorn us now, only because we are poor, may be thankful for our notice. A truce to romance," she gravely continued; "stern reality tells me to go directly up to Madison street, find Mr. Miner, give him this twenty dollars, take a receipt, and then come home and read and sing to my mother."

Hurriedly Eva passed from her house along the narrow streets. As she went onward, street after street diverged into pleasant width and palace-lined splendour. The houses of greatness and wealth glittered in their marble beauty under the golden sunlight. Up broad steps, through portals carved and shining, passed the timid steps of Eva Sterne.

At first the pompous servant smiled a contemptuous denial; but after a moment, perhaps softened by her childish simplicity and winning blue eyes, he deemed it best not to deny her urgency; and she entered this palace of a rich man's home.

Softly her feet sank in the luxurious hall-carpet. Statuary in bronze and marble lined all the way to the staircase. The splendour of the room into which she was ushered seemed to her inexperienced sight too beautiful for actual use, and he who came in, with his kindly glance and handsome face, the noblest perfection of manhood she had ever seen.

"Well, young lady," he said, blandly smiling, "to whom am I indebted for this pleasure?"

"My father, sir, died in your debt," said Eva blushingly, speaking very softly. "By the strictest economy and very hard work, we, my mother and I, have been able to pay all his creditors but yourself. If you will be kind enough to receive the balance of your account in small sums—I am sorry they must be so small, sir—we can in the course of a very few years fully liquidate the debt, and then—we shall have fulfilled my father's dying wish, that every stain might be wiped from his honour." She paused a moment, and said again falteringly, "My father was very unfortunate, sir, and broken in health for many years, but, sir, he was honourable, he would have paid the last cent if it had left him a beggar."

Mr. Miner sat awhile thoughtfully, his dark eyes fastened upon the gentle face before him. After a moment of silence, he raised his head, threw back the mass of curling hair that shadowed his handsome brow, and said:

"I remember your father well. I regretted his death. He was a fine fellow—a fine fellow," he added musingly; "but, my dear young lady, have you the means—do you not embarrass yourself by making these payments?"

Eva blushed again, and looking up, ingenuously replied, "I am obliged to work, sir, but no labour would be too arduous that might save the memory of such a father from disgrace."

This she spoke with deep emotion. The rich man turned with a choking in his throat, and tears glistened on his lashes. Eva timidly held out the two gold pieces; he took them, and bidding her stay a moment, hastily left the room.

Almost instantly returning he handed her a sealed note, saying, "There is the receipt, young lady, and allow me to add, that the mother of such a child must be a happy woman. The whole debt, I find, is nine hundred and seventy-five dollars. You will see by my note what arrangements I have made, and I hope they will be satisfactory."

Eva left him with a lighter heart, and a burning cheek at his praise. His manner was gentle, so fatherly that she felt he would not impose hard conditions, and it would be a pleasure to pay one so kind and forbearing.

At last she got home, and breathlessly sitting at her mother's feet, she opened her letter. Wonder of wonders—a bank note enclosed; she held it without speaking, or looking at its value.

"Read it," she said, after a moment's bewilderment, placing the letter in her mother's hand—"here are fifty dollars; what can it mean?"

"This," said the sick woman, bursting into tears, "is a receipt in full, releasing you from the payment of your father's debt. Kind, generous man—Heaven will bless him—God will shower mercies upon him. From a grateful heart I call upon the Father to reward him for this act of kindness. Oh! what shall we say, what shall we do to thank him?"

"Mother," said Eva, smiling through her tears, "I felt as if he was an angel of goodness. Oh, they do wrong, who say that all who are wealthy have hard hearts. Mother, can it be possible we are so rich? I wish he knew how very happy he has made us, how much we love and reverence him whenever we think or speak of him, or even hear him spoken of!"

"He has bound two hearts to him for ever," murmured her mother.

"Yes, dear Mr. Miner! little he thought how many comforts we wanted. Now we need not stint the fire; we may buy coal, and have one cheerful blaze, please God. And the tea, the strip of carpet, the sugar, the little luxuries for you, dear mother; and the time, and a very few books for myself. I declare I'm so thankful, I feel as if I ought to go right back and tell him that we shall love him so long as we live."

That evening the grate heaped with Lehigh, gave the little room an air of ruddy comfort. Eva sat near, her curls bound softly back from her pure forehead, inditing a touching letter to their benefactor. Her mother's face, lighted with the loss of cankering care, shone with a placid smile, and her every thought was a prayer calling down blessings upon the good rich man.

In another room, far different from the widow's home, but also bright with the blaze of a genial fire, whose red light made richer the polish of costly furniture, sat the noble merchant.

"Pa, what makes you look so happy?" asked Lina, a beautiful girl, passing her smooth hand over his brow.

"Don't I always look happy, my little Lina?"

"Yes, but you keep shutting your eyes and smiling—so;" and her bright face reflected his own. "I think you've had something very nice to-day; what was it?"

"Does my little daughter really want to know what has made her father so happy? Here is my Bible; let her turn to the Acts of the Apostles, 20th chapter, 35th verse, and read it carefully."

The beautiful child turned reverently the pages of the holy book, and as she read, she looked up in her father's eyes—

"And to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive."

"Ah! I know," she said, laying her rosy cheek upon his hand; "you have been giving something to some poor beggar, as you did last week, and he thanked you, and said, 'God bless you,' and that's what makes you happy."

Lina read a confirmation in her father's smile—but he said nothing, only kept repeating to himself the words of the Lord Jesus, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."—Olive Branch.

A DYING GIFT.

The following note will be read, we think, with special interest, as showing how near to the hearts of some of God's children is the cause of missions. The sum appropriated was small, but as she did what she could, it was doubtless acceptable to the Lord, and has received its appropriate and abundant reward. If all would contribute according to their ability, how gloriously, with the blessing of God, might the work be carried forward!

Marion, Ohio, November 4, 1853.

Executive Committee of Board of Missions:

Brethren—Enclosed is ten dollars, being the legacy of Mrs. Jane Kerr, of Salem church, Marion Presbytery, a poor but truly pious lady. It is her dying gift to the Board of Missions, and I have no doubt but it is sanctified as a holy offering by the prayers offered for the spread of the gospel while she was alive. Please acknowledge the gift through the Record, that it may be known that the money has been received. Yours fraternally

J. N. Shepherd.

ENCOURAGING REPORT AND AN APPEAL FOR AID.

We ask attention to the following statement, respecting a most interesting and important missionary effort among the German population in the city of Cincinnati. The labours of our missionary there have been greatly blessed, and with a suitable place of worship, there is reason to hope that great good might be accomplished. Will not the benevolent contribute towards the erection of a church edifice there, and thus remove one of the greatest obstacles with which our missionary has had to contend? Any contributions to this object may be forwarded to S. D. Powel, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Missions, No. 265 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

Rev. and Dear Brethren—At the close of the present quarter I hasten to give a short report of the mission station in Cincinnati among the German population, under the care of the Board.

Through the help of God we have been enabled to overcome all the difficulties and prejudices of our adversaries, particularly the overwhelming, persecuting power of the Roman hierarchy, which exerted all its influence to check the progress of our mission. But the great Head of the Church, our blessed Redeemer, Jesus Christ, sanctioned our work, and paralyzed the power of Satan; and I am happy to state that we are at present unmolested, worshipping as an organized "German Presbyterian Church." And though we are but five months old, our divine services are well attended; our membership numbers fifty-two heads of families, among whom we have a goodly number of Roman Catholics, who adorn their Christian profession with their conversation and walk in life, and distinguish themselves by their zeal for the advancement of our blessed Redeemer's kingdom. We have a stated prayer-meeting, which is well sustained; our Sabbath-school is a very good one. It is pleasant to see grown up, and even old men and women, who before never saw a Bible, sitting in the Bible-classes, and like children learning the things necessary to their souls' salvation. The only drawback to our progress is the want of a house of worship. The place we worship in is not a suitable one, neither in its locality, nor in its adaptedness as a house of worship. It is certain, that if we had had a suitable building, properly located, we might have done ten times more good, as the Roman Catholics are accustomed to worship in temples, and not in such a dilapidated shanty as we, unfortunately, meet in. It is true the members of the Central Church, and the Rev. Dr. Lord's congregation, promised to help us liberally, but it is not sufficient; and I am afraid, if we get no help out of Cincinnati, that we will fail. We trust in divine Providence; it is His own work; and the Board can rely upon the statement that, if we get a church edifice, it will be one of the most flourishing stations under the care of the Board of Domestic Missions. Praying that the Lord may pour out his Holy Spirit upon the operations of the Board, I am yours most respectfully,

L. Giustiniani.

AN ENCOURAGING LETTER FROM A MISSIONARY IN INDIANA.

Rev. and Dear Sir—The term for which I held a commission from your Board has expired, and the Church in this place is hereafter to be self-sustaining. During the last year, indeed, we have paid to the Board more than we have received, but we hope hereafter, whilst we draw out none, to pay back the amount we have received, and thus extend, through you, to others, the blessing we ourselves have enjoyed.

It is now a little more than seven years since I came to this place, and became a missionary of the Board. There were at that time 30 names enrolled upon our session book, about 19 of whom could be found, and were in actual membership. We have since enrolled 101 names, 39 on examination, and 62 on certificate, making in the aggregate 131 members, 80 of whom are still in the communion of the church. 11 members have died, and many have removed to other churches. We have built a house of worship at a cost of $2000, and paid for it and the lot on which it stands.

I have also organized a church in Camden, eight miles distant, which has seventeen members, and is a very promising field of labour.

We have paid $390 to our Boards since August, 1851.

I make these statements simply to show what the Board of Missions has enabled us to accomplish on a field which was certainly as unpromising as many that are calling loud for labourers, and was considered by the Presbytery as an exceedingly discouraging field. When I first came here, it was with great effort that they could raise $150. My salary now is $500, and is cheerfully and promptly paid.

And this, I am satisfied, is but the common history of many of our churches, where it would have been impossible to originate and sustain an enterprise of that kind, but for the timely aid afforded by the Board of Missions. Allow me to say, in thus closing my intercourse with you, I have ever had the most profound regard and respect for the fathers and brethren who have been officers of the Board during the past seven years; and all my correspondence with them has been of such a character as to impress my mind with the conviction, that they were men whose hearts were full of zeal for the cause of Christ and the interests of our beloved Zion; of real sympathy for the self-denying missionary and his scattered flocks, and who were ever prompt and efficient in the discharge of every duty.

A REVIVAL OF RELIGION.

The following report, from a missionary in Georgia, will be read with interest and thanksgiving.

Rev. and Dear Brother—The time has come for me to send you another report of my labours in my field. I am glad to inform you that it has been with us a harvest season. The seed has brought forth fruit. Last month was a month of especial blessing. About sixty have professed a change of heart, thirty-three of whom have connected themselves with our church.

My labours have been exceedingly arduous, but endured with pleasure, for I plainly saw the Lord going before me in the great and good work which he has done for us.

The work began to manifest itself on the third Sabbath of last month. It had been going on in secret before, but only in a few cases, and they unknown to me at the time.

We had determined to have a three days' meeting in connection with our communion, on the third Sabbath, and I accordingly gave out an appointment for preaching on Friday preceding that Sabbath. I hoped, when the appointment was made, to get some assistance, but was disappointed, and the Friday came, and I had to go through with all the services alone. I preached twice on Friday, twice on Saturday, and twice on Sunday. During the service of the morning on Sabbath, there was deep solemnity, and apparently deep anxiety among some of the non-professing part of the congregation. Especially when we sat down at the communion, it was manifest that some felt, and felt deeply. At night the interest was apparently deeper and more extended, and we thought best to follow what appeared to be the leadings of God's Spirit, and we appointed a prayer-meeting for the next morning, and preaching the next night. Monday night we appointed an inquiry-meeting and prayer-meeting for Tuesday morning, and preaching again on Tuesday night.

Thus day by day we protracted the services for seventeen days, with only one day intermission. During almost all the time I was entirely alone, as far as human aid was concerned, but yet not alone, for God was with me. I commenced the meeting in feeble health, and for more than a week continued it entirely alone, under very great debility. But God upheld me under the duties which devolved upon me, and encouraged my heart by giving me to see the work of the Lord prospering in our midst.

There was nothing like excitement. All that were moved to act, gave every appearance of acting because the Spirit had made the truth effectual in convincing the judgment.

May they all at the last day be found to have been not only convicted by the Spirit, but by the Spirit led to Jesus, the only Saviour. It has indeed been a refreshing season for our little church. There are some others who, we hope, will yet come out on the Lord's side. May God enable them to find true peace by believing in Jesus!

The work has been blessed to our servants; fifteen have been received, and about ten more are desirous of connecting themselves with the church, but concerning them the session are not quite satisfied. We have put them off until I can instruct them, and talk with them a little more. With much respect and love, I remain yours in Christ. A. S.

SYNOD OF PITTSBURGH AND MISSIONS.

Tho following plain statement of facts, belonging to the history of the Church in our own times, will forcibly illustrate the usefulness of the Domestic Missionary enterprise. The intelligent Christian reader will require no aid of mine in appreciating the illustration, or in stimulating his gratitude to the divine Head of the Church, who hath done the great things for us whereof we are glad. I therefore state the facts, and leave them to the reader's thoughts and feelings.

It is just fifty years since the Synod of Pittsburgh was organized. It was then a small body, organized on a field that was mostly missionary ground, being the first Synod formed west of the Allegheny mountains. By gradual enlargement, with the increase and spread of population in the West and North-West, without taking into account the New-school portion that has been separated from our Church in these regions, it has now expanded to nine Synods, including about seven hundred ministers. Many of the congregations are large, and all of them are sustaining honourably the standard of Christ, in the possession of the true faith of the gospel. This enlargement is fairly attributed to the Domestic Missionary work; for all of it has, in reality, and much of it in form, been accomplished by direct missionary effort. Considering the smallness of the beginning, and the brief period of the operation, of this scheme of expansion, who can repress the exclamation, "What hath God wrought!" The sentiments of gratitude have no competitors for ascendancy in our bosoms, but those of astonishment.

The other fact which I state, is equally worthy of admiration and praise. The benign influence of Domestic Missions, conducted by our Church, is seen not only in our own extended country, but also in heathen lands. I have said that the Synod of Pittsburgh was formed fifty years ago. This was in the year 1803. In the year 1831, the work of Foreign Missions, under ecclesiastical direction, was begun in our Church. But where did it begin? In the Synod of Pittsburgh, when it was but twenty- eight years old, and still occupied a field that might be denominated Domestic Missionary ground. Here originated the entire system of Foreign Missionary operations that is now conducted by the Presbyterian Church, in India, Africa, China, and among the scattered aboriginal tribes of our own land. In view of this fact, we are led again to exclaim, in wonder and thankfulness, "What hath God wrought!" Not only hath a little one become a thousand, and a small one a strong nation, but gentiles have come to its light, and kings to the brightness of its rising.

Nor may we only thank God for the past and existing fruits of our Domestic Missionary operations; but we may take courage for the future. The expansive spirit of missions may be expected to have a vigorous growth, and to produce good fruits among the ministers and people of the missionary field, even as it has done in the Synod of Pittsburgh. And we may anticipate from the Synods of Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, and the rest, the emanation of an influence and effort for God and his cause, that shall continue till our land and the world shall be filled with the knowledge of his Son and the great salvation. LETTERS FROM ARKANSAS.—No. 1.

Rev. and Dear Brother—Having laboured for the last eight months in Arkansas as a missionary agent and evangelist, under commission from the Board of Missions, I desire to make known to you, and through you to the Church at large, the condition and prospects of our Church in this wide, destitute, and long-neglected field of missionary labour.

Arkansas has now a population of something over two hundred thousand souls, scattered over an area of fifty-seven thousand square miles, and extending from 36 deg. 30 min. north latitude to 33 deg. south; so that as to extent of territory, it may be called a second-class State. To meet the wants of this widely extended and increasing population, our Church has now upon the ground thirteen ordained ministers and two licentiates. Of these, two are infirm with age, six are compelled to give much of their attention to teaching school and farming to sustain their families, leaving only seven unincumbered to engage in the work of the ministry. "What are these among so many?" Do not understand that those dear brethren who unite other labours with those of the ministry are not usefully employed. Their influence is felt for good extensively. They are educating in part, I trust, the future ministers of our Church. There are among them those who furnish instances of patient, self-denying, unrequited labour, almost without a parallel. Their influence for good would be greatly extended and increased, however, were they enabled to devote their undivided energies to the great work to which they were ordained—the preaching the gospel of the kingdom.

As might be easily supposed, there are regions in this State, where the people know absolutely nothing of our Church. It has been my privilege to stand where the foot of a Presbyterian minister had never before trodden, and to preach the gospel where the voice of one had never, until then, been heard; and yet I may say with truth, that the whole State is open to our Church. There are, scattered up and down through its waste places, thousands of young men, who, having been born within her pale, connect her ordinances with the earliest and most endearing remembrances of home. There are thousands of other churches, who, loving the cause of Christ, would hail our ministers as counsellors of God. A good Methodist said to me, "Sir, you are welcome among us; there is an element in society here which your Church alone can affect." There are also multitudes who, when they once hear for the first time the doctrines of our Church preached by our ministers, find them very different from the opinions which they had formed of them, and which they had derived from ignorant and prejudiced teachers, are at once surprised and pleased. There are also very many Presbyterians by education, and in heart, who have united with other Churches for lack of an opportunity of being connected with the Church of their choice, and who, in transferring their membership (as I have sometimes seen them do,) with tears, feel as though they had at last gotten home. I baptized a woman fifty years old, who had enjoyed a hope in Christ for twenty years, and had never been baptized, because she would not receive that ordinance from the hand of other than a Presbyterian minister. I was the only one she had seen within that time. I could relate many incidents confirming and illustrating these remarks. Suffice it to say again, the whole State is open to our Church; she may come in and possess the land.

The greatest trial to our ministers in this State is the want of an adequate support. Their churches are all small, and, with some few exceptions, poor, and occasionally stingy; though in this latter regard, no worse than churches elsewhere, but perhaps more culpable, because there lies upon them more visible pressing need of liberality. Though, in most instances, our churches are liberal, and our members willing to do what they can to sustain the preached word among them. The Board of Missions also has been forward to render aid whenever asked and required; so that while we are sometimes put to much inconvenience, yet neither we nor our families have ever suffered anything worth complaining about.

There is another fact upon this subject worthy of consideration, which is the exceedingly low rates at which real estate is held, and the consequent ease with which a minister desiring to settle in Arkansas may obtain a home for himself and family. There are now thrown upon the market ten millions of acres of land, much of it the best land in the State, at from fifty to seventy-five cents per acre. These lands, though classed as swamp or unploughed lands, (and as such they will be patented to the State, and by the State to purchasers,) are in reality, many of them just as good for cultivation as the bear-grass lands near Louisville, Kentucky, or the Wabash, or Little Miami valleys. Abundance of land and scarcity of money makes land cheap; so that a few hundred dollars judiciously expended now would secure a minister a home for life, and place him in circumstances of comparative independence, enabling him to preach the gospel without the fear of want.

The life and labours of the late Rev. Benjamin Shaw of Arkansas illustrate the advantages of this State in that respect. He settled at an early day in Chicot county, purchased lands at low prices, was enabled to maintain his family in comfort, preaching the gospel in a destitute region with a zeal and efficiency rarely equalled for many years; and when called in the meridian of life to his rest, left on earth a memento of his having lived, more durable than marble, in the churches gathered by his care, and the moral desert made to bloom as the garden of the Lord.

Who of our brethren to whom the Lord has entrusted a share of this world's goods, will come among us and do likewise? No minister of thrift, and industry, and piety, with a fair share of preaching abilities, need have any fear of not obtaining a comfortable support in Arkansas. It will come one way or another. There are places now vacant which would sustain a minister well at the start. I have more to say, but must defer it for the present.

Truly yours, J. F. G.

FRUITS OF MISSIONS.

About four years ago the Board of Missions sent out to California our first missionary, the Rev. Sylvester Woodbridge. He located in Benicia, and organized there a Presbyterian church, which was the first Presbyterian, if not the first organized Protestant church in California. The Lord has prospered the efforts of his people to build up his Church there, and they now gratefully acknowledge the kindness of friends for assistance rendered them, and make liberal contributions to the cause of Missions, as will be seen by the subjoined letter.

San Francisco, October 15th, 1853.

Rev. and Dear Sir—Enclosed I send you a check for eighty-three dollars sixty cents, which represents the amount of the first quarter's collections taken up in the "First Presbyterian Church, Benicia, California," in behalf of the cause of Christian Missions.

Our church and congregation are small, but we hope for and expect gradual increase. Though few in numbers, and still considerably in arrears as a society, we desire to contribute our mite towards the promotion of the missionary cause. Now that we have begun, we hope to continue and go forward in aiding the good work of spreading the knowledge of true religion.

We gratefully acknowledge our obligations to our Eastern brethren, for their assistance heretofore rendered, and trust we shall not be found wanting in the disposition to give as freely as we have received. With much respect, I am, dear Sir, yours, in the bonds of faith, Samuel C. Gray.

CHURCH EXTENSION.

The suggestion made by the brother in the subjoined letter is worthy of special attention. There is no doubt that many churches would be greatly strengthened if they had suitable houses of worship, and that many of them would soon become self-sustaining. Will not those who have the ability furnish the pecuniary means required? We have been surprised that an object so obviously important to the growth and expansion of the Church should not have commanded more liberal contributions. Some churches and a few individuals have nobly responded to the appeals that have been made from time to time; but the great majority of our people have as yet done comparatively little or nothing. Send us the means, that the Board may strengthen the weak, multiply self-sustaining churches, and thus be enabled to extend the blessings of the gospel to those who are as yet wholly destitute of them. Brethren, do not merely read the following letter, but think and pray over its suggestions.

Iowa, July 21st, 1853.

Rev. and Dear Brother—The question is often asked by the Board, "Are your churches likely to become self-sustaining?" And I presume the answers of your missionaries are often very indefinite. The most definite answer I can give to this question, in its relation to my own field, is this: "Just as soon as they obtain houses of worship." My congregations would not now need one cent from the Board, if they had suitable houses of worship. I verily believe that twenty years hence they will continue to need aid, if they are without church edifices. On our last communion season at L. P., full one-half of the congregation were outside the school-room. Even on ordinary occasions the house will not contain near all the people who are willing to come. I am often told when I call upon families, that the reason they do not attend our church is, they find no room. They have been there repeatedly, and found the house too full for them. Under such circumstances, churches cannot grow; and under such circumstances, many who would attend our ministry are either driven to other denominations, or they spend their Sabbaths at home. In my next, I will let you know what progress we are making with our church building here, and what is hoped concerning my other charge. Permit me, however, to say that I confidently believe that in many instances, from $300 to $500 put in church edifices would make these churches self-sustaining at once, when, without such buildings, they must depend upon the Board for years, or if that aid should fail, perhaps they too would sink. J. S. F.

MISSIONARY TOILS.

Ohio, June 6th, 1853.

In presenting my last quarterly report for the year, I am naturally led to review the results of the past year. Notwithstanding all its discouragements and difficulties, yet we have much to be thankful for. Our labours have been blessed beyond our expectation; the clouds begin to break, and I labour on with the hope that our church here will soon become efficient and self-sustaining. But what shall I say—my labours are too great; yet from every part of our Zion comes the cry, Give us labourers. The field here is large and inviting, but purely a missionary one.

I will give you the routine of one Sabbath's labours, as a part of my regular plan. On Sabbath morning, superintend Sabbath-school; preach in T—— at half-past ten; ride ten miles to McC—— and preach at half-past two; return to T——, ten miles, and preach at half-past five; thus making three services, and a ride of twenty miles, besides the Sabbath-school, every alternate Sabbath. The other Sabbath labours are similar. Too much—you say—destroy your health. Truly, but what can be done? The fields are white unto the harvest. From half a dozen other places the same requests come, but I cannot possibly do more; to some of them I preach during the week. I pray sincerely for health to continue my labours.

Congregations increasing—Sabbath-schools have more than doubled, and a prospect of organizing another church during the summer.

HONORARY MEMBERS.

The sum of Fifty Dollars constitutes a person an Honorary Member of the Board of Missions.

Honorary Members have a right to sit in the meetings of the Board, and engage in their deliberations, but have no right to vote. A copy of the Annual Report is sent to them every year.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST.

To the Trustees of the Board of Missions of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, and to their successors and assigns, I give and bequeath the sum of ———, or I devise a certain messuage, and tract of land, &c., to be held by the said Trustees, and their successors for ever, to and for the uses, and under the direction of the said Board of Missions of the said General Assembly, according to the provisions of their charter.

☞ Persons making bequests to the Board of Missions are requested to be careful in adopting the above form.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

CANDIDATES AND INSTITUTIONS.

SYNOD OF NEW JERSEY.

[We commence in this number of the Record a sketch of an interesting discussion in the Synod of New Jersey, on matters relating to education. We have notes of the remarks of Dr. Magie, and Rev. Messrs. Van Doren and Miller, which shall be published in the next Record, if possible.]

The CORRESPONDING SECRETARY OF THE BOARD said that he greatly feared that the attention of the Church was not yet sufficiently aroused to the alarming decline in the number of candidates for the ministry. The theological students in our Seminaries this year would probably be fewer even than last year; and last year the number was less than the average of the preceding ten years. The average of the preceding ten years was about 250, whilst last year there were only 240 at all our Seminaries. This year, so far as can be ascertained, the number will not exceed, if it reaches, 235. Princeton has about 100, Alleghany 50, Prince Edward 25, Columbia 35, Danville 20, and perhaps there may be 10 or 15 pursuing their studies elsewhere. Under the most favourable circumstances, the number cannot exceed the diminished number of last year, and will probably come short of it. Is not this an alarming condition of things? Does it not call for solemn thought, and deep contrition, and anxious searching before God for its causes and the remedy?

Permit me, Mr. Moderator, simply to allude to two points. The first is that we should pray more, and pray in a more earnest manner. We must adhere to, and magnify scriptural injunctions. Feeble as our prayers are in quality, they seem to be equally defective in quantity. How comparatively seldom is it, Sir, that the subject is alluded to in the services of the sanctuary! The Lord of the harvest is ready to answer; but even in his own house, and on the holy Sabbath day, and in the midst of the assembly of his saints, the great work of perpetuating and increasing the ministry of the gospel is not often among the public supplications. It is to be feared that there are great defects in our own hearts. As ministers, do we sufficiently bear this subject on our souls before God? Do we feel enough anxiety about it; do we agonize in secret; do we pray at all over it; and in our public services, do we pray it up and preach it up into the religious sympathies of our people; do we teach them to take right views of its importance, and of their responsibilities and duties; and above all, do we lead the petitions of the pious at the throne of grace, as we should, for an increase of labourers? Mr. Moderator, at such a time as this, God expects his ministers to lay out their whole strength for his Church. And if that strength were adequately exerted, through the grace and gift of prayer, in private and public, what blessings might not descend, in conformity to exceeding great and precious promises!

Another remark I beg to submit to the Synod is, that we do not give a religious education to a sufficiently large number of young men. Parents, in general, seem to have a feeble sense of the value of a liberal education. The youth of the Church are prepared, as they grow up, to be farmers, or mechanics, or merchants, as their fathers were; and if a few receive a collegiate education, so defective is the public course of studies, ordinarily, and so few the religious influences exerted, that the young men go to the law, or to medicine, or to any thing else, rather than to the ministry of Christ. These are crying evils—that so few young men receive a liberal education, and that our institutions of learning have been organized and managed on so worldly a plan. The Christian academies under the care of the Church will afford facilities for education to more young men than heretofore, but it will take time for these institutions to swell the number of candidates, with God's blessing upon them as instrumentalities. Already, however, they have begun to do it. In the State of New Jersey there are several new academies, as at Newton, Blairstown, Cranbury, May's Landing, with other classical schools at various points, in hopeful operation, at which young men are turning their attention to the ministry. Our brethren in West Jersey are about to open an Academy at Bridgeton, at an expense of $14,000.* The Wesleyan Academy at Newark, where a number of Presbyterian youth are educated, cannot be expected to furnish supplies for the Presbyterian ministry. We must educate our own children into our own views of truth and duty. The number of young men in our Church, who are receiving a collegiate education at all our own colleges, may be estimated at about 1200; but this number is far too small for the right discharge of our duty to Church and State. Not a fifth part of these have the ministry in view. We need to arouse the educational spirit of our Church, in order to do our proper work. At least double the number of young men should receive the highest order of Christian training. There is talent enough in the Church, but it is not drawn out. Education has too much lost the sanctions of religion. Parents should be made to feel deeper responsibilities in regard to educating their children, and thus preparing them for whatever service in the Church or State God may call them to engage in.

In short, Mr. Moderator, without trespassing more on the Synod's time, it seems to me that we want above all things, at the present crisis, more praying spirit, and more educational spirit.

DR. BAIRD'S SPEECH.

The Rev. ROBERT BAIRD, D. D., arose and addressed the Synod as follows:

MR. MODERATOR:—I certainly approve of every word which Dr. Van Rensselaer has said, in the address to which we have just been listening. No subject can come before this Synod which will compare, in its vast bearings and results, with that of the education of our youth, on truly Christian principles; and that branch of it which relates to training up of young men for the "Ministry of Reconciliation," is certainly of the highest interest and importance.

Dr. Van Rensselaer has brought before the attention of the Synod a fact which calls for its most serious attention, namely: that the number of candidates for the ministry in our branch of the Church is not greater than it was a year ago. He has also stated that the number last year, and indeed the average number for the last ten years, was no greater than it was in 1843. And yet the demands for faithful ministers of the gospel, for our country and the world, have greatly increased within the last ten years. This fact demands most serious, and I will add, anxious attention.

It has been justly said that our Church, and even our ministers, have not considered this subject as they should. There has not been that earnest, heartfelt, persevering prayer, that there should have been, that the "Lord of the harvest would thrust forth more labourers into his harvest." Without doubt, there has been a great failure in duty on this point, as Dr. Van Rensselaer has stated.

But I apprehend, Moderator and brethren, that there has been a great failure somewhere else. Within the last few months, I have had my attention called to several of the colleges in the Middle States, partly by personal visits, and partly by reports which I have read; and I have been greatly struck with the fact that the number of professors of religion among the students is much greater in some of them, in proportion to the whole number, than it was when I was a student. I am inclined to think that the number of professors of religion in our colleges and academies, especially in the Middle, and Southern, and Western States, was never much greater, if at all, in proportion to the whole number, than at present. Some of the colleges and academies in the States of New York and Pennsylvania have a remarkably large number of professedly pious young men. This is true of the University of Rochester, Madison University, Jefferson College, and Hamilton College, (I think.) The same thing is true of Princeton College. In some of the colleges and academies referred to, one-quarter, in some one-half, and in the University of Rochester, and the Academy at Avon, more than three-fourths, if I am not mistaken, are members of evangelical churches.

But however this may be, I have been surprised and grieved to learn that so large a number of the "religious students," as they are called, have some other profession than that of the ministry in view. In my day it was very different. Almost every pious young man in college seemed to feel it to be his duty to preach Christ. Almost the whole of them were the children of pious parents, whose highest desire for their children was to see them faithful ministers of the gospel. They had been dedicated to God from their birth, and often this dedication included, as a very dear and peculiar part of it, a giving of them up to the work of the ministry.

I greatly fear, Moderator and brethren, that there is something wrong. I greatly fear that the duty of preaching Christ is not so frequently, tenderly, and earnestly pressed upon the attention of pious young men, in colleges, as well as out of them, as it used to be. I greatly fear that the Presidents and Professors of our colleges, and the Heads of our academies, who profess to be pious men, do not take this subject to heart as they should. Pious young men in our colleges need guidance in deciding the question of duty in relation to this subject, as well as many others. It is natural that they should receive advice and direction from those who know better than any others what is their character, what their talents and qualifications. I wish that some suitable person could visit every college in the land, and sit down and converse with the religious members of the Faculty of each, and lay before them the wants of the Church, of the country, and the world, and speak unto them in reference to their duty touching this great subject. He could not undertake a greater, or a more important work, and he would be well received everywhere.

I fear, too, that many pastors and elders do not feel as they should the importance of bringing before the minds of pious young men under their charge, with much frequency and great earnestness, the great duty of serving Christ in the ministry of the gospel, if they have the gifts and attainments (or the prospect of reaching such attainments) as are needed for the work, and in whose hearts the Holy Spirit seems to excite a desire to preach the gospel. There is here a great duty for ministers and elders to perform—to guide aright young men of proper talents, who come to the knowledge of the Saviour, and who ask with all the simplicity and earnestness of young converts, and often with trembling, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? What an important era in the life of young men is that which embraces the first few months or year after they have come to the knowledge of the Saviour! And how important that they should be properly advised as to the course which they should pursue! The guidance needed, no doubt, should be delicately, and prayerfully, and wisely given; but nevertheless it should be given. And to none does this duty appertain more than to pastors, in the first instance, and afterwards to teachers and professors. How often the discriminating eye of a pastor, or an elder, or a Sabbath-school teacher, has detected in the youthful inquirer after the way of salvation, the future herald of the gospel.

I may be mistaken, Moderator, but I am of opinion that just here is a neglect of duty to which we have to attribute somewhat of the decrease of candidates for the ministry.

Allow me to say a word on the subject of the religious education which young men ought to receive in our academies and colleges. I have long thought that there was a good deal to be desired on this point. When we consider the infinite importance of the Christian religion, both for this life and for that which is beyond the grave, I am sometimes amazed to think that the Bible, the most wonderful book in the world, is so little studied in our academies and colleges. I must say, that whatever difficulties may lie in the way in other institutions, there ought to be none in those which are gotten up under the auspices and direction of the Presbyteries and Synods of our Church. There can be no excuse if religious instruction be not complete in such institutions; for they are founded for the express purpose of giving more thorough religious training than it is supposed can be given in institutions founded in the ordinary way. However this may be, it is clear to my mind that the Bible is not studied so much as it should be in our academies and colleges. Surely our young men ought to be made well acquainted with the sacred Scriptures, during their course in such institutions.

It is remarkable, but nevertheless true, that the institution which seems to me to come the nearest to what a Christian Seminary of learning should be, so far as my knowledge goes, is a Mission-school in the city of Syra, the capital of an island of the same name, which belongs to the kingdom of Greece. It is under the direction of the excellent Mr. Hildner, one of the missionaries of the Church Mission Society of England, a native of Germany, or northern Switzerland, who was educated at Basle, where, too, Gobat, the Bishop of Jerusalem, was educated. In that school several hundred youth, (nearly 500 when I saw it, in 1846,) are taught the great facts and doctrines and duties of Christianity, in the most instructive and thorough manner. One whole hour (and surely it is not too much) is devoted every day, from nine till ten o'clock in the morning, to the study of the Bible, and this with a good degree of reference to the order in which the sacred volume has been arranged. Can such instruction, given in a kind, affectionate, attractive, and prayerful spirit and manner, fail to bring, sooner or later, those who receive it to the saving knowledge of God in Christ? I cannot think so. Would that we could see such instruction given in our literary institutions! I think it might be given.

In regard to the duty of praying that the Saviour would raise up young men—would call young men by his grace—would incline their hearts by his Spirit—to preach the gospel, let me say, Moderator, that at one time, during my residence at Paris, the number of students in the "Missionary Institute," (under the care of the Rev. Dr. Grand Pierre,) a Seminary for the preparation of young men for labours among "unevangelized nations," fell off till there was but one left. And what was done? The fact was stated in the Annual Report, and the lamentable state of things was laid on the hearts and consciences of the little band of Christians who were present, assembled from all parts of France, and they were called on to pray mightily to God! And they did pray. It was the burden of every public prayer; it was the burden of the closet. And what was the result? Before the week passed away, five young men presented themselves at the door of the institution, as candidates for the work of preaching the gospel to the heathen! Whilst his people were yet speaking, the Lord not only heard, but answered their prayers! So it will be with us, if those who love this cause, and take a heartfelt interest in it, will go to the throne of grace, and remain at it, in this the hour of the Church's need, of the country's need, of the world's need.

From the Genesee Evangelist.

DAY OF PRAYER.

The last Thursday of February has become a fixed period in the calendar of many churches as a day to be devoted to united prayer in behalf of colleges and other literary institutions. The propriety and wisdom of this appointment are manifest in the results which have been observed, almost invariably, to follow its public and social services. Multitudes of young men trace the commencement of their religious character to divine influences, which on that day, or soon after, descended on the institutions with which they were connected. May the day continue sacred for the objects to which it has thus long and successfully been devoted!

Here is a thought, however, which I have often desired to suggest to the consideration of Christians, and for which I beg a small space in your columns. It is this, Do not let there be a postponement of earnest prayer for our literary institutions until the close of February. The period of the year when Christian students need the largest amount of divine influence is the commencement of the term. They are beginning that course of study and allotment of time which affects them throughout the year. As they begin they are apt to to continue, and thus to be useful or injurious in the influence they exert upon their impenitent associates, as well as their own religious hopes and prospects.

When a revival occurs in an institution, what a difference is perceived between the usefulness of a student who has always, since his matriculation, been consistent, devotional, and ardently desirous of being and doing good, to one who seems to have left his religion at home, and is "hail fellow well met" with the most thoughtless among his comrades, and has himself to be converted, (brought back like Peter,) ere he can do any good to those around him. Many young Christians in seminaries are of this latter class. They are, in the judgment of charity, "born again;" but the novelty and excitement of college and academy life get a temporary ascendancy over them. The witchery of some pleasing companion entices them into circles and doings the farthest from exemplary and faithful to their Redeemer.

Having been for many years a student, I speak from observation and too painful experience, and address myself to many who have had similar sources of knowledge, at least the former. But not to dwell, Christian reader, let me earnestly address to you two practical thoughts.

1. Pray every day for youthful members of the Church in all our seminaries of learning, universities, colleges, and academies—male and female—that they be exemplary, devotional, and greatly useful from the beginning to the end of the year.

2. Have you brothers, sisters, or any relatives and friends in these institutions? write to them at once, begging them to be faithful witnesses for the cross and kingdom of Jesus. W.

DECREASE OF CANDIDATES IN EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

The following resolution was unanimously passed by the Lower House of the late General Convention of the Episcopal Church.

"Resolved, That in the opinion of this House, the inadequate pecuniary support of the clergy is operating throughout the Church as an almost fatal discouragement and hindrance to the work of the ministry, and as a principal cause of the present diminutive number of candidates for holy orders; and we therefore request the Right Reverend the Bishops to make this great evil and injustice, in such manner as may seem to them most judicious, the subject of a pastoral counsel and admonition to the Church."

In replying to this Resolution, the Bishops admit that the want of adequate support is one of the main causes of the decrease of candidates.

The following extracts from the Pastoral Letter of the Bishops, just issued, contain matter of serious reflection for our own Church.

"But to effect these objects, she needs more clergymen, and they will need to be thoroughly educated for their work. In looking over the addresses of our Bishops in the journals of their respective Conventions, we find a general complaint of the want of more clergymen, and instead of the candidates for orders increasing in number, in proportion to the rapid increase of the Church, it is believed that their number is actually diminishing. The prosperity of our country in all kinds of secular business, and the prospect of wealth and distinction held out to young men of talents and education, may in part account for this result. But it must be admitted as generally true, that the pecuniary compensation of the Clergy is entirely inadequate to their comfortable support, and that it has by no means kept pace with the increased expenses of living. It is then incumbent on the Church, first to do justice in this matter, and then to take measures to increase the number of candidates for holy orders. There are strong worldly obstacles in the way of this increase; but they can be overcome by wisdom, zeal, and liberality. The clergy can do much by directing the minds of pious and promising young men to some sacred office; and pious parents may co-operate with the clergy in this good work. If a young man, possessing the requisite qualifications, has not the pecuniary ability to procure an education, a wealthy friend, or the parish to which he belongs, may contribute to his support; or, what is still better, may found a permanent scholarship. A wealthy and pious parent may acknowledge the providence of God toward him by devoting one of his sons to the sacred ministry; or if the son should decline the work, he may redeem him according to the old dispensation, by educating some suitable young man in his place. Indeed, there seems at present little probability of affording any adequate supply to the ranks of the ministry, unless young men of talent and piety shall be selected from the less ambitious walks in life, and be educated in whole or in part, by individual or parochial assistance. The establishment of scholarships, then, permanent or temporary, for education at the College or the Theological Seminary, or both, appears to be called for among the first works of the Church. Some of the most distinguished lights of the Church of England have been educated in this way, and we shall do well to follow so good and instructive an example. * * *

. The great want in the Church seems to be a more adequate supply of clergy and of candidates for holy orders. Coming as you do, brethren, from every portion of the Church, and acquainted with her necessities, it was to be expected that this matter should occupy your serious deliberations. The resolutions you have sent us, recommending a more adequate support of the clergy, and the devising of measures for the increase of their numbers, may well challenge our most earnest attention. We commend the subject to the paramount consideration of all of our Dioceses; and we are prepared devoutly to unite with you in prayers to the great Head of the Church, that he would raise up and send forth a more abundant supply of labourers into the vineyard."

GOD CHOOSES THE POOR OF THIS WORLD.

Moses was the son of a poor Levite—Gideon was a thresher—David was a shepherd boy—Amos was a herdsman—the apostles were "ignorant and unlearned."

The reformer, Zwingle, emerged from a shepherd's hut among the Alps. Melancthon, the great theologian of the Reformation, was a workman in an armourer's shop. Martin Luther was the child of a poor miner.

Carey, who originated the plan of translating the Bible into the language of the millions of Hindustan, was a shoemaker in Northampton. Dr. Morrison, who translated the Bible into the Chinese language, was a last-maker in Newcastle. Dr. Milne was a herd-boy in Aberdeenshire. Dr. Adam Clarke was the child of Irish cottars. John Foster was a weaver. Andrew Fuller was a farm-servant. William Jay of Bath was a herdsman; and the present Archbishop of York is the son of a draper.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

PRESBYTERIAL ACADEMIES OF WHITE-WATER PRESBYTERY.

This young Presbytery is now equipped with two Christian Institutions, male and female. The Female Academy is located at Greensburgh, Indiana, and the male Academy at Dunlapsville. The Rev. L. D. Potter has accepted the appointment of Principal of the Dunlapsville Academy.

May great and good results follow the establishment of these institutions!

FLORIDA ACADEMY.

The Presbytery of Florida lately received under their care an Academy, but the particulars have not yet reached us.

GREENSBORO FEMALE COLLEGE.

The Synod of Georgia has now two large and flourishing Female Colleges under its supervision, one at Greensboro, and the other at Griffin. The following notice of the institution at Greensboro is taken from the "Southern Presbyterian."

GREENSBORO FEMALE COLLEGE.

The Session of this Institution has just been opened with very bright prospects. There is already a considerable number of new scholars.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,
No. 23 Centre Street, New York.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

Mission House, November 12, 1853.

India.—Since our last, letters have been received from the Rev. J. H. Orbison, August—, of the Lodiana Mission; from the Rev. John E. Freeman, 9th of July and the 19th of August; from the Rev. J. J. Walsh, 9th of July and 19th of August; and from the Rev. A. H. Seeley of 1st of July, of the Furrukhabad Mission.

The country had been visited by a season of extraordinarily hot and oppressive weather, which was succeeded by cholera, which proved still more trying, both to the European and native population. Mr. Freeman had a severe attack of this disease, but was entirely restored at the date of his last letter.

Mr. Walsh mentions the conversion of two Mohammedans to the Christian faith. "One of them," he remarks, "is a middle-aged man, formerly a Mussulman from the Oude district, and well acquainted with the doctrines of the Koran. He was passing through Futtehgurh on a pilgrimage to Mecca, when he met our native preachers, who brought him to me for conversation. I advised him to stop and learn more of this good way, and offered him service as a chaukidar. He accepted and brought his wife and family with him. From that time, he has been diligent in studying the Bible and attending all the religious services. Frequently I have seen him at ten and eleven o'clock at night sitting at the gate, reading his Bible by the light of a small taper. Such was his love for the Bible, that he actually paid three rupees for a copy of the Old Testament, though his income is only three and a half rupees per month. This was unknown to me, or I would have presented him with one. The other man is also a convert from Mohammedanism, though he was originally a Sikh of the highest class. He gave good satisfaction, and seemed to have a very clear view of the plan of salvation through a crucified Redeemer, though not to the same degree as Khadin Massih. I trust they are both true men, and will encourage our hearts by a godly and holy life and conversation. One has taken the name of Khadin Massih, the servant of Christ; the other Abdullah Massih, the friend of Christ. May they both be found true servants and faithful friends, and at last find an entrance into his righteous kingdom!"

Siam Mission.—The latest intelligence from the brethren of the Siam Mission is a letter from Dr. S. R. House, of the 29th of June. He speaks of the good health of the missionaries, and the encouraging aspects of their missionary labours. They have formed the nucleus of an interesting boarding-school, in twenty or more boys, whom they have received into their families.

Mrs. Mattoon still continues her visits to the ladies of the palace, and is sowing seed, which we hope will ere long produce an abundant harvest. Dr. House calls loudly for help, and we trust his appeal will not be without a response. "We are not a little anxious," he says, "to know whether we are to be reinforced this year, or not. * * * We trust we are not to be disappointed this year, as we were the last. Surely Siam has, among the other fields of missionary labour, claims that are neither few nor small upon the educated young men of our Church."

China.—Letters have been received from Rev. A. P. Happer, 21st July, and from Rev. John B. French, 20th August, of the Canton Mission: from Dr. D. B. McCartee, 5th July; from Rev. J. W. Quarterman, 29th June; from Rev. S. N. Martin, 16th July; and from Rev. Henry V. Rankin, 25th July, of the Ningpo Mission; from the Rev. J. K. Wight, 6th August; and from Rev. M. S. Culbertson, 6th August, of the Shanghai Mission. The missionaries in this field, almost without exception, have been favoured with excellent health, and are prosecuting their ordinary labours without interruption. Mr. Martin alludes to the zeal and Christian deportment of the three converts who had been received into the church some time previously. He remarks also, in relation to the old convert, Mr. Wong, "He is not wholly inactive; he frequently speaks to audiences, with earnestness and effect, and though near the end of his days, he may yet be the means of good service to his Master. Some labourers were called at the eleventh hour."

Several of our brethren give valuable and interesting information in relation to the progress of the revolution in China, and we are sorry that we have not room in the present number of the Record to lay this information before our readers. The general opinion seems to be that the insurgents must ere long become masters of the country, and that this result will be favourable to the cause of Christian missions.

Some of the brethren, however, as at an earlier period of the movement, take a different view of the matter, and are not without apprehension that it may be attended with disastrous results. Whatever may be the ultimate result of this wonderful revolution, it is very certain it will not leave the Chinese population where it found them; and every friend of the Redeemer should therefore lift up earnest prayer to God that it may be so overruled as to bring about the salvation of those millions who have been immersed so long in heathen darkness.

African Mission.—No letters have been received from either of the Missions in Africa since our last, with the exception of one from the Rev. George McQueen, of the Corisco Mission, as late as the 2d of August. Mr. McQueen gives an interesting account of his school, and various other matters of general interest in that part of the world, extracts of which will be found in this number of the Record, and will be read with interest. He speaks of the good health of the members of the Mission, and says of his own, "I enjoy vigorous health, not only for Africa, but for America, or anywhere else in the world."

Indian Missions.—Letters have been received from Rev. P. Dougherty, of the Chippewa Mission, as late as the 20th of October, and from Rev. A. M. Watson, of the Chickasaw Mission, as late as the 4th of October.

We are sorry to learn that Mr. Watson's health is poor, and that he will be under the necessity of withdrawing for a time from his labours, for the purpose of recruiting his health.

Mr. Dougherty has opened a boarding-school at Grand Traverse Bay, with thirty boarding scholars, and he is greatly distressed that he has neither the means nor assistance to receive a larger number. We hope it will not be long before he will be able to procure suitable assistance, and have the means to enlarge the school.

Irish Mission.—A letter has been received from Rev. Thomas Warren, dated the 3d of October, in which he states that he had fixed upon Ennis, the county town of Clare, as the centre of his future operations. Ennis has a population of 10,000, is situated on the mail coach road from Limerick to Galway, and is eighteen miles distant from the former, and thirty-five from the latter. The population is almost entirely Roman Catholic, and as there is no Presbyterian church or missionary in the whole county of Clare, it would seem to be a very proper and judicious selection, for the purposes of this new mission.

France.—A letter has been received from Dr. J. H. Grandpierre, Secretary of the Central Protestant Society of Evangelization of Paris, of the 11th of October, in which he gives some interesting information in relation to the progress of the gospel in some parts of France, and the opposition which is made to it by the Government, and the Roman Catholic priesthood. Extracts from this letter will appear in a future number of the Foreign Missionary.

The Rev. John C. Lowrie, one of the Secretaries of the Board, has been absent six weeks on a visit to the churches and Synods of the South-west and South, and probably will not be back to his post at the Mission House before the last of the present month. We trust that this visit to the churches in that section of our country will be attended with important advantages to the missionary cause.

Departure of Missionaries.—Rev. James L. Scott, and Mrs. Scott, sailed from Boston in the ship Piscataqua on the 24th of October for Calcutta, on their way to Northern India. Mr. Scott has laboured many years in India, and returned to this country something more than a year ago, for the purpose of recruiting his health, and providing for the education of his children in this country. He is now on his way back with Mrs. Scott, to whom he was married a few weeks before their embarkation, and we trust they will both be spared for great usefulness in that portion of the missionary field to which they have devoted their lives.

WESTERN AFRICA: CORISCO MISSION.

The following extracts from the journal of Mr. McQueen, of the Corisco Mission, will give some idea of the character of the people of that island, and the influence which our missionary brethren are exerting upon them.

The strange and barbarous scene described at the commencement of the journal, was confined to the inhabitants of the northern part of the island, where our brethren have not, as yet, been able to make their influence felt. Such a scene would scarcely occur now among the people of the southern part of the island, where the missionaries live; though three or four years ago they were no better than their northern neighbours.

The practice of exacting pay from a man when his wife dies, is not confined to this island however, but is practised throughout the whole country. And strange and absurd as it is to us who live in Christian countries, it is not without its uses and benefits among an unprincipled community of heathen, such as we find in Africa. Here polygamy is universal; the marriage relation, in the sense in which the term is used among us, is unknown; and the wife would be liable to all kinds of maltreatment, and might even be put to death, if it were not for the certainty of the husband's being heavily mulcted at her demise.

It is a deplorable state of society however, that sanctions such a custom. Nothing but the presence and influence of Christianity can ever establish a better state of things.

A strange and barbarous custom.

On the 17th of June, I was attending to the duties of the school, hearing the boys read and spell, (this is the only study they pursue as yet). About ten o'clock, I heard the sound of what I at first supposed was singing—such singing as Kroomen attempt when paddling their canoes, or pulling at the oars. As the singing came nearer it became louder, and appeared to be a confusion of voices, some singing, and some talking, or rather shouting. The boys became restless, and showed a desire to leave their seats to look out at the windows. When the increased noise made it evident that they who made it might be seen, I looked to see who they were, and what they were doing. I was surprised to see quite a little company approaching, passing the mission house; soon they were passing the church. All were up, all must see. Some little boys who were out at the time came close to the door, and seemed rather frightened—and no wonder. A more frightful looking company I have seldom seen. Men and women and youth, their faces painted, or rather marked and daubed with black, and white, and red, and I do not know but other colours; each had some kind of fighting weapon with him, some with guns, others with small native axes, others with spears, and the company was provided with at least a plurality of horns, which they blew occasionally, and shouted. Their appearance and conduct at the same time was ludicrous, and foolish, and wild. Until after school was dismissed, I thought all this was one of their "training exhibitions," of which I had heard. But as I found afterward, they were on their way to Mumbi's town, to make a palaver. They were, or pretended to be, the relations of one of Imunga's wives, who had been drowned a few weeks previous, when fishing—diving for shell-fish. It is said that the deceased could not swim, and yet she had ventured to dive down into deep water, and did not come up again. They, these friends and relations, went to demand the person or persons who had been, as they alleged, the cause of her death. They accused four persons of being concerned in bewitching her, and demanded that one should be delivered to them to be put to death. This Imunga refused to do, excusing himself by pretending (perhaps saying in earnest) that he feared to offend the missionaries, &c. I think probably he took advantage of our known opposition to all such customs to sustain his own wish and determination. They then said if he would not give them some one to kill, he must pay them "plenty of things." That was the amount of their hearts' desire. The first demand was probably made to secure the last, and Imunga, I was told, promised to pay the amount agreed upon. Poor people! To what an end does sin bring men! They, left of God to devise and follow their own imaginations, have at last reached this dreadful state of superstition and degradation. They live in fear, and their customs give them trouble upon trouble. We hope and pray that God will hasten the time when these customs shall belong to the history, and only to the history of these people. God is able, and when it shall please him to pour out his Spirit upon us all, preachers and people, we shall see and rejoice in the day of his power.

Many are convinced of the folly, (and I hope the wickedness,) of their "ukuk palavers" and "witch palavers;" but they do not openly oppose those who do engage in them. They fear men more than they fear God.

Examination of the School.

June 25th.—Last evening, after supper, I sent notice to two or three head-men, who had boys in school, that "as this was the last day of the school session, I would be glad to have them present, and hear for themselves, and know how their boys were progressing." The boys and men who had attended school became quite anxious as to how they would appear, and I could hear them reading and spelling to each other last evening when I passed along to the boys' house. All seemed to become excited, some more, others less, as in our schools at home. One man said "he feared he would have plenty of shame." I had reviewed for two days, that is, heard them read all they had gone over during the session. I did not intend to have a public examination, and therefore made no effort to get the people out, other than the notice mentioned; but the fact that I had given such an invitation, awakened an interest and anxiety far beyond my expectation among the scholars. The morning came, the bell rung, and brother Mackey accompanied me. We soon had "quite a respectable house." Few whose names were on the roll but were present, and about fifteen men, mostly head-men, or men of a like influence, and a handful of "ladies"—Corisco ladies.

The exercises were conducted nearly as usual—hearing the scholars read and spell portions selected at random from the lessons they had gone over during the session, and answering a few simple questions. They were, as a general thing, able to read and spell what was required, and gave a prompt answer to the questions which they had learned. These exercises occupied near an hour and a half, and although the spectators did not understand what was read, or but a very small part, they gave attention to every boy—to each boy as to their own—an attention which did not weary, and which bespoke an interest such as I did not expect. I think I have stated simply the naked truth, and have withheld no modifying circumstance of any importance, unless that in a few instances where the scholar had not been able to give constant, or even good attendance, or for some other reason, not his fault, which left him deficient—as the timidity and fearfulness of some, who could not tell what they did know—a few such I favoured, so as to encourage them to keep up during the exercises, but the cases were so few that I should scarcely have mentioned it. The whole affair went off well. Brother Mackey made a few remarks, to which they gave as good attention as the United States Senate would give to a Daniel Webster. I felt quite encouraged, I assure you, and could not but hope that the effort would do good; giving the school a greater importance in their eyes, and throwing around it a greater interest than before existed. Such are our hopes; the result may not be so good.

The effort is vain, unless the Lord grant a blessing, for which we hope and pray. As a means, the school appears to us of great importance. Most of our hopes are and must be in the young. The Lord grant us wisdom from on high to learn and teach the way of wisdom, which is the way that leads to life eternal, through our Saviour Jesus Christ.

Preaching, and the effect of the gospel upon its first presentation to an unconverted heathen mind.

Preached as usual to an attentive audience, founding my remarks on John iii. 18: "He that believeth on him is not condemned," &c. If you were to form your opinion of their feelings from their attention, that opinion would be altogether a favourable one; and probably you would err, and so you might err, if I told you nothing but the literal truth, while I did not tell all the truth. Often when I had hoped that the people were somewhat impressed by the words which they had heard, I have been grieved, almost discouraged, by their levity and trifling conversation immediately after service. They hear, listen attentively, and at times seem impressed and convinced of the importance of the soul's salvation; and yet as soon as they are dismissed, they engage in talk so trifling, and laugh with each other so readily, that one would not suppose they had ever heard of the solemn truths to which they had given such apparent attention. The wicked heart is the same here as elsewhere. Alas! how many who hear the gospel fall under the description of those who "hearing, hear not!" Yet this is a source of comfort, they generally listen to what is said, and we may hope that some of the seed sown will bring forth fruit, by the blessing of God. After I had concluded the regular exercises, I told them that if any person wished to ask me any questions about what they had just heard, I would be glad to hear and answer them. Imunga, of whom I have spoken before, asked how he must come to Jesus Christ, or what he must do, if he wished to be a Christian. This gave me opportunity to repeat the substance of what had just been spoken, and set forth the plan of salvation through the Lord Jesus Christ in a different light. After I had answered this, he asked me "If a man did what God told him to do, and left his 'bad fashions,' and should take a little rum; would he lose his soul on that account?" This gave me an opportunity to speak of temperance, the evils of indulgence, and what God has said concerning the drunkard: "No drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of heaven." When a question is asked, all present are anxious to hear the answer, and are more likely to remember what they hear in this way, than what is spoken in the course of a sermon or address. We are, therefore, glad to have them question us. Oh! that they felt sufficiently interested to burden us with anxious inquiries after "the right way!" Having answered the questions, he continued, "These things which you tell us are good, and the children can learn them, and begin to do them, but they who have lived a long time according to their country's fashions cannot." I replied, that what he said was quite natural, and if each man was required to change his own heart, would be quite reasonable; but what he said was not correct, because God changed the heart, and it was as easy for him to change the heart of the old, as of the young, &c. The answer seemed to be satisfactory, at least he did not attempt to object; but all said "Ee," yes. This is a very common notion with which they would put off the responsibility of attending to these things, and soothe their conscience.

Tour round the Island—Conversation with a sick man.

Monday, 27th.—After leaving a few directions concerning the chapel, I started, in company with my interpreter, to visit some of the towns which I had not seen. The first town we passed through I had been in before. I did not have any direct personal conversation on religion, but told them that we were beginning to build a chapel near them, and urged upon them the duty of attending. They professed to be pleased, and said they would attend. We could hear them talking about the matter, and what I had said, after we had gone some way on our road to the next town, where we soon arrived. The headman complained of being unwell. He had been, a few months before, very sick, to all human appearance, near his end. After salutations and some general talk, I reminded him that we must all die; we would soon all die; and therefore we ought to think about this often; that he, of course, as others, must die, and God only knows the exact time; and as he had said he was sick, I urged that it was especially the course of wisdom for him to think about his condition and his danger; this sickness might be his last; and we should be ready to die at any time. I spoke of the consequences of sin when the sinner dies unpardoned, the blessedness of those who love God, and of the way of salvation through a Redeemer. He assented to all, saying, (the words were, "Bwam, bwam,") good, good, and made some remarks about Christians being willing to die—"they no fear to die,"—which, I assure you, is not true of the people here, who have a dread of death.

Leaving him my wishes that he might be restored to health, if that should be pleasing to God; but especially that he might be made holy and fit for heaven—we departed for the next town. We found the headman in his palaver-hall, chatting with a friend, quite at his ease. The town was very cleanly in its appearance; all appeared neat and prepared for visitors, though this was not the result of an expectation of a visitor. We sat down in his hall or public room, and had quite a long talk; they seemed quite interested, though I did not doubt that it was chiefly the interest of curiosity. I endeavoured to take advantage even of that interest to impress upon their minds the importance of things eternal. When all was said, I felt that without the Lord's help, all is in vain:

"All our help must come from Thee."

IOWA AND SAC MISSION.

August 18th, 1853.

Those who feel desirous of knowing something of the internal arrangements of our missionary stations, will be very much interested in the following account of the daily labours of our brethren at the boarding-school among the Iowas and Sacs, by the Rev. S. M. Irwin. They will find in the same communication, also, a remarkable illustration of the difference of views, feelings, and character, of those of the heathen who have given heed to the gospel, and those who have turned their backs upon it.

Some little account, more in detail, of our work from day to day, and week to week, may be interesting. We uniformly rise at five in the morning, and as uniformly breakfast at six. The hour from five to six is spent in getting all the children up, washed, combed, and ready for breakfast, and breakfast ready for them. At six, our first bell brings us all together into the chapel for worship, except some of the larger girls, detained with the breakfast. Immediately after worship, a second bell calls us to the dining-room, where we all breakfast together. Fifteen minutes after breakfast is over, all the girls except those engaged in the kitchen and dining-room, are taken into the school-room, where they receive instruction in sewing and knitting, until a quarter before nine. At nine school commences, and continues, with two recesses, one in the forenoon and one in the afternoon, and an hour for dinner, until four in the afternoon. Fifteen minutes after school is out, the girls are again called in to sew until half-past five, when supper is ready. After supper, they have exercise until bed time. This is our regular round with all the girls except the larger ones, who work by turns in the kitchen and other work of the house.

The boys go to work on the farm immediately after breakfast, and continue until nine; have the same school hours with the girls, and after school are out again on the farm until supper.

In the evening, we all worship together in the dining-room, immediately after supper, and before leaving the room. From seven to eight o'clock in the evening, according to the time of year, the children are called into their separate school-rooms, when with a teacher or one of the mission family, they sing and have prayer before going to bed. At present Miss Rea teaches the girls letters, and Miss Ross teaches them sewing, &c.

Mr. Williams' time is all given to the boys. He teaches them in school, goes with them to work and works with them. In working our corn and garden, cutting down weeds, clearing fence corners, chopping wood, &c., we have been able to find more than work enough for all our boys, and of a kind that the smaller ones could do something. Work in the kitchen and dining-room, with washing, scrubbing, milking, and the like, has taken nearly all the time of our larger girls. Still they are learning some. One of them (Mary Childs) has, since spring, committed to memory the entire Shorter Catechism, and on last Friday evening received her reward, one of the nice pocket Bibles you sent us. Mrs. Williams' time is given to the care and mending of the boys' clothes, with part of the washing, and care of a part of the house. Mrs. Irvin's time is given to the oversight of the kitchen, dining-room, girls' clothes, washing, &c.

My own time is so divided up, I can scarcely tell you what I do. Our regular religious services, besides family worship, are, Sabbath-school at nine o'clock Sabbath morning, preaching in English at the station, or in our chapel, at eleven. This service is usually attended by our white neighbours, and our congregation, including our own family, is uniformly from fifty to sixty. The afternoon of the Sabbath is given to the Indians at their villages or settlements, and in the evening we have prayer-meeting in English at the station. Tuesdays I visit the Indians at their houses and settlements. Wednesday evening we have our regular weekly prayer-meeting. The forenoon of Friday is also spent with the Indians, and the afternoons uniformly given to our school, in giving religious instruction to the children. The intermediate hours are spent in various ways. A good deal is given to repairs, hooping tubs, buckets, and barrels, mending ploughs, wagon, gates, bars, doors, and windows—a nail here and a screw there. Oats and hay to stack, and work to lay out for the boys. Then here are the poor Indians to wait upon and see to. Just now one called, and very modestly asked for a piece of soap to dress a deer skin, and his poverty and importunity having prevailed, must lay down the pen and wait upon him. Their very frequent calls for medicine, to get teeth pulled, get bled, and the like, must be attended to; and their long stories of suffering, sorrow, and want, must be listened to, as the only present gratification we can render them, and then improve the occasion to point them to a better inheritance. All these little things seen to, and there is not much time left for reading or corresponding.

My efforts to preach to and instruct the Indians of the village in their own language are not attended with that ease to myself, or apparent good to the Indians, that we could wish. I cannot yet speak with that ease and fluency to them in their own language on the subject of religion that I would love to; and the truth, when spoken, seems to make but little impresssion; so that either from my bad language, or their dullness to comprehend, or from both, but little progress seems to be made. Frequently after I have spoken to them for some time on an interesting subject, I will inquire if they understand. "Yes, we understand," is the reply. "Do you understand it all—understand what I mean?" "Yes, we understand it every word." But then when I inquire more particularly of them their understanding of the ideas and truths I have been trying to explain, they seem to have gathered little or nothing of the real meaning or idea. Oh! how much we do need the constant exercise of a true and living faith! how far this work is above and beyond the power of man! how often we are reminded that it is "not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts!"

It is, however, interesting to mark the difference there is in the minds of those who have had some advantages of education, and those who have had none at all. There are those in the village, a number of them who have been with us for some time, who have had time and opportunity to learn the first lessons of revelation and Christianity, whose minds are a little opened, and have learned a little to think and reflect, though yet all in their own language. When we meet with one of these, the difference between their minds and those who have had no such advantage is very obvious. This was strikingly illustrated in two cases met with in a visit but a few days ago.

The first was an old Indian man, perhaps sixty years of age, far sunk in sickness, and will probably be in the world of spirits before this reaches you. When spoken to about his condition and future prospects, he manifested no fear, but said he was willing, and not afraid to die. On being told that he had yet a sinful heart, and that he did not love God, and was not prepared for heaven and happiness when he died, he said it was not so, that he had a good heart: that when young he had been bad, went to war, stole horses, &c.; but he had quit all this, and was now a good man, and that God knew he was good, and that was the reason that he had lived so long; and now "why should I be afraid to die," was his conclusion. Nor would he be driven from this ground.

The second was a young woman, who had been a good deal at the mission, and who has had considerable religious instruction, though apparently to but little purpose. She is young, in good health, and a fair prospect of long life. We found her alone, as we had the old man, and not long after we had parted from him. When her spiritual condition, and sinful nature, and future prospects were brought before her mind, she was soon moved to tears, and wept bitterly. When she could control her feelings a little, she said she was a sinner, and felt it deeply; that she believed if she was sent off now, she would be for ever lost. On being asked whether it was for any particular sin or crime she was afraid of being lost, she said no, but because she had a wicked heart, and did not love God. "And yet," said she, "when I hear the children of the mission sing, (her house was in hearing distance from the mission,) I feel as if I wanted to go and join them, but I am ashamed." Her mind seemed in some degree to be prepared for the truth; it was like the fallow-ground, broken up, while the other was as impervious as the rock. A contrast of these cases seems to afford encouragement to the labours of our school in preparing and opening the young minds for the truth. But I must close. I am, as ever, your obedient servant,

S. M. Irvin.

CHINA: SHANGHAI MISSION.

The following communication from Mr. Wight, in relation to the distribution of books among the Chinese, and the views and character of the Roman Catholic converts among this people, will be read with interest.

As I went into my chapel yesterday afternoon, I found a number of boatmen from the north of China waiting for books. These boatmen have been the most greedy book beggars which I have met with for a long time. There are quite a large number of them who have come on rice junks, and they go from one missionary house or chapel to another, asking for books. Most of them appear to know a few characters, and many read quite well. I had given them at different times a number of books, and they were the most pleased with Dr. McCartee's almanac, which has a number of illustrations, maps, &c., which when they once got hold of, they would for a time accept of nothing else, until they had exhausted my supply. What their object is in getting the books I don't know, but hope they may be the means of scattering much good seed in the distant province from which they have come. (They all say they are from Tien-Tsing, which is the port of entry to Pekin.) On the afternoon of which I am speaking, there were some ten or fifteen of them who had come in. I asked them to be seated, in hopes that though their dialect is so very different from this, still they might be able to catch a few words. A few others also came in, and after I had requested them to stop smoking and talking, I began. Soon after, two well-dressed Chinamen came in, who sat down and listened attentively, while I was attempting to show that all were sinners in the sight of God. To prove this, I mentioned a number of vices to which they are addicted. One of these was opium smoking. One of the well-dressed Chinamen asked, "Why then do you bring opium?" I told him I did not come to China for that purpose, or to trade in any way, but simply to preach the truth. "But why do you not prevent your countrymen from bringing it?" I told him I did not approve of their bringing it; that he must not blame all foreigners for what only a part of them were engaged in, any more than it would be proper for me to say all the Chinese smoked opium, when only a part of them did so. "But," said he, "it is good to smoke." But how will you prove that? and I immediately spoke of its effects; some of which he denied, as he had not experienced them, and he had smoked for years. He did not, however, wish to hear more, and wished his friend to go, but he seemed anxious to listen, and did so for some time. The first one, however, was dissatisfied, looked vexed, and finally got up and left. My audience now not being a very encouraging one—full half being boatmen who I found did not understand me—so I gave them some books and dismissed them.

Among those who came up to my table for books, was a young man, apparently about twenty, who asked me what was the difference between what I taught and what the Roman Catholics taught. I made no very direct reply, but told him that if the Roman Catholics repented of their sins and believed in Christ, they would be saved. But he preferred to believe in Christ as the Roman Catholics taught, and not as I said. Very well, I replied, the important thing is to believe in Christ, and asked him, You are a Roman Catholic, then? Yes, he said, and his parents before him. He then mentioned a number of families, some of whom are among the wealthiest and most respectable in the place, and said they numbered many thousands in the city and province. (The usual estimate in this province is from sixty to seventy thousand.) Seeing the young man disposed to converse, and that he was intelligent and frank in his expression of opinions, I asked him how many souls a man had. He replied, three, the usual answer among the Chinese, who say that a man has three souls and six spirits: but I was surprised to hear it avowed by a Romanist, and asked him what became of these souls at death. His answer was very much like the one usual among the Chinese, except that he substituted a different word for the Buddhistic purgatory. One soul went into this Romish purgatory, another remained in the coffin, and another was with the ancestral tablet. But what kind of a place is purgatory? A place, he said, where souls are purified by fire. But don't those who believe in Christ go directly to heaven, without going through the fires of purgatory? Only, he said, those who have been very good. I referred him to thief on the cross, who was told, "This day shalt thou be with me in paradise." But how do they get out of purgatory? By the prayers of saints, and especially the intercession of the priests. But, I said, the priests are all sinners—men like you and I. No, he said, they had power, and only committed the smallest offences. They are all sinners, I replied, from the Pope down; all men are sinners, and none can be saved except through Christ, who saves us wholly, and not in part. From this the conversation passed on to the mass, and the doctrine of transubstantiation. He maintained that the wafer, by the prayer of the priest, was changed into the veritable body of Christ. I referred him to what he had told me a short time previous about the death, resurrection, and ascension of Christ, when he had said that Christ would return no more till the end of the world, how then could he come down every time mass was said? He discussed the subject with much earnestness, speaking of the efficacy of the mass, and saying that Christ had said we must partake of his body. But how, I asked, were we to get the benefit, how partake of his flesh and blood? Christ had also said, "The flesh profiteth nothing, and that which goeth into a man defileth not a man, but that which proceedeth from the heart." But he said he could prove the doctrine. I told him if he would prove it to me out of the Bible I would be satisfied, and proposed the next Tuesday, at my usual afternoon service. He said he could not come then, but would the next Sunday, and bring his holy book, which I suspect, however, was his term for the breviary, and not for the Bible.

Quite a number had come in and listened, my teacher also was sitting by, and they all spoke of the difference, which seemed unaccountable. They worship the same God, and the same Jesus, and how was it there was such a difference? My teacher, to whom the question was addressed, said that we were originally the same, but the Romanists had become gradually more and more corrupt, adding on devices of their own. The answer seemed to satisfy them. As I left, I requested my young friend, for I began to feel a deep interest in him, that he would come the next Sabbath. He promised to do so, and I went the next Sabbath, hoping he would be there, but he was not.

Though I have frequently met with Roman Catholics before, this was the first time I had met one who seemed willing to enter upon any discussion of their doctrines. Once before, when I was talking about the deluge, I mentioned the length of the ark as about four hundred feet. After I was through, a man came up and said, "How long did you say the ark was?" I told him. "No," he replied, "it was six hundred feet." I asked him how he knew, and he had already found the place in a manuscript book, where it was given as he said. I have never been able to get hold of any of their books so as to examine them, but suppose from the conversation with the young man mentioned above, that some of them must be quite full in Scripture facts. He was acquainted with many even of the minutest facts in our Saviour's life. It is somewhat different here, I suspect, from other heathen countries. The Chinese will have schools, and the Romanists must also keep up with the education of the people. They interfere as little as possible with their customs and superstitions. Hence, though there is not much elevation, there is what every Chinaman of ordinary advantages possesses—some knowledge.

What struck me most forcibly was how completely their whole system of superstition had been transplanted to China. The arguments used in defence of purgatory, transubstantiation, and the dependence placed upon works, prayers, sanctity, and power of the priests, is just the same here as in America, England, or Rome. I had hoped that among the heathen they would have preached a purer gospel; but here, as well as elsewhere, they appear to have made the word of God void by their traditions. Their religion consists very much in meats and drinks, as the young man whom I have mentioned spoke particularly of his not eating meat on Friday and Saturday. It is also an interesting fact that the insurgents at Nanking, who have destroyed idols wherever they have gone, have also destroyed the images and pictures of the Roman Catholics. They looked upon them as a species of idolatry which was in as direct violation of the second commandment as the images of heathen worship.

CHINA: NINGPO MISSION.

JOURNAL OF MR. CULBERTSON.

Disturbances in the country.

April 14th.—In consequence of the disordered state of the country, the numerous vagabonds in this neighbourhood, especially the Canton and Fuhkien men, have been emboldened to attempt to plunder the neighbouring villages. At one village, a few miles north of Shanghai, some of the robbers were caught a few nights since by the people, and summary punishment inflicted. Some of them, it is said, were delivered over to the authorities, to await the tardy justice of the law; but lest they should by any means escape the punishment they merited, four of them were executed on the spot, by being burned to death. On another occasion, at a different place, two men were seized, and treated in the same way. The villagers combine for their mutual protection, so that all assemble when the alarm is given. A few such examples as have been made of the marauders, will probably serve to check the spirit of plunder, and keep the country quiet.

This afternoon a large number of Fuhkien and Canton men made a demonstration against the workmen engaged in throwing up defences for the protection of the foreign community. They came evidently with the intention of putting a stop to the whole proceeding, objecting to such a use of the land, though a very small portion of it belonged to them. They were informed that ample remuneration would be made to the owners of the land, and that they could not be allowed to interfere with the work, as it was a matter of absolute necessity. These arguments would probably have had little weight, had they not been backed by a party of sixty marines and two field-pieces. They eventually withdrew without doing any harm, though they also were provided with a field-piece.

An earthquake, and the attendant phenomena.

April 15th.—Last night, at a quarter past eleven o'clock, we had a severe shock of an earthquake—or rather two shocks in quick succession. At half-past eleven o'clock there was another shock, somewhat less severe than the former, and some time after twelve o'clock there was a fourth, though very slight. At half-past twelve o'clock to-day there was another shock, not severe, but very perceptible. By the shock of last night clocks were stopped, and several walls cracked. A court wall on the premises of one of the mercantile firms was thrown down, and a pile of cotton bags in the warehouse of another was thrown over.

April 21st.—Yesterday and to-day there has been a continuous fall of dust. It is remarkable that this phenomenon is always observed after an earthquake, though it also occurs when there has been no previous earthquake. The Chinese say there is another singular phenomenon connected with the earthquake. It is the appearance on the surface of the earth, in certain localities, of a whitish substance resembling dog's hair, which seems to exude from the ground. I cannot confirm this from personal observation, and am inclined to set it to the account of the imagination.

There is a rumour that at a place on the sea-coast, some twenty or thirty miles to the south of Shanghai, a tract of land suddenly sunk down, during the earthquake on the night of the 14th, and was covered to a great depth with water. A number of houses were thus swallowed up, and many lives lost. One report states the extent of land to be about a mile square, but others make it much greater. As the rumour has prevailed for some days, and is generally believed, there may be some foundation for it, but although the distance is so small, the modes of intercommunication are so slow, and the means of communicating intelligence so imperfect, that it is utterly impossible even to form an opinion as to the probable truth of the matter.

A visit of two of the steamers of the Japan expedition —The probable results of this expedition.

April 17th.—The Susquehanna and Mississippi steamers, attached to the Japan expedition, sailed to-day for the Loo-Choo islands, where it is understood they will remain a short time, before proceeding to Japan. The results to which this expedition may lead, no human eye can foresee. All we can certainly know is that he who knoweth the end from the beginning, will accomplish by its means precisely the results which he designed to accomplish in causing it to be fitted out. The present aspect of the world at large, in connection with the promises of God, rather than any confidence in the power of armed intervention, or the wisdom of diplomatists, may justify the expectation that it will result eventually in the opening of that populous empire to the promulgation of the gospel. This result, however, may be long delayed, and there is a possibility, if not probability, that the first result may be to involve the two nations in a disastrous war. The intentions of the United States Government are no doubt peaceful, but the expedition will appear in the Japanese waters in such a way as will not permit them to overlook an insult, or submit to the restraints heretofore imposed, while it is probable the Japanese Government will be incited to more than ordinary vigilance, and perhaps provoked to more than ordinary insolence. In view of the momentous results at stake, Christians will no doubt everywhere be fervent in prayer to him who turneth the hearts of men as he will.

A visit from a Missionary to the Insurgents.

June 9th.—The Rev. C. Taylor, of the Methodist mission, returned to-day from a visit to the Kwang-si insurgents at Ching-Kiang-foo. He was cordially received and entertained by them, and the commandant, Loo, gladly received the books which he presented. He spent the Sabbath in the city. An attack was made during the day by the fleet of the Imperialists, and there was constant firing from the shipping during most of the day. Little damage was done, however, and no lives lost, and the insurgents returned the fire only when there was a prospect of making some impression on the enemy. Mr. Taylor left on Monday morning, escorted to the gate by two mounted officers, he also being mounted, and by several thousand troops. A letter was put into his hands, however, addressed to foreigners at Shanghai, the puport of which is that though they will be glad to maintain intercourse with their foreign brethren when peace is established, they think it inconvenient and undesirable during the continuance of hostilities.

Chinese morals.

We have an instructive illustration of the state of morals among the upper classes of the Chinese, in the fact that on Saturday, the day prior to Mr. Taylor's arrival at Chin-kiang, a proclamation was issued at Shanghai, by the District Magistrate, stating that the insurgents had been driven out of that city, and had fled to Nanking. His object, no doubt, was to hasten the country people in bringing in their taxes, which he finds great difficulty in collecting. He must have known well that there was not the slightest foundation for his statement. Little as falsehood is regarded by the Chinese, such barefaced attempts to deceive, by the publication of official falsehoods, must bring the authorities into contempt, and hasten the overthrow they wish to avert.

The writer called upon to act as interpreter for the United States' Commissioner.

July 2d.—The Hon. Mr. Marshall, having arranged with the Viceroy of Nanking for an interview, has requested me to act as his interpreter on the occasion. It is much to be regretted that the parsimonious policy of the United States Government has hitherto prevented the maintenance in China of a qualified corps of interpreters. If it is worth while to send embassies and maintain consuls, it is surely worth while to give them the means of communicating with the authorities in a manner befitting the dignity of the representatives of a great nation. Missionaries can be much better employed, and natives with a smattering of English are not qualified, even if they were trustworthy. I regret the necessity for starting on Saturday, even though it will not be necessary to travel on the Sabbath. The interview has been appointed at Kwung-san, a city some seventy miles from Shanghai.

A Sabbath in one of the rural districts near Shanghai.

3d, Sabbath.—I directed the boatmen, last night, to stop near Wong-du, a large village about twenty-five miles, by the stream, from Shanghai. They, however, carried me two miles beyond it. After an early breakfast, and Chinese morning service, I left the boat, with one of the boatmen as my guide, to go to the town. The day was excessively hot, though the heat was relieved by a fresh breeze. A well beaten path led through the fields to the village, and we occasionally met a countryman returning home from the town, having his morning purchases suspended from the two ends of a curved flat stick thrown across his shoulder. The fields everywhere presented a scene of busy activity. This poor people know no "sweet day of rest." In every direction might be seen labourers engaged in the various operations demanded by their crops at this season. Here is a party drawing water from the canal by means of the treadmill kind of chain pump; there another party, engaged in accomplishing the same task by working the pump by hand; and not far off may be seen the unwieldy form of the water-buffalo, slowly treading his weary circuit, under the shelter of a shed with a conical thatched roof, while a copious stream of water flows from the pump he is turning, into the green rice fields. A single attendant sits lazily by, enjoying the shade of the thick thatch, with nothing to do but to give his comrade, the buffalo, an occasional blow with his whip. The consideration shown for the buffalo in erecting a shed over him while at his work, is worthy of remark; for I have never observed such a shelter erected over a pump worked by men. The great majority of the labourers to-day, however, were engaged in hoeing and weeding the cotton. The cotton is thickly planted, and every stock is carefully hoed and all the weeds removed. So small is the quantity of land worked by one man, that the whole country is as carefully cultivated as a garden. The whole country to-day seems like one vast garden, and the scene presented cannot but give a vivid impression, both of the fertility of the soil, and of the density of the population. The view is not broken by fences or hedges, for there are no such divisions between the fields, but there are many beautiful spots, where a clump of beautiful trees, or a grove of thick set bamboo, shelter from the heat of the sun, and partially conceals from view a little hamlet of some half a dozen low, wretchedly built, dilapidated houses. The scene is beautiful and picturesque at a distance, but it is sad, on a nearer view, to see human beings so thickly crowded in such comfortless dwellings. Still more sad is it, when, on opening a conversation with these hardworking and apparently contented people, you find they have nothing to hope for beyond the present life, and no knowledge of any other wants than those of the body.

I observed many fields occupied by the indigo plant, and the business of dying cloth seems to be extensively carried on in this vicinity. I passed many vats used for this purpose. They are circular in shape, and lined with brick.

Near the town I observed a temple, around the door of which several persons were sitting. I entered and sat down, glad to escape from the heat of the sun. In a short time a number of persons were gathered around me, to whom I had an opportunity of making known something of the truth. Some of them had heard the name of Jesus before, but the greater part were entirely ignorant of the subjects on which I spoke to them. After conversing for some time I entered the village. It is built on a small stream, which unites with the larger stream a short distance below, and the greater part of the houses stand on one long, narrow street. After passing through nearly its whole length, I observed a very high bridge, with three handsomely turned arches. Upon this I thought I might speak to the people, but a young man gave me so pressing an invitation to go into a neighbouring tea-shop, that I could not well decline, and was glad to escape from the rays of the sun. He conducted me to an upper room, a crowd pressing after us. I found a cool breeze blowing, and from the back window was seen the high bridge, its top overlooking the roof of the building. We sat down at one of the tables, and tea was placed before us. I opened Milne's tract on the soul, and conversed for a long time with a number of apparently interested listeners, on the subject it suggested. It was difficult to convince my friend who had invited me in, that I was telling him anything he did not know before, he contending that the same doctrines were taught by the sages of his own country, though in a somewhat different form. They heard enough, however, to enable them to lay hold on eternal life, if they would but lay it to heart.

Returning through the town, I left a tract in each shop until my stock was exhausted. Just as I was leaving the place, some of the crowd of boys who followed me began to throw stones, but ceased at once on being reproved.

Returning to my boat, which is very comfortably fitted up, I had a quiet and pleasant Sabbath. The country people would occasionally cease from their labours to get a sight of the foreigner. The women, equally with the men, engage in the lighter kinds of field labour, and many of them may be recognised to-day by the peculiar flat straw hat which they wear. It is not intended so much to shield the head as the face, for it is perfectly flat, with the exception of a narrow rim bent downwards, and has a hole in the middle, through which the top of the head projects. It is fastened by two strings of beads, one passing under, and one over the chin.

In the afternoon I had a service with my boat's crew of five men, and explained to them the 1st, 2d, and 3d chapters of Genesis, in which they seemed much interested. The impression on their minds seemed to be that this religion was very fine for those who had time to attend to it, but that their necessities precluded them from its blessings. They seemed well satisfied with this conclusion, still we know not what word may prove a word in season, and seed may often spring up and bring forth fruit where we least expect it.

July 4th.—Leaving my stopping place at midnight, I had a fine run before a strong breeze, and at seven o'clock had arrived within a mile of my destination. I stopped for a short time by the side of a shady grove. I found it to be a burying-ground, and an inscription on the gateway was to the purport that it was formed by the sixth generation of the Ching family, in the reign of the Emperor Yung Ching, about the year 1724. It was surrounded by a fence and narrow ditch, enclosing a space of perhaps a hundred yards square, and the grass and brushwood were so thick that it was almost impossible to penetrate it, and I desisted from the attempt. There are many fine trees in it. A very large amount of land in China is appropriated to the dead.

On arriving at the city, I found that the other boats, which had preceded me, were lying at the distance of a mile, not having yet come in, I missed by taking a different route. While waiting for them, I had a visit from a young man in the employment of the Taoutae, or Intendant of Circuit, of Shanghai. He was educated in the mission schools at Singapore, connected with the American Board. He reads and writes English very well. He said he had not forgotten the religious instruction he received in the school. He told me a proclamation had just been put up in the city, which purported to come from the god Kwan-te through the inspiration of one of his followers. It was in relation to the insurgents at Nanking, and declared that the devil had been permitted to enter into them and give them such great success on account of the sins of the Chinese people. I could not, however, obtain a copy of it.

Tricks of a Ventriloquist.

He related an occurrence which took place at Shanghai, which illustrates the superstition of the people, and shows that even the advantage of an English and Christian education does not eradicate it of itself. A Taouist priest professed to be in communication with the ghost of an old fox, which had lived several thousand years ago, and which was now endowed with reason, and would occasionally appear in the form of a beautiful young lady; in other words, it had become a fairy. This young man (his name is Fin-Siaou,) had visited the priest to examine the matter. He was informed that the fairy was just then absent, but would be back soon. The priest lay down to enjoy his opium pipe. After a while a noise was heard, and the priest sprung up, exclaiming that she was coming, and fell down on his knees near the door, at the same time lighting his incense-sticks. He then proceeded to inform the fairy that a friend of his wished to inquire in reference to his future fortune. She replied that she could not attend to him then, but must depart on important business; and while she was speaking, the sound ascended towards the roof, becoming fainter and fainter, until it ceased. This experiment convinced the experimenter that there was no deception in the case, and he informed a number of his friends, and the fairy soon became an important personage. A room was fitted up for her benefit, and many offerings in money were presented. One man gave large sums to be informed in what particular spot, and at what time he might obtain a fortune by digging in the ground. This went on for some time; but some one at length discovered that all the sounds were made by the priest himself. By way of satisfaction, they gave him a sound flogging. He was, of course, a ventriloquist. It is not surprising that ignorant heathen are deceived by such follies, when those who have the Bible in their hands become an equally easy prey to the wiles of the devil, and believe greater absurdities.

The reception of the United States Commissioner by the Viceroy.

At half-past eleven o'clock the Commissioner landed under the usual Chinese salute of three guns. A guard of honour was furnished by the authorities. The streets through which we passed had been carefully swept, and every obstruction removed. The people appeared anxious to see the strangers, but were as orderly as possible. In fact, perfect silence reigned, and those who ventured to speak at all, did so in a whisper. This is a walled city of considerable size, and once a place of importance, though now much reduced. The walls enclose a space nearly, if not altogether, as large as those of Shanghai. I trust the time is not far distant when these multitudes of quiet and industrious people will have churches dedicated to the worship of God, and their own pastors to guide them in the way of life. It was sad to look on so many eager faces, and many handsome faces, too, and reflect that among them all there was not one Christian, perhaps not one heir of heaven; but many of them may yet be brought into the kingdom of God.

The Commissioner was received by his Excellency the Viceroy in the most friendly manner, and after the business was accomplished, a costly dinner was served up. The reception took place in the temple of the guardian god of the city. This is an extensive building, or rather series of buildings, and in its rear is a fine pleasure-ground, adorned according to Chinese taste, with artificial ponds and rockwork. In the centre is a large mound, surmounted by a summer house, and the whole ground is shaded by large trees. In a shed in the rear of it are some half a dozen well executed figures in various attitudes. The execution evinced no inconsiderable skill on the part of the artist.

Hiang, the Viceroy, was Lieutenant-Governor at Canton during the war with England. He belongs to an illustrious family, related to the Imperial house by marriage, if not by blood. He has six brothers, all of whom are governors of provinces, and officers of the first rank. He is sixty-three years of age, a long, thin visage, a bright, quick eye, and remarkably long ears. This last feature is regarded as a mark of superior intelligence, and especially in case the eye is so set that a man can see his own ears, as it is said his Excellency, Hiang, can do.

Having returned to our boats, we removed a short distance from the town to a cool place near a pagoda, and waited until evening. The Viceroy also leaves this evening to return to Suchan, having made the journey to this place expressly to meet the Commissioner. After dark, we took up our voyage homeward.

Disturbances in Shanghai.

July 6th.— I reached home last night at eleven o'clock. There was a serious riot in the city yesterday. The people seeing some prospect of a change of rulers, are dilatory about paying their taxes, which are here paid by the farmers in kind. After long delay, the authorities attempted to use coercive measures, and four men were seized. The country people, however, determined not to yield, and they yesterday collected in the city in great numbers, armed with the heavy sticks used in carrying burdens, but without any iron weapon of any kind. They proceeded to the office of the District Magistrate. That officer received them in his court, and harangued them, representing that he was only acting in obedience to orders, and setting forth the pressing necessities of the Imperial treasury. While speaking, he received several blows, which put an end to his argument, and he made good his retreat. The rioters then demolished the furniture of his official residence, breaking chairs and tables into fragments, tearing down windows, doors, and partitions; and, in short, doing as much damage as they could, without setting fire to the premises. They then proceeded to the houses of some of the constables, and tore them down, making a bonfire of the wood-work and furniture. I visited one of these houses to-day, and observed amidst the rubbish of the ruined house a neat-looking coffin. This no doubt contains the corpse of some member of the family, and was kept in the house. It was held inviolable by the mob. It is becoming more and more evident that the present Government have no power to coerce the people. There must, of necessity, be some change very soon.

JULUNDUR SCHOOL.

The following slip from the Lahore Chronicle will show how the School at Julundur and our missionary work in India is regarded by the English residents of the country.

JULUNDUR, Jan. 31.—An interesting examination of the American Mission School at Julundur took place at noon on the 29th of January. As a most striking sign of the times, it may be mentioned that the Kapoortullah Rajah and natives of rank attended in great numbers, and therefore had an opportunity of hearing the Christian religion described in all its beauties, and idolatry exposed in all its deformity.

The examination included the first book of Euclid, English Grammar, reading, geography and the maps, after which several scholars came forward with much spirit, and read essays of their own composition in the native language. The subjects were—the evils of keeping their females behind the purdahs—on education as desirable for the India female—the effects of good government—on the evils of monopoly—on division of labour, &c. It was gratifying to witness among the visitors Mr. McLeod, the Commissioner, Mrs. Colonel Penny, Dr. and Mrs. Corbyn, Major and Mrs. Edwardes, Colonel and Mrs. Boileau, Major Holmes, &c., &c. After the distribution of the prizes, Mr. McLeod expressed himself highly gratified, and urged the youths to persevere in the studies they had so well begun. The Rajah in like manner said, that he and his friends had been much delighted and surprised at the success of the scholars, and, as a proof, made the Institution a handsome present.

The most remarkable feature in this establishment is, that it is conducted entirely by native Christians, whose consistent conduct, abilities, and conciliatory manners have secured not only the esteem and confidence, but support of all classes of the inhabitants of the city of Julundur. They have found that by sending their children to this school, they have learned to become obedient, preferring truth to falsehood, and no longer clinging to the vices and obscene language which distinguish their uneducated and immoral countrymen. It is to be hoped this Institution may become a model, which commissioners and deputy commissioners throughout the Punjab will copy; thus connecting education with Christian principles, they will be training up a religious and industrious population, securing the affections of the people, and consolidating the British Empire in the Punjab more effectually than by any of those means which have not the revealed will as a rule for the governed.

THE COLPORTEUR NOT A PEDLER.

A colporteur in North Carolina expresses the following judicious views of his calling:

"I go into the mountains, and take my horse and vehicle to some point and leave them, and put my bag of books on my back, and travel round the mountain paths from cabin to hut; sometimes lying on a dirt floor without any supper or covering, except what I have on; and when I ask the families to kneel down to pray before lying down to rest, they do not know what I mean; consequently I have to take a new start in talking and explaining how important it is to ask our heavenly Father to pardon our sins, and watch over us during our sleeping hours. True, these cases are not very common, but such have taken place, in my wanderings from place to place. Believe me, I was truly rejoiced when I read your letter, to know that you thought well of my last report; especially that part relative to praying for God's blessing on my efforts in doing good to those who are in ignorance in regard to their soul's salvation. And farther, that you consider talking and praying in families was the great secret of success, and means by which true dignity was to be conferred upon the great employment of the colporteur, to raise him far above the pedler of merchandize. I believe that through the blessing of God, the efforts of his people in sending the words of truth and soberness to hovel and hut, by prudent and judicious men, are one strong arm the Church has employed for the evangelization of the world. And what a great blessing it is to be a co-worker in this great and glorious enterprise! Although we may have difficulties, troubles, and disappointments, yet if we can be a means in the hands of the Master in doing good to our fellow-travellers to eternity, we should be willing to be any thing for Christ and his cause."

INTERESTING SCENES—A DILIGENT BIBLE STUDENT.

A colporteur in Ohio makes the following interesting statement:

"A great part of my labours this quarter has been among Presbyterian families scattered through a very mountainous part of our country; those families live from eight to ten miles from any Presbyterian preaching place, and have preaching seldom oftener than once in four weeks, and sometimes so many months. Most of them seem to mourn their loss very much. I met with a very warm reception from all of them. They seemed glad to have a colporteur come among them, and bought of our books as they were able. To some of them, being very poor, I gave some books and tracts. My heart was much drawn out to them, and I spent a good deal of time talking to them of their situation, obligations, and the goodness and mercy of God towards all his creatures. Oh, how my own heart has swelled with emotion, when I would see, as I have seen, a father and mother, and perhaps half a dozen sisters and brothers, all in tears, and sobbing audibly, while listening to the simple preaching of a poor colporteur, trying to show to them the great love of God to us, in sending his Son Jesus Christ to die for us, that we might be saved.

"I am satisfied many of these children have not heard such plain preaching at their homes before. After witnessing one of these scenes, I have been loth to leave, and my heart has been constrained to cry out, 'great is the mystery of godliness.'

"I met with one old man, eighty-two years of age, who within the last nineteen years has read the Bible through in course forty-three times—three times this last year—and is now at the forty-third chapter of Isaiah for the fourth time. Besides, he studies two chapters each week, one for Sunday-school, and one for prayer-meeting, and has led the singing in the church for sixty years. He is a Presbyterian from top to toe."

ENCOURAGING.

A very efficient colporteur in Tennessee, writes:

"It is very encouraging when we can know that God is owning and blessing our work. Last month I attended a camp-meeting in Giles county, Tennessee, when a gentleman whom I had visited the first year I entered into the service of the Board, told me he was under great obligations to me and my books, for they had, he hoped, been the means of the conversion of himself and his wife. When they got the books, they commenced an earnest search to know what they must do to be saved, and they soon found peace in believing in Christ, and were added to the Presbyterian Church. His wife, in a few months, was seized with disease of the lungs, and died a most triumphant death."

DEMAND FOR BOOKS IN IOWA.

A colporteur in Iowa writes:

"I visit a great many families who have no means to buy a single book, and yet are very anxious to have books. I find very many who never knew of such an institution as the Presbyterian Board of Publication, and they are generally much pleased with the books; and many would buy liberally, if they had the means, who are not members of our Church. I could give away any amount of books and tracts of our Board, if the circumstances of the Board would permit, and in some cases, perhaps, I have been too liberal; but when I call on a family who are evidently poor, and see many children who have no religious books, and who seem very desirous to have them, I can hardly leave them without giving one or more volumes. I called at a destitute looking cabin, in a very wild and desolate region of country, where there was certainly no opportunity of religious privileges; I found a poor widow with five children. Her husband had been killed in an affray between two other men, when he was endeavouring to separate them, some two years ago, leaving her very destitute of means. Her two oldest children could read, and she wanted some books for them as well as herself; she said she had but one quarter of a dollar about the house, but she would cheerfully give that for a book. I hesitated whether to take it or not, but she seemed anxious to have the book, so I took the money for one book, and then gave her another worth as much, and some tracts, for which she seemed to be very thankful."

VALUE OF BOOKS.

As late as the year 1471, when Louis XI. borrowed the works of an Arabian physician from the Faculty of Medicine at Paris, he not only deposited, by way of a pledge, valuable plate, but was obliged to procure a nobleman to join with him as a party in a deed, by which he bound himself to return the books, under a considerable forfeiture. When a book was bought, the affair was of so much importance that it was customary to assemble persons of high character, and to make a formal record that they were present on the occasion. It was enacted by the statutes of St. Mary's College, in Oxford, in 1446, that no scholar should use a book in the library above one hour, or two hours at most, lest others should be hindered from the use of the same. In the Middle Ages, the booksellers were those who loaned single manuscripts at high prices. Such being the case, what could prevent those ages from remaining dark? How was it possible to diffuse knowledge? None but the rich could procure any thing to read; and the purchase of a few volumes impoverished kings. Instead of anathematizing those hapless ages, and wondering at their stupidity, we should do better to recollect with gratitude our own overflowing privileges of this nature, and recollect also with humility, our wretched misimprovement of them all. To whom much is given, of them much will be required.—Professor Edwards.

DODDRIDGE'S RISE AND PROGRESS.

This admirable work, which has proved, under the blessing of God's Spirit, a word of life to many a precious soul, continues to be published and circulated by the Board, in numbers to meet the undiminished demand. Seventeen thousand copies, in various styles of binding, have already been published. The Board have long had on their catalogue a cheap edition, in substantial binding, at 30 cents, to ministers at 24 cents, and by the quantity at 22 cents. It contains 323 pp. 12mo.

THE FAITHFUL MOTHER'S REWARD.

We find we did not overrate the merits of this book, when we announced it as certainly one of the most interesting instances of maternal fidelity, and infant piety, ever published in the English language. Some churches are taking measures for its general circulation. We are favoured with the following notice from Baltimore:

"The perusal of this volume, it is believed, is more likely to excite parents to fidelity in the religious, and especially in the 'catechetical instruction' of their children, than almost any book which has been given to the American public. How exceedingly desirable, therefore, to secure for it the widest possible circulation!

"Will not those who regret the prevalent disuse—compared with former times—of our excellent Catechism, in the early religious training of the young, co-operate in endeavours to secure such a result?

"Would you put honour upon our standards, commend it to your friends of other denominations. Place it in their hands, or induce them to procure it, and its perusal is certain.

"Will not Sabbath-school teachers become voluntary colporteurs, and carry this book for the inspection and purchase of all the families of their several neighbourhoods?"

The Presbyterian Psalmodist, containing tunes adapted to all the measures in the Assembly's Psalm and Hymn Book. By Thomas Hastings.

We are gratified to be able to announce that this book has met with general approbation throughout the Church. It has been on sale only eighteen months, and the Board have already printed 20,500 copies of it. When it is considered that the "name" of similar works is "Legion," this will be regarded as pretty conclusive evidence of its merit. The following is only one of many voluntary testimonials which the work has received.

"I do not think it possible to surpass this work in its mechanical execution, nor in the excellence of taste and perfect adaptation of music to metres, as displayed by Mr. Hastings its editor, &c. The want of such a work has long been felt, and all Presbyterians ought to be grateful to the Board for giving us this selection, which is so pre-eminently calculated to suit all fancies."

It has been suggested that the work would be more extensively useful, if an edition were published in patent notes. The Committee have long had this matter under consideration. There is no doubt that musical notation might be, and has been, very much simplified. But the question is, What system should be adopted? There are no less than four systems of patent notes now before the public, all claiming a preference to the old system, and to each other. What will suit one section of the Church, will not suit another. We fear this will have to remain an open question, until there can be a general expression of opinion in favour of some one system.

A BEAUTIFUL GIFT BOOK.

The Board have in press, and hope to have out by the beginning of the year, the "HISTORY OF THE WALDENSES IN PIEDMONT," prepared by a literary gentleman of acknowledged talents and taste, and illustrated with engravings on wood in the first style of the art, representing the most striking features of Alpine scenery.

It will be printed on tinted paper, and bound in various styles of fancy binding, to correspond with the "Book of Poetry," which has been pronounced by competent judges one of the most beautiful books ever issued from the American press.

The following is an extract from this interesting volume:

THE WALDENSIAN MARTYR.

A Waldensian pedler, named Romeyer, having occasion to pass through Draguignan, in France, was arrested on the charge of being a "Lutheran," in 1558. After various private interrogatories, in which he made no secret whatever of his religious faith, the tribunal of Draguignan assembled for his trial. An Observantine monk on the preceding day celebrated a mass to the Holy Ghost, "in order," as he said, "that the Holy Ghost might inspire the judges to condemn the cursed Lutheran to the flames." But his mass did not produce the effect he desired; for a young advocate, addressing the tribunal, pointed out that Romeyer had been guilty of no legal offence; that he had neither preached nor dogmatized in France; that he was a foreigner; was only occupied in Provence with his trade; and that justice, instead of condemning, ought to protect him. The whole bar supported this argument. The judges were half of them for an acquittal, half for condemnation, and the prisoner was relegated to his dungeon.

Upon the decision of the judges being made known, the Observantine monk, who had made a sort of personal matter of the case, and who saw the credit of his masses and his prayers singularly compromised in public opinion by this result of the trial, had the bells of his monastery rung, harangued the mob who assembled at the sound, and insisted that good Catholics should not permit an infamous heretic, a Lutheran, an accursed soul, to pollute with impunity the devout town of Draguignan with his presence. Having thus excited the populace, the worthy monk proceeded to the official and consuls of the town, representing that their honour was concerned in preserving intact the excellent reputation of their dear city; and then, all together, followed by the infuriated mob, went to the magistrates, vociferating that unless they condemned the heretic to be burnt alive, they themselves would denounce them to the parliament, the king, the pope, and to all the powers of the earth, to procure their destruction. Such is the religious fervour of Popery!

The lieutenant of the king, who at this time was the representative, in each district, of the administration, invoked the respect due to judicial forms, which ought not to be set aside, even against a heretic. "Kill him! kill him!" cried the people. "Burn him! burn him!" cried the people. The magistrate, unable to appease the tumult, promised to proceed to Aix, and lay the matter before the parliament. In consequence, an order was issued that the court at Draguignan should not try the prisoner; but fanaticism was not to be baulked of its prey. Barberi, the Attorney-General, repairing to Aix, procured the withdrawal of the prohibition, and permission for the judges at Draguignan to try the prisoner; or, in other words, judicially to assassinate him.

He was condemned to be first racked, then broken on the wheel, and lastly burned to death by a slow fire. He might have relieved himself from all these tortures by abjuration; but the monk, who was sent to make this proposition to him, returned with the announcement that he had found him pertinax, infallibly accursed. Forthwith, from all the pulpits round about, it was announced, that on the 16th of May, there would take place the public execution of an atrocious Lutheran; and in the town of Draguignan itself, proclamation was made by sound of trumpet, that every good Catholic should bring a billet of wood to form the funeral pyre.

On the appointed morning, the deputy-lieutenant, several judges, lay and ecclesiastic, and the consuls of the town, proceeded to the dungeon of the prisoner, to apply the torture. They displayed before him the rack, the cords, the wedges, the iron bars, all the instruments of torture invented by the successors of the martyr-apostle.

"Denounce your accomplices, abjure your errors, and save yourself these torments," said the deputy-lieutenant.

"I have no accomplices," replied Romeyer, "and I have nothing to abjure, for I profess only the law of Christ. You call my profession perverse and erroneous; but, in the day of judgment, God will proclaim it, against its transgressors, just and holy." Thereupon, relates Crispin, he was put on the rack, and cruelly stretched by the cords. In his anguish, he called unto God to have pity on him, for the love of Jesus. "Implore the Virgin," cried the idolaters. "There is but one Mediator," replied the sufferer, "even Jesus: oh, God, mercy!" and he fainted; for, upon his refusal to invoke the Virgin, the tormentors had wrested his limbs more cruelly than before. Fearing that he might die before he was burned, the monks and priests disengaged his mangled frame from the wheel; the bones of his legs and arms were broken, and their fractured points came through his flesh. Some cordial was given to him to restore animation, and he was then carried to the place of final execution, and fastened by a chain to the post which rose amid the pyre.

"Invoke the Virgin and the saints," thundered a monk. The poor pedler could only reply by a faint movement of the head in the negative. The executioner thereupon set fire to the pile. At first, being chiefly composed of branches and brushwood, it flamed furiously; but soon subsiding into a mass, the martyr hung suspended from the stake over the devouring heap; his lower limbs were scorched, his entrails came forth, and his poor frame was already consumed below, when his lips were still seen moving, emitting, indeed, no sound, but testifying, within, a last invocation of the martyr to his God, a last appeal to that Christ who had died for him.

A SEASONABLE PUBLICATION.

The Board have just published a translation into German of Dr. Alexander's "Thoughts on Religious Experience." While thousands of Germans are pouring into our country, many of them deeply tinctured with infidelity in its various forms, others bound in the chains of superstition and formalism, and, it is to be feared, but few acquainted with the pure doctrines and holy practice of the gospel, it is gratifying to know that a work so sound, so judicious, so attractive as this, is made accessible to these thousands in a language which they love. Will not the friends of the truth, the lovers of their country, and of precious souls, use their diligence to give general circulation to this important work?

BLANK FORMS.

The Board have published the following blank forms for churches and Presbyteries:

1. Form of Licensure,	per dozen, net,	25 cents.

At Washingtonville, Pennsylvania, on November 9th, the Rev. J. H. Rittenhouse, in the 33d year of his age.

"On Wednesday last, November 9th, the new Presbyterian church edifice at Washingtonville, in Montour county, was dedicated to the worship of Almighty God, attended by a train of circumstances such as perhaps never occurred before on a similar occasion. It was a very wet day, and at 11 o'clock, A. M., the Rev. John H. Rittenhouse, the pastor of the congregation, drove up, got out of his conveyance, tied his horse, raised his umbrella, and as he approached the church, and was within a short distance of the door, was seen to fall. He was immediately taken up by persons present, and carried into the church, where Drs. Hull and Caldwell made efforts to restore him, but he never spoke or moved after he fell—he was dead.

"His remains were soon removed to his late residence, three-fourths of a mile from the new church, where his wife and three children, one of them but a few weeks old, had separated with him but a very short time previously, for ever—in this life. The congregation, or those present, accompanied the remains to the house, and then returned to the church, when the Dedication Sermon, prepared by the deceased, was read by the Rev. D. Waller. The deceased was aged about 33 years, had taken a deep interest in the erection of this new house of worship, and as he was just about to enter it, to aid in the dedication, God called him from his field of labour, for some wise purpose, beyond the comprehension of those who are thus forcibly admonished to be ready for the end of time and the realities of eternity."—Danville Intelligencer.

On November 12, at Newton, New Jersey, the Rev. J. L. Shaffer, D. D. He has been pastor of the church there upwards of forty years.

THE PRESBYTERIAN SABBATH-SCHOOL VISITOR.

The third year of this periodical is now nearly completed. We are much encouraged in our labours in behalf of the children of our Church, by the words of approbation addressed to us from time to time, by parents and teachers. This is the more gratifying, as we confine ourselves in our selections to such reading as is appropriate to the Sabbath. It would be easy to make our little sheet more attractive by inserting articles of a secular character, but such a course would not satisfy our consciences. Our subscription list has been steadily advancing from the beginning, and if the increase in 1854 at all approximate that of former years, we will issue between fifty and sixty thousand copies. There are yet more than one-half of our churches which do not receive a single copy. Who among our pastors will introduce it next year?

We must remind our subscribers that our terms are cash in advance, and that all papers not re-ordered and pre-paid, must be stopped at the end of the subscription year. We hope none will be offended with this; we began with a more liberal policy, but this course has been insisted upon by so many of our subscribers that in the ensuing year it will be adhered to strictly.

The terms to those who receive it in packages from our agents, or by mail, and pay their own postage, will continue to be,

For a single copy, - - - -	$0.25
For six copies to one address, - -	1.00
Twenty copies to one address, - -	3.00
Forty copies to one address, - - -	5.00

For the benefit of those who wish to take advantage of the late Post-office law, we will affix stamps and supply the paper free of postage at the rates in the following table:

For $2, 10 copies.	For $7, 40 copies.	For $12, 70 copies.
" 3, 15 "	" 8, 46 "	" 13, 76 "
" 4, 20 "	" 9, 52 "	" 14, 82 "
" 5, 26 "	" 10, 60 "	" 15, 88 "
" 6, 32 "	" 11, 65 "	" 17, 100 "

The Visitor is sent free of expense for transportation to the following places:

Carter & Brothers, 285 Broadway, New York.
Rev. S. Guiteau, Baltimore, Maryland.
D. W. Harrison, Charleston, South Carolina.
Heman Packard, New Orleans, Louisiana.
Board of Colportage, 29 Fifth St., Pittsburgh, Pa.
J. D. Thorpe, Cincinnati, Ohio.
L. L. Warren, Louisville, Kentucky.
Keith & Woods, St. Louis, Missouri.

Orders for the Visitor, and remittances of money, should be addressed to Joseph P. Engles, Publishing Agent, 265 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

THE HOME AND FOREIGN RECORD.

By the late General Assembly it was "Resolved, That it be recommended to all our pastors to endeavour to increase the circulation of the Home and Foreign Record, the organ of the Boards of the Church, in order that our churches may be better acquainted with their respective plans and operations, and be induced to contribute more liberally towards their support."

We would respectfully solicit the attention of our ministers and elders to this recommendation at the present time. There are also a number of our subscribers in arrears, and though no one owes more than $1.50, yet in the aggregate the amount is near $2000; and at present we have not funds to meet our expenses.

☞ All moneys sent at our risk; but those who remit will please have their letters registered at their post-office.

THE

OF THE

Presbyterian Church in the United States of America.

VOLUME V. No. 1. | PHILADELPHIA, JANUARY, 1854. | PRICE PER YEAR, Fifty Cents.

TERMS REDUCED.

In order to increase the circulation of the Home and Foreign Record, the price of the paper will be reduced to 25 cents per copy, when sent in packages of not less than fifty to one direction. This reduction to take place from the 1st of January, 1854.

Congregations have now the opportunity of receiving the paper at this low price, by ordering a package of fifty copies or more, to be sent to the pastor, or any other individual whom they may name. But the money must in all cases be paid in advance.

We hope the churches will take action upon this subject immediately, and provide, as they now may at a very trifling expense, for the more general distribution of the paper among them. As the organ of all the Boards of our denomination, containing as it does the official record of their plans and operations, it ought to be universally circulated throughout our bounds. The intelligence it contains is indispensable to enable our people to comprehend and appreciate their responsibilities and duties; and it could not fail, by the blessing of God, if more widely diffused, to produce the happiest effect upon our Church. We respectfully but most earnestly request the pastors of our churches to bring this matter before their people.

N. B.—The terms of the paper, for any number less than 50, will remain as heretofore, viz., 50 cents per copy, payable in advance.

From the Episcopal Recorder.

A POOR, WAYFARING MAN OF GRIEF.

Some thirty years ago my father, who was a country clergyman, lived in a small village which was a great thoroughfare from the four cardinal points. At that period a large portion of the public travel was by private conveyances, and from this cause, if no other, ministerial intercourse was much more frequent than at the present day. It was generally understood that my father's house was "a minister's tavern;" seldom a week passed without a call from a stranger, if not an acquaintance; and I well recollect, that while impositions were occasionally practised on the hospitality of our home, we frequently found that we had entertained angels unawares.

One evening an old man with a son, a lad about twelve years of age, called at our door, and although not professing to be one of "the cloth," my father, observing that he spoke the language of Canaan, and being favourably impressed with his appearance, invited him to spend the night. At evening worship, the reading of the Scriptures being finished, the stranger asked permission to sing a hymn, which he did, accompanied by his little son, with an effect upon the whole family which I cannot attempt to describe, but which I can never forget to my dying day. The next morning it was repeated by request, with the same deep impression upon us all, and the stranger took his departure. Whence he came, and whither he went, or who he was, I have no recollection, but the following is the hymn, which though now common, may be interesting to your readers, as it was deeply so to us, from the circumstances detailed.

A poor, wayfaring man of grief
Hath often crossed me on my way,
Who sued so humbly for relief,
That I could never answer, Nay.
I had not power to ask his name,
Whither he went, or whence he came;
Yet there was something in his eye
That won my love, I knew not why.

Once, when my scanty meal was spread,
He entered; not a word he spake;
Just perishing for want of bread,
I gave him all; he blessed it, brake,
And ate, but gave me part again.
Mine was an angel's portion then;
And while I fed with eager haste,
The crust was manna to my taste.

I spied him where a fountain burst
Clear from the rock; his strength was gone;
The heedless water mocked his thirst;
He heard it, saw it hurrying on.
I ran and raised the sufferer up;
Thrice from the stream he drained my cup;
Dipped, and returned it running o'er;
I drank, and never thirsted more.

'Twas night; the floods were out; it blew
A wintry hurricane aloof;
I heard his voice abroad, and flew
To bid him welcome to my roof.
I warmed, I clothed, I cheered my guest;
Laid him on mine own couch to rest;
Then made the earth my bed, and seemed
In Eden's garden while I dreamed.

Stripped, wounded, beaten nigh to death,
I found him by the highway side;
I roused his pulse, brought back his breath,
Revived his spirit, and supplied
Wine, oil, refreshment; he was healed.
I had myself a wound concealed;
But from that hour, forgot the smart,
And peace bound up my broken heart.

In prison I saw him next, condemned
To meet a traitor's doom at morn.
The tide of lying tongues I stemmed,
And honoured him 'mid shame and scorn.
My friendship's utmost zeal to try,
He asked if I for him would die;
The flesh was weak, my blood ran chill,
But the free spirit cried, "I will!"

Then, in a moment, to my view
The stranger started from disguise;
The tokens in his hands I knew:
My Saviour stood before my eyes!
He spake, and my poor name he named;
"Of me thou hast not been ashamed;
These deeds shall thy memorial be;
Fear not; thou didst them unto me."

CHRIST'S ADVENT—BOOKS.

HEB. x. 7.—Then said I, Lo, I come, (in the volume of the book it is written of me,) to do thy will, O God.

I. Who is he that saith, Lo, I come? Not a mere man like us, although he came in the likeness of sinful flesh. Paul proves that he is greater than the priests of the law—greater than Moses, the writer of the law—greater than the angels, which attended upon its promulgation—yea, that he is himself the Giver of the law—the Lord from heaven—the Son of God—divine—God manifest in the flesh. His coming is his incarnation—his advent. Heb. i. and ii.

II. The circumstances of his coming. He humbled himself—made himself of no reputation—appeared in the form of a servant, that he might raise man from his degradation, to glory, and honour, and immortality. Phil. ii. 5—8.

III. The design of his coming.—"Lo, I come, to do thy will, O God." He came to do the will of God; this will is written in the book, and has relation to the law and its penalty. Christ came to obey the law, and to suffer the penalty of the law in the place of sinners, and thus to satisfy the justice of God, and make an atonement for sin. This he has done.

IV. And all this was foretold—In the volume of the book it is written. Here are the prophecies and the promises, and here is the record of their fulfilment. All we know of Jesus Christ is written in the book which contains the revelation of the will of God. Had we not the Bible, we should know nothing of the Saviour. And that the Scriptures reveal such a plan of salvation as that which has Christ for its centre, is a sufficient proof of their divine origin.

Remark:—we learn the propriety and importance of circulating books which speak of Christ—the Bible and religious books and tracts: in the volume of the book it is written. No one can rationally question the propriety of putting the Bible in as extensive circulation as possible. And those volumes and tracts which are based on the Bible, which speak of Christ as the Saviour of men, which unfold the way of salvation through Jesus Christ, which contain exhibitions of those truths which the Bible reveals, which illustrate and defend the doctrines, and enforce the duties revealed in the Scriptures, may also very properly be dispersed abroad. In this respect our Board of Publication is doing a great and good work. It has issued a large collection of most excellent works, and by its colporteurs and other agencies it is carrying them to the very doors of the people, and endeavouring to supply every individual with a portion of saving truth. And when we consider the efforts made to corrupt the public mind through the agency of a vicious press, there is enough to excite alarm, and to stir up to self-denying labour to counteract the streams of death which are flowing on every side. I need not dwell on the evils of a corrupt literature, whether in the volume, the weekly, or the monthly. The press and the mail groan under the burden of trash and fiction; and our public conveyances are haunted by the venders of what can only corrupt the heart and vitiate the morals of the community. It is time for the wise and good to awake. Our children are not safe. Let every thing of a doubtful tendency be banished; let truth alone be admitted to our houses and our hearts; and let every effort be made to supplant a corrupt literature by that which is pure and healthful. To this end let the works issued by our Board of Publication be spread abroad. They speak of Christ, they point to heaven. A small collection of these works, placed on board a ship, was blessed of God to the conversion of four of the crew; and we may hope that many, very many, by reading these books and tracts, may find Him who says, "Lo, I come, (in the volume of the book it is written of me,) to do thy will, O God."

THE NEW YEAR.

The commencement of a New Year is an appropriate time for forming, in dependence upon God, good resolutions for the future. Whatever may have been our past shortcomings, let us all resolve to be more faithful to the cause of Christ for the time to come.

We have reason to be thankful to the great Head of the Church for the progress that has been made in our country's evangelization during the past year, and for the encouragement that we have to go forward in the great work of Domestic Missions. Many churches have been revived and strengthened, and multitudes of souls have been converted, during the past year, by the instrumentality of our faithful and laborious missionaries. And the gospel has been proclaimed to thousands in places where the voices of Christ's ambassadors had never before been heard. From the reports of our missionaries, it is evident that God has blessed the labours of many of them, and that some of their churches have enjoyed the influence of the Holy Spirit in a remarkable degree.

But while we have cause for thankfulness for what has been done, by the blessing of God, the immensity of the work that remains to be accomplished should deeply and solemnly affect us with a sense of our obligations and duties. How little, comparatively, have we done—how little are we doing—to supply the immense destitutions of our country with the gospel! How many churches are still without pastors! How many thousands there are, who have none to break to them the bread of life! How inadequately are many of our missionaries supported, while engaged in their arduous and useful labours! How many churches still neglect to contribute any thing to our Domestic Missionary Board! What multitudes of professing Christians contribute but little, and pray still less, for the blessing of God upon the missionary work!

Let us all renew the consecration of ourselves to Christ, and determine, by the grace of God, to do more, and pray more, and give more to the cause of missions. How uncertain and short is human life! How vain and transitory are all worldly objects! How transcendently important is the salvation of our souls, and the eternal interests of our fellow men! This year may be our last! Let us act with a wise reference to our final accountability.

To our missionaries we would say—May God speed you, dear brethren, in your way! We know that you have many difficulties to contend with—many painful trials to endure. We deeply sympathize with you in your labours and afflictions, and pray fervently that God may sustain and comfort your souls. Continue to discharge your duties faithfully, and never forget your great responsibility to God. Never lose sight of the glorious recompense that awaits you in heaven. Resolve, in dependence upon God, to endeavour to be more zealous and prayerful during the present year, that you may, by the help of the Holy Ghost, be instrumental in winning many more souls to Christ. This year may be also your last! Let the time that remains to you be well and faithfully spent in the service of your Lord and Redeemer.

If, in the progress of your labours, you should be favoured to witness any special displays of the gracious presence and power of the Holy Spirit—if you should meet with any personal incidents connected with the conversion of souls, that would be likely to interest the people of God, furnish us with a narrative of them, that we may spread them before our readers, and so excite their pious sympathy and prayers. By such means you may vastly increase the interest of Christians in your missionary labours, and induce thousands to pray more fervently for your success.

MEETING OF THE BOARD.

The stated monthly meeting of the Board was held in the Mission Rooms, on Monday, the 12th of December, 1853. The Rev. John McDowell, D. D., in the chair—A. W. Mitchell, M. D., Secretary. The meeting was well attended, and the various matters brought before the Board elicited the interest of all present. From the minutes of the Executive Committee, it was evident that the operations of the Board are gradually expanding, and that the important work of Domestic Missions is prosecuted with vigour and success. The subjoined statement was presented by the Corresponding Secretary, and referred to him for publication, and we trust that it will be read with interest by all the friends of the good cause.

Mission Rooms, Philadelphia, December 12th, 1853.

The following statement will show the number of Missionaries commissioned and re-commissioned, and also the amount of receipts into the Treasury, from April 1st, 1853, to December 1st, 1853, as compared with the appointments and receipts during the same period last year.

I. The number of Missionaries commissioned and re-commissioned.

At Philadelphia, from April 1st, 1853, to Dec. 1st, 1853,	207
At Philadelphia, from April 1st, 1852, to Dec. 1st, 1852,	191
Being a gain of	16
At Louisville, from April 1st, 1853, to Dec. 1st, 1853,	138
At Louisville, from April 1st, 1852, to Dec. 1st, 1852,	96
Being a gain of	42

From this statement it appears, that during the first eight months of our fiscal year, as compared with the corresponding period last year, the number of missionaries commissioned and re-commissioned has been increased fifty-eight. (58)

II. Receipts.

At Philadelphia, received from April 1st, 1853, to Dec. 1st, 1853,	$26,164 98
At Louisville, received from April 1st, 1853, to Dec. 1st, 1853,	7,329 23
At Pittsburgh, received from April 1st, 1853, to Dec. 1st, 1853,	4,010 73
	$37,504 94
At Philadelphia, received from April 1st, 1852, to Dec. 1st, 1852,	$29,221 73
At Louisville, received from April 1st, 1852, to Dec. 1st, 1852,	5,565 61
At Pittsburgh, received from April 1st, 1852, to Dec. 1st, 1852,	3,535 26
	$38,322 60

It thus appears, that while the number of our missionaries has been very considerably increased, our receipts have fallen off during the same period eight hundred and seventeen dollars and sixty-six cents! (817.66.)

Church Extension.

Receipts from April 1st, 1852, to Dec. 1st, 1852,	$4730 69
Receipts from April 1st, 1853, to Dec. 1st, 1853,	4165 50
Deficit,	$565 19

It is obvious from this statement, that the Church Extension Fund greatly needs replenishing. The applications for aid are very numerous and pressing, while the receipts are comparatively trifling. A great amount of good might be accomplished by aiding congregations in the erection of church edifices, if we had the means.

III. Wants.

We continue to receive from various sections of our extended and growing country, the most urgent appeals for missionaries and missionary aid. Some of the most important and promising fields are now unoccupied for the want of men to supply them. Christians ought to pray more earnestly that the Lord of the harvest would send more labourers into his harvest. The harvest is great but the labourers are few!

IV. The state of Religion.

From the reports of our missionaries, we have reason to believe that the Lord is blessing their labours. The greater portion of them are encouraged in their work, and some of their churches have enjoyed the special visitations of the Holy Spirit. We have indeed great reason to be thankful to the great Head of the Church for the measure of success which he has graciously vouchsafed to his servants, while the immensity of the work which yet remains to be accomplished should deeply impress us with a sense of our obligations and duties.

G. W. Musgrave, Cor. Sec.

WHAT GOOD A FAITHFUL AGENT MAY EFFECT.

The following report of one of the agents of our Board, will be read with interest by all who love the cause of the Redeemer. Our excellent brother has not only laboured faithfully and successfully in collecting funds, but has laboriously and efficiently assisted the pastors in their efforts to do good to the souls committed to their charge. The meetings for preaching, prayer, and consultation, have been numerous, and the blessing of God has signally attended them, in the quickening of his people, and the conversion of many souls. The fact that so many youth have been thus brought under the saving influence of the gospel, and that several young men have been induced to prepare for the gospel ministry, are highly encouraging, and should excite our liveliest gratitude and praise to God. Let us pray more for our agents, that they may not only be successful in raising money for the Board, but that they may faithfully preach the gospel wherever they go, and be the honoured instruments of spiritual good to the souls of multitudes. To our worthy brother we say, God speed you in your great and good work!

CHAMBERSBURG, Dec. 7th, 1853.

Rev. and Dear Sir—As my first year in the service of the Board has just terminated, it may be due to the Board as well as myself, to make a brief statement of my visits to the churches during the year, and the results connected with them, as they relate to the interests of the missionary cause, and the progress of the kingdom of Christ. During the year, I visited and preached in about sixty of the churches in the field assigned me. The amount subscribed by these churches is over $3000, all of which, I doubt not, will be paid into your treasury before the close of your financial year. In several of the churches in which appointments were made, it was deemed most expedient not to make a contribution until a future time, owing to peculiar circumstances which imposed the necessity of a second visit to them at a more convenient season. Accordingly, in two of our large churches, I spent two Sabbaths during the year. In two others, two Sabbaths were spent, at an interval of about eleven months, but liberal subscriptions were made during each visit. It has been my aim to interest the pastors and elders, as well as the churches, more deeply in the work of sending the gospel abroad to the perishing of our land, and to awaken a more active and united zeal for the salvation of souls at home and abroad. With this view we have held special meetings for conference, preaching, and prayer, in prominent churches in the Presbyteries. Two were held in the Presbytery of Northumberland, five in the Presbytery of Carlisle, three in the Presbytery of Huntingdon, two in the Presbytery of New Castle, and three in the Presbytery of Donegal. These meetings were all, with one exception, well attended by both ministers and elders, and God's blessing attended them, in the outpouring of his Spirit, the conversion of souls, and the revival of religion in the churches. The meetings generally continued four or five days, and we all felt it was good to be there. At the Forks of Brandywine, Oxford, Lower West Nottingham, and Upper Octorara, in the Presbytery of New Castle, very precious revivals have been enjoyed, the fruits of which, in part, your Board has already received in very liberal and cheerful contributions to your treasury; and the far richer fruits of which will appear in the day "when the Lord cometh to make up his jewels." The same fact is true of the churches where these special meetings of God's ministers and elders have been held, for preaching, and prayer, and counsel, in the Presbyteries of Huntingdon, Donegal, and Carlisle.

It has been an interesting feature in these visits of the Spirit, that male and female academies have shared largely in their benign influence. Teachers and pupils have, like Mary, been brought to sit at the feet of the great Teacher, and have been taught by him the way to hope and happiness. As the result of the revival in the church of Tuscarora, under brother Thompson's charge, eighteen young men connected with the two large academies in the bounds of his church, have devoted themselves to the ministry. Two youths, the subjects of the revival at Middletown, have turned their attention to the ministry, one of whom has been taken under the care of the Board of Education during the summer. The revival in Bedford, although not connected with any special conference-meeting, was very precious and powerful. Several young men, the fruits of that work, have turned their attention to the ministry. The same result will, I doubt not, appear in reference to the work of God in the churches of the New Castle Presbytery. The Second church of Carlisle is now enjoying a precious revival. God's people there appear to be much engaged, and some precious souls are inquiring the way to heaven.

It has been my aim to visit the destitute places of our Zion, many of which exist, and to aid the brethren to devise ways and means for their occupancy. There is a growing interest felt in this home work. Last year about $2500 was raised in the Presbytery of Carlisle for church extension, and these new missionary fields will be occupied as soon as we can find the men to put into them.

In some of the Presbyteries I found more or less of alienated feeling in consequence of what has been termed the "policy of the Board." This state of feeling has yielded, I hope, to a better spirit—that of a cordial co-operation in the work of extending the Church, and helping on the cause of God and the Church. On behalf of the brethren and the churches, I can truly say they all bid God speed to the work of missions. To-morrow I leave for a meeting at Mercersburg. Next week we have a conference-meeting at Bloomfield, and the week after, another at Lewistown. Yours sincerely,

DANIEL MCKINLEY.

A CHURCH IN A CELLAR.

That is a blessed place, where God manifests his gracious presence, whether in an upper room, as at Jerusalem, where the disciples met with one accord, and were all filled with the Holy Ghost, or whether in a cellar, where the people of O—— assembled statedly for more than five years for divine worship, and where Christ met with and blessed them. We congratulate our brother upon the success which has attended his labours, and pray that, in his new church edifice, his ministrations of the gospel may still be accompanied by the saving power of the Holy Spirit.

We commend the report of our brother to all our missionary brethren who may be labouring under disadvantageous circumstances. How much may be accomplished by patience, perseverance, and prayerful zeal. Take courage and go forward, trusting in the name of the Lord!

Rev. and dear brethren in our Lord Jesus Christ, peace be to you, and to the Board of Missions. This report is for six months past, during which we have gained a little, and hope still to gain. I am happy to inform you that our house of worship is finished and paid, without aid from the Board. It cost over five hundred dollars. I have preached in it since the third Sabbath of May. The pews are all let, and in general the house is well filled on the Sabbath. When I came to this place, seven years since, all was in wild confusion. I preached for a few months in a small log school-house; then in the cellar of my own house, for more than five years; sometimes nearly losing hope of ever getting out of it, but patiently waiting the Lord's time, remembering his word, "Wait on the Lord, and keep his way, and he will exalt thee." The time came to build the house of the Lord. The house is now built, and free of debt; and though small, it is neat and comfortable. This you may tell, to encourage the churches; and I am in the hope, that by the first of May, 1854, all well, we will be able to become self-sustaining. I know not whether we will be the first in Wisconsin, but first or last, we will try to do what we can. W. C.

A SOLEMN ASSEMBLY.

We thank our brother for furnishing us the means of spreading before our readers the very interesting incidents contained in the following report. Such descriptions of the effects of the gospel, when accompanied by the power of the Holy Spirit, are adapted not only to excite our gratitude and praise to God, but also to quicken the zeal and increase the prayers of all who are engaged in the work of missions. Will not all our brethren who are favoured to witness similar scenes, communicate them to us, that we may spread them before our readers? Such narratives of the work of grace would greatly increase the attractiveness and usefulness of the Home and Foreign Record, and would tend very much to increase the interest of the churches in the work in which we are engaged.

Dear Brother—My commission came to hand last week, just after my return from the meeting of our Synod. Though absent about three weeks, besides the time of Synod, I have been able to perform about the usual amount of labour in the way of public instruction; in addition to which I have been largely engaged in Bible distribution through the county, by which means I have been enabled to preach from house to house. I have thus far found a large number destitute of the word of life—probably one family in seven without the entire Bible, and one-half of this large portion without any part of God's holy book—truly heathen in a land of Bibles! There is one very encouraging feature in this arduous work—the great majority of the destitute are anxious to get the word of God—and in fact my field of labour was never more encouraging than now. It is already white unto the harvest. Our last communion season in the Bear Creek church, last August, was one of much interest. We all felt that God was verily present by his divine Spirit, and that in answer to the supplications of his people. There was more than common interest manifested during the preparatory services on Saturday; but when the congregation assembled on Sabbath morning, the great Master of assemblies was doubtless with his own people, for his house seemed solemn and dreadful, because of his spiritual presence. The word of life fell upon each heart like the gentle shower upon the thirsty ground. Nought but the herald's voice was heard, save a deep sigh from some burdened sinner's breast. The emblems of a loving, bleeding, suffering, and dying Saviour, were then spread out, around which his beloved assembled. They ate, they drank, in obedience to the command of Him who spread the feast. Never did He appear more lovely to the eye of faith. It was indeed a heavenly place.

Just before closing, an appeal was made to those who had witnessed the scene, yet having no part in the matter, which seemed to break up the fountains of sorrow already rising in the breasts of a number of young persons, causing them to overflow at least. One young man was so deeply impressed, that he rose of his own accord, and asked the prayers of God's people. It seemed from his manner, his peculiar urgency, and his overwhelming sorrow, that he must perish; and if so, he would fall at the feet of Jesus. Every pious heart was drawn out, instantaneously almost, in sympathy and fervent prayer for the mourning soul.

After an interval, the house of prayer was again thronged with a very attentive audience. The message of God's truth was directed to the young, with signal effect, so that not only the young man spoken of, but two or three other young persons, made a similar request. The meeting was protracted two or three days, and the sin-burdened young man, and four other young persons, found peace in believing, and publicly professed Christ before the world; and we would fain hope that a number of others were savingly benefitted by the means of grace enjoyed during that series of meetings. My congregations are constantly increasing. But while the field is so encouraging, we need more labourers: "For the harvest is truly great, but the labourers are few." Let me here put up the "Macedonian cry" to any one desirous of seeking a field of great prospective usefulness, "Come over and help us."

CHURCH EXTENSION.

The following extract of a letter is from one of the missionaries of the Board in the West, who has laboured diligently and successfully in gathering and building up a church there. It refers to an appropriation made by the Church Extension Committee to aid them in the erection of a house of worship, and accompanies a certificate from the Trustees, that the conditions on which the appropriation was made were fully met. It is but the history of a very large number of our new church enterprises, and shows the very great importance of the Church Extension scheme. If we can succeed in building neat, comfortable houses of worship, free from debt, in growing communities, we will soon see, with the blessing of God, large self-sustaining churches there. What we need to carry on this work efficiently, is a large increase of funds. And surely in a Church like ours, this ought not long to be wanting.

"We have just completed our house of worship, and have all the debts paid except the amount of the appropriation from the Church Extension Committee. Considering our numbers, and all the circumstances, I can truly say that but few churches in this country have done better. We organized the church but three years ago, with but fifteen members—not a wealthy man among them all. We have now a good stone house of worship, capable of seating 350 persons, handsomely furnished, and with a good bell. It has only been done at great sacrifice, and although the sum granted us by the Church Extension Committee is small, yet it will be of very great importance to us at this time, as all has been done here that can well be. It is harder to get the last hundred than the first thousand.

"Our house is now very well filled. The congregation is six times as large as it was two years ago."

ENCOURAGING REPORTS.

Nov. 12th, 1853.

Rev. and Dear Sir—Another year of missionary labour under the care of the Board, closes this evening, and I would render my report. The past year, and especially the past summer, has been one of trial. We have been painfully afflicted with a fever which has prevailed, and which has cut down a number of our young people, who were the hope of our church. But the Lord, I trust, has sanctified this affliction to the good of others, and we have been privileged to receive quite a number into the church—at our last communion, twelve on examination and three on certificate; making during the year, from last November, twenty-one on examination, and five on certificate. For these accessions I desire to be thankful, and I entertain a good hope of many others. My appointments remain the same as at my last report. The attendance and attention upon the means of grace are better than ever before, and I think the prospects of our church are encouraging, though death has removed some of our support. With respect I remain yours &c., J. D.

Nov. 12th, 1853.

Dear Brother—The flight of another quarter of a year, calls for a report of my labours as a missionary in that portion of the Lord's vineyard which I am called to cultivate. Through divine goodness I am still blessed with health and strength to perform the duties of a minister of the gospel to the churches of B—— and R——, dividing my services equally between them. Since my last report, I have administered the Lord's supper in each of them. They were seasons of refreshing at both places, especially at B——. At that meeting the services were continued for five days and nights. The members of the church were much revived and comforted. Five new members were added on examination, all of them having had a hope of peace with God for some time previous. At the close of the meeting, between twelve and twenty persons manifested anxiety for the salvation of their souls. Our Sabbath-school there, is kept up with growing interest and profit. We have recently added some one hundred and twenty or one hundred and thirty volumes to our library. The general aspect of B—— church is full of promise. It is evident that the Presbyterian Church and interest is on the ascendancy. There were no additions to the Church at the R—— meeting; yet the people of God were stirred up and encouraged. It was to them a good time. From the colony that went out, last winter, to form the new church at B——, and from the death of several prominent members, the R—— church is considerably weakened. But they desire to hold on. At the R—— meeting, I laboured entirely alone, and preached six times. At B——, a brother aided me part of the time. He preached three times, and I preached eight times, besides all the other exercises. We felt that the Lord was in our midst, reviving his work, to the glory of his name and the comfort of his people. When we look back twelve or thirteen years, and contrast the state of things then with what they are now, we are filled with wonder and gratitude, and are constrained to say, "Behold, and see what God has wrought!" My prayer is, as ever, that the Lord will bless the efforts of the Board abundantly. H. M. K.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

AGENT FOR THE PITTSBURGH FIELD.

The Board of Education have appointed the Rev. ADAM HARRIS to labour for six months in behalf of the cause of education within the bounds of the Synods of Pittsburgh and Wheeling. The Rev. Mr. Harris was recently pastor of the Fourth church of Louisville, Kentucky, and has only consented to act for the Board during a short interval. He is highly commended to the churches by the brethren of Pittsburgh and Allegheny; and it is hoped that, with the blessing of God, very important results may attend his labours.

It is the intention of the Board of Education to provide permanently for this interesting and inviting field; and in the mean time, the co-operation of the brethren in promoting the cause, under the labours of brother Harris, is earnestly and respectfully solicited.

HAIL TO THE SOUTH!

The Spirit of God is no respecter of persons, and He visits localities and sections of country according to His own sovereign good pleasure. During the last spring and summer, revivals of religion occurred in various churches in Virginia, North and South Carolina, and Georgia, and especially in the colleges of Hampden Sidney, Davidson, and Oglethorpe. As the immediate result of these awakenings, a considerable number of young men have turned their attention to the work of the ministry. The UNION SEMINARY in Virginia, which last year had only eleven theological students, this year has twenty-five; and the COLUMBIA SEMINARY in South Carolina, which last year had thirty-two theological students, this year has forty-five. The increase at these two institutions is from a total of FORTY-THREE to a total of SEVENTY, or an aggregate increase of TWENTY-SEVEN. It may even reach to a larger number. Let God have the praise of this reviving of His work! And whilst we give all the glory to free and sovereign grace, let us congratulate our Southern brethren for what the Lord has done, and hail them as signs of better times in the Church at large. In the name of our God, let us bless our brethren, and rejoice that the South keeps not back.

THE AMOUNT OF AID TO BE OFFERED TO STUDENTS.

One of the students—apparently connected with our own Church—sent a note to the New York Observer, making a statement in reference to the amount of aid which young men require in colleges. The New York Observer answered the inquiry in a communication, which so well expresses, as we think, the general opinion in our Church, that we transfer the whole correspondence to our columns.

We consider it a question, fairly open to discussion, whether the amount of aid might not be somewhat increased; but the general principles of the "New York Observer" are unquestionably sound. Indeed the cause could not be sustained on any other principles.

From the New York Observer.

Will the "Home and Foreign Record" be kind enough to state how a young man, who has no means, may be able to get through his Collegiate course. The Seventy-five dollar scholarship, which the Board of Education grants young men in that course, will not pay the board. The tuition in college is thrown off, but then where are the clothes, books, and et ceteras to come from. By giving the desired information, the Record will send gratifying intelligence to a number of POOR YOUNG MEN.

The above communication has been lying upon our table for some time. We insert it not to obtain an answer to the inquiry from the Home and Foreign Record, but for the purpose of making some observations of our own. We have always regarded the educational schemes of the churches, especially those designed to assist indigent and pious young men in preparing for the Gospel ministry, as among the most important agencies of the Church. They have approved themselves not only in theory but in their results. There is probably no branch of the Church in the land which cannot show a long list of ministers of the Gospel, distinguished by great usefulness, who were introduced into the work by means of the Education Societies. Many but for this aid would have been turned aside to other pursuits, and their labours lost to the Church, at least in this department. Men of intellect and piety, who may be qualified by nature for exerting an extensive influence, are not always worldly-wise, and may be unable to struggle on through all discouragements, and complete a course of preparation. There are those who must have aid, or they cannot be prepared to take their stand among the ambassadors for Christ. That some have disappointed the expectations of the Church, proves nothing against the agency in question. These cases are the exceptions, and such exceptions as are to be looked for in the working of every human system. They are rarer than is oftentimes represented.

But we think, on the other hand, that this assistance and a reliance upon it may be carried too far, and the latter is indicated in the communication above. If any young man is unable to meet his other expenses, after having his board and his bills of tuition defrayed, we think he cannot have talents which would qualify him for great usefulness in any calling, and particularly in the ministerial. Neither in college nor in the Seminary is the whole time devoted to terms of study. From a quarter to a third of each year is given to vacations, and in many Seminaries this occurs at one season, in which candidates for the ministry may devote themselves to some useful employment, which will invigorate their health, and at the same time replenish their resources. Many students within the last few years have engaged as colporteurs; and while they have been receiving a suitable compensation for their time and labour, they have been blessing many hearts, and training themselves for future pastoral labour. They have in this way supplemented the aid which they have been receiving. Others have depended upon their own exertions entirely, and have more than sustained themselves, without any interruption to their studies. We knew a young man in college who spent his vacations in employment, immediately and highly useful, and who had more pecuniary means when he graduated than when he entered, and he never lost a week's study during his whole course. In one vacation of six weeks, by the circulation of Henry's Commentary, he realized more than enough to sustain him a whole year in college, including all his expenses. Such cases we know are rare, and as we have intimated above, the talent for making money is not an indication in itself of qualification for usefulness in the ministry, but it is very important that every one, whatever his calling in life may be, should cultivate under God a spirit of self-reliance, and not one of mere dependence on others. Instead of urging upon our Education Boards an indiscriminate increase in their appropriations, we would urge upon those who are looking forward to the Gospel ministry, to devote their vacant time to some occupation in which they may be doing good to others, and at the same time providing in part for themselves. There is nothing ignoble in receiving aid while preparing to serve the Church, but it is the mark of a noble spirit to prefer to help ones-self, as far as it can be done, without interfering with the great end in view.—New York Observer.

SYNOD OF VIRGINIA.

The following resolutions of the Synod of Virginia are so much to the point, that we invite particular attention to their perusal.

The committee to whom was referred the communication from the Board of Education respecting the present destitution of Candidates for the gospel ministry, reported the following resolutions, which were adopted:

1. Resolved, The ministry must ever be considered as God's chief appointed instrumentality for the conversion of the world;—and the increasing population and rapidly advancing intelligence of our country, present daily more urgent motives for a correspondent increase in the number of able and faithful ministers.

2. Resolved, That while we deeply feel the urgency of these motives, and deplore the "Destitution" to which our attention has been directed by the Board, we feel called to record our solemn conviction that the strength and efficiency of a church depend far less upon the numbers than upon the character of its ministers; that we far more earnestly desire an increased elevation in the whole moral and intellectual tone of our candidates—in fervent piety, and sound mental discipline, than in numbers merely.

3. Resolved, That the evil which we deplore, is only one out of many external symptoms of a deep inward declension, which cannot be wisely considered apart from others, for which no outward appliance or machinery can be a successful remedy —and especially that an indiscreet or precipitate zeal for a mere increase of numbers, will only aggravate the evil (which it in part has caused,) by urging into our Colleges and Seminaries, and ultimately into the ministry, men without energy, or talent, or decisive piety—thus lowering the standard of ministerial character in the community at large; and repelling from the service of God in the ministry, other youth, superior in value, and even in numbers, to those unwisely introduced.

4. Resolved, That the only remedy which can reach the evil—deeply seated and widely ramified through every department of society—is the outpouring of God's Spirit in answer to the prayers of his people, and as a blessing on the public and private labours of ministers and parents.

5. Resolved, As a subordinate means, we would earnestly recommend to all the ministers within our bounds, to make this important subject a matter of earnest prayer, and faithful instruction to their congregations; and we would urge upon all parents the duty of early consecrating their sons to this noblest of all human offices, and training them up from childhood, with special reference to this work, and in humble dependence upon God's grace for his covenanted blessings.

6. Resolved, That along with this increased effort to enlarge the number of our candidates, increased vigilance and fidelity will be demanded on the part of pastors, and Presbyteries, and instructors, in guarding the entrance upon the ministry, against all who might prove useless or injurious in that sacred office.

NEW CANDIDATES.

For the first six months of the present year, the number of new candidates received by the Board of Education was 44. For the same period of last year, the number was 38.

At the late meeting in December, 12 were received against 8 in the same month last year; making thus far a total of 58 this year and 46 last year. This is encouraging; and if the same rate of increase is maintained to the end of the year, the Church will have reason indeed to rejoice.

"Pray ye to the Lord of the harvest."

HINTS TO CANDIDATES.

A Look into Eternity.—When Summerfield was on his death-bed, he exclaimed, "Oh, if I might be raised again, how could I preach! I could preach as I have never preached before; I have had a look into eternity."

God's People known to Him.—Tamar may disguise herself, and walk in an unaccustomed path, so as Judah may not know her. Isaac, through the dimness of his sight, may bless Jacob and pass Esau. Tract of time may make Joseph forget or be forgotten of his brethren. Solomon may doubt to whom of right the child belongeth; and Christ may come to his own and not be received. But the Lord knoweth who are his, and his eye is always over them. Time, place, speech, or apparel, cannot obscure or darken his eye or ear. He can discern Daniel in the den—Job, though never so much changed, on the dunghill; let Jonah be lodged in the whale's belly, Peter be put into a close prison, Lazarus be wrapped in rags, or Abel rolled in blood, yet can he call them by name, and send his angels to comfort them. Ignorance and forgetfulness may cause love and knowledge to be estranged in the creature, but the Lord is not incident to either; for his eye, as his essence, is every where; he knoweth all things.—John Barlow, 1660.

Set your Affections on things above.—As the bee is ever on the wing between the flowers and its honey-cells, so should our affections ever be going forth in prayer to God without, and returning to God within. Amidst all the busiest scenes of our pilgrimage, we may be moving to and fro on the rapid river of mental prayer; that prayer which lays the whole burden of the heart on a single sigh. A sigh breathed in the spirit, though inaudible to all around us but God, may sanctify every conversation, every event in the history of the day. Prayer will be fatiguing to flesh and blood, if uttered aloud, and sustained long. But there is an undercurrent of prayer, that may run continually under the stream of our thoughts, and never weary us. Such prayer is the silent breathing of the Spirit of God, who dwells in our hearts; it is the temper and habit of the spiritual mind; it is the pulse of our life, "which is hid with Christ in God;" it is the consciousness of the divine nature communicated to us in regeneration. Prayer of this kind may be breathed "without ceasing."

Learning of Moses.—Moses was skilled in all the learning of the Egyptians; yet not content therewith, he became a humble suitor to God for more and better knowledge than that: "I beseech thee show me thy glory." Other notions may fill the head of moral man: nothing short of the knowledge of God san satisfy the heart of a saint. Wherefore, in answer to this request, the Lord gave him a promise, saying, "I will make all my goodness pass before thee." Learning, in religious persons, like the gold that was in the Israelites' ear-rings, is a most precious ornament; but if men pervert it to base ends, or begin to make an idol of it, (as they did a golden calf of their ear-rings,) it then becomes an abomination. Knowledge and good parts, under the management of grace, are, like the rod in Moses' hand, wonder workers; but turn to serpents when they are cast upon the ground, and employed in promoting earthly designs.—Arrowsmith.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION
IN SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS.

The number of parochial schools is increasing, although not so rapidly as might be desired. Some of these institutions are among the largest schools in the country, and generally they are in a prosperous condition, and are doing great service to the cause of religion and learning.

The Board of Education are prepared, by special funds for that purpose, to aid in the establishment and support of schools needing help, and having the prospects of a permanent existence.

WAVELAND ACADEMY, INDIANA.

The Presbyterian Academy, Waveland, Ind.—The first annual Catalogue has been sent us. During the term just closed, the attendance numbered 134, of which 77 were males, and 57 females.

The instructors are—J. M. Coyner, Mathematics and Natural Science; H. S. Kritz, Languages and Mental Science; M. M. Fisher, Assistant.

The location for such an institution is good, and we are pleased to learn that its patronage is increasing.

GREENVILLE ACADEMY, KENTUCKY.

The Synod of Kentucky, at their last meeting in Danville, adopted the following paper in reference to the Greenville Academy.

Whereas, The Presbytery of Muhlenburg has established a Presbyterial Academy at Greenville, with a view to promote education generally, within their bounds, as well as to prepare young men for the more advanced education contemplated in Centre College, and the new Theological Seminary at Danville; and whereas, the establishment of such academies is desirable in all our Presbyteries; therefore,

Resolved, That the Synod express their approbation of the effort of the Presbytery to build up this Academy, and commend it to the liberality of the members of our churches, to supply it with all needed funds.

A NEW FEMALE ACADEMY IN NORTH CAROLINA.

We learn by a letter from brother Penick, published in the Watchman and Observer, that the Presbytery of Concord is about to establish a Female Academy at Statesville, N. C.

An important action of Presbytery at its last meeting, was the establishment of a Presbyterian Female Seminary. The town of Statesville was selected as its location. I trust it will be an institution of high character. A Board of Trustees was appointed to set it into operation. The village of Statesville, in inviting the Seminary to that healthy and Presbyterian community, presented to Presbytery a subscription list of $10,000. For the endowment of the institution the scholarship plan will probably be adopted. All things seem propitious. Success to the enterprise! Truly yours,

P. T. Penick.

SYNOD OF PITTSBURGH AND JEFFERSON COLLEGE.

The action of the Synod of Pittsburgh in relation to Jefferson College, is considered an important movement by some of its friends. We have not heard the particulars of the movement in the Synod, except that it originated with the friends of Jefferson, and was carried in the Synod by a large majority, although some of the friends both of Jefferson and Washington voted against it. The following is the action of the Synod. The second resolution is the one to which particular reference is made.

"1. Resolved, That the past and present of Jefferson College, established through the prayers and efforts of the fathers of this Synod, in whose bounds it is, commend it to our confidence, and inspire us with hope in its future.

"2. Resolved, That with the view of extending the area of its action, and perfecting its equipment for its work, as well as to settle it in the confidence it has won, this Synod appoint a committee to correspond with the Trustees of Jefferson College as to the expediency and the conditions of its being placed under the ecclesiastical supervision of this Synod, or, in case the General Assembly divide it, under the joint supervision of the two Synods; the committee to publish in the papers the result by the 1st of April next, and to report next year."

The Moderator announced the committee on the correspondence with the Trustees of Jefferson College, viz., Messrs. J. M. Cook, David Kirkpatrick, D. D., L. R. McAboy, George Hill, and T. H. Nevin.

Subsequently one of the members of the Synod entered a protest against the appointment of a committee for the purpose of securing an ecclesiastical superintendence of the College, which was answered on the part of the Synod by its committee appointed for that object (the Rev. J. M. Cook) as follows:

"That the question as to the propriety, expediency, and safety of the Church, in her organized character, entering the school-house, the College, and the Seminary, and regulating the instruction of her youth, has been so thoroughly sifted, and so satisfactorily settled by this Synod, that a single member may enjoy the liberty of recording his protest without arguing the matter anew."

WASHINGTON COLLEGE, PA.

The Synod of Pittsburgh also adopted the following commendatory resolution in reference to Washington College.

"Resolved, That the past and the present of Washington College, with that organization which places it under the supervision and control of the Synod of Wheeling, and an ample endowment now in the progress of completion, commend it to our confidence, and inspire us with hope in its future."

WESTMINSTER COLLEGE, MISSOURI.

The Synod of Missouri, at its last meeting, re-appointed the Rev. R. S. Symington, agent for the institution, and adopted the following resolutions:

"1. Resolved, That this Synod have heard with pleasure the reports of our agent, and of the Trustees of Westminster College, stating the progress which has been made in securing an endowment, and in erecting college buildings, and for this success the Synod express their gratitude to the Head of the Church.

"2. Resolved, That this Synod would express their earnest desire and hope that the Presbyterians of Missouri will regard it as a privilege to co-operate energetically and liberally in carrying forward this important enterprise."

E. M. Samuel, N. L. Rice, D. D., J. F. Cowan, W. P. Cochran, and P. B. Reed, were appointed a committee to recommend to Synod a plan for securing the salary of the agent of Westminster College.

This Committee reported the following plan, which was adopted, viz:

"That it is recommended to the ministers in the bounds of our Synod, to present the subject to their charges respectively on the first Sabbath of December, or as soon thereafter as practicable, and that the amount thus raised be transmitted to Dr. A. A. Riley, President of the Board of Trustees of Westminster College, at Fulton, and that should there be a surplus, the same to remain as an agency fund; and that the President of the Board report to next meeting of Synod the amount thus realized."

In reference to Westminster College, the editor of the St. Louis Presbyterian, who lately visited it, says:

"The building of Westminster College is rapidly progressing towards completion. It has already reached its third story. The building is strong and substantial, and will furnish ample accommodations for all college purposes, for the next half century. We did not inquire its precise dimensions, but we suppose its front to be about 60 feet, by 110 or 120 deep. It is to have a portico in front, supported by six heavy columns, which will give it a massive appearance. The building, besides the recitation rooms, and a public hall, has study rooms for the Professors, Society Halls, Library Rooms, &c. The Commencement Hall we judged to be 57 feet square in the clear. The Chemical Hall is a little more than half these dimensions. We trust the building committee will see that the portion of it devoted to the Laboratory shall be paved with brick. The contractor is Mr. Jenkins of St. Louis, and our judgment is, that the contract is a most safe and economical one for the Trustees, and that the work is being done in a most satisfactory manner. But few such college buildings will be found, when this is finished, on this side of the mountains. It will be a credit to the Synod of Missouri, and an ornament to the Commonwealth."

NEW COLLEGE IN SYNOD OF MEMPHIS.

The subject of most interest before the Synod was the college question. The committee appointed by the Synod at its meeting in Jackson, reported three places making liberal proposals:

1st. The Mountain offered a suitable building lot and $10,000 in cash to erect the college building.

2d. La Grange offered a suitable lot, and $1500 in money, and $25,000 in scholarships, for the endowment.

3d. The Trustees of West Tennessee College asked the Synod to appoint a commissioner to confer with them, to see if that Institution could not become the Synodical College. It has suitable buildings, the college in operation, and an endowment of $40,000. After a full discussion, the Synod resolved to appoint a committee to confer with these Trustees, and also resolved to hold the next meeting of the Synod in July. On these two resolutions, there was but one dissenting vote.

From the present signs of the times, the college will be located at La Grange.—Presbyterian Herald.

HANOVER COLLEGE, INDIANA.

The following resolutions were adopted by the Synod of Indiana, respecting Hanover College:

1st. Synod finds that the College is in a very prosperous condition, as is evinced by the regularity and order and quiet which prevail in every department, and also by the progress made by the pupils generally in their studies.

2d. Synod is pleased to learn that there have been more than fifty new students matriculated the present session, thus showing—1st. a public approval of the course of instruction there given, especially of that peculiarity of the course, the prominence given to the study of the Holy Scriptures; and 2d. the continued confidence which the Church and the public generally have in the faculty, as men, and as competent instructors of youth.

Synod rejoice to learn that the new College is already up, and will be enclosed within three weeks. From the treasurer's report, it appears that not less than fifteen thousand dollars are needed to complete the building and pay money already borrowed by the building fund from the permanent fund. Therefore,

Resolved, That in the judgment of this Synod, the establishment of Hanover College is one of the most important enterprises before the Synod at this time, and, under present circumstances, demands prompt and enlarged pecuniary aid.

2d. This Synod will raise for this object not less than fifteen thousand dollars during the coming winter.

3d. Every member of this Synod is earnestly requested to use his best endeavours to secure in the church he represents its quota of the above sum, either by co-operation with the agent, or otherwise.

Williamson Dunn, Esq., was appointed Trustee, and Philip Lindsley, D. D., was appointed in the place of Dr. Gurley.

ARANAMA SCHOOL AND COLLEGE, TEXAS.

The Presbytery of Western Texas is engaged in building up a college at Goliad. At the last meeting, among other important items of business, the claims and interests of the Aranama School and College at Goliad were duly attended to, and vacancies supplied in its Board of Trustees. That Board also held a meeting, at which were passed resolutions, expressive of their great affliction at the loss of the late C. C. Shive, Principal of the Preparatory Department of the Institution, and of their hearty condolence with his heart-stricken companion, in her sorrowful bereavement. The Rev. David Teese, of West Hanover Presbytery, (Virginia,) was unanimously chosen successor to Mr. Shive, with a pleasing expectation that he will accept of a station he is so eminently qualified to fill.

SCHOLARSHIPS.

The sum of Seventy-five dollars forms a scholarship to assist a student in the collegiate course, and the sum of One Hundred dollars in the theological course.

HONORARY MEMBERS.

The sum of Fifty Dollars constitutes a person an Honorary Member of the Board of Education. A copy of the Annual Report is sent to all the Honorary members every year.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST.

All that the Board deem it important to furnish is their CORPORATE NAME, viz.

"The Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

Any person disposed to leave a legacy to the Board of Education, is requested to insert the right CORPORATE NAME. The State laws differ so much that no one Form will answer in all the States.

The following form may be used in Pennsylvania.

I give and devise to the Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, the sum of ——— dollars, to and for the uses of the said Board of Education, and under its direction.

[When real estate, or other property, is given, let it be particularly described.]

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,

No. 23 Centre Street, New York.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

Mission House, December 13, 1853.

India.—We have received letters, since our last issue, from Lahor, September 17; Futtehgurh, to October 2; Mynpurie, September 17; Agra, to October 6; and Allahabad, September 13. Mr. Morrison had returned from a visit to Rawal Pindi, a city about two hundred miles from Lahor, where he found that a number of persons, who had renounced Hinduism, were "well content with a religion of their own making." The movement at Akutganj, near Futtehgurh, appears also to have disappointed the hopes which were at first awakened by it, although a few persons seem to be subjects of grace. Two accounts have been forwarded to us of a native reformer in the Mirzapore district, below Allahabad, who has renounced the native religion, and drawn after him large numbers of his countrymen, though his views of Christianity are not very clear.—Movements like these are important as signs of the state of the native mind in India. Paganism is losing its power over very many. Increasing numbers will break away from its bondage; but without suitable instruction, they cannot be expected to become true Christians.

Mr. Forman says of the school at Lahor, "There is nothing very encouraging in its state, except that we have a large number of interesting pupils, nearly all of whom are receiving religious instruction, and those who know most about Christianity seem to be convinced of its truth and excellence. I think if any who have doubts about our giving so much time to education, could go with us to the bazar, and hear the sometimes angry disputes, and then to the school, and see so many boys and youths quietly receiving religious instruction, and approving of what they hear, they would think more highly of the latter method of teaching Christianity."

At Agra "the schools are still increasing;" Mr. Warren writes, "both boys and girls have been coming in during the last month." These are mostly of the East Indian class, destined to exert an increasing influence in India, and under suitable missionary labour, likely to furnish valuable helpers in the spread of the gospel.—This mission was about to lose for a season the efficient services of Mr. Warren, who is returning with his family, on a visit to this country; but the Committee will endeavour to maintain and increase, rather than diminish, the strength employed at this city. They hope to see it become the head-quarters of a wide-spread system of missionary efforts.—It is with regret we add that Mr. and Mrs. Fullerton had been called to part with their oldest child, who died on the 30th of August.

The letters from Futtehgurh mention the expected return to this country of Mr. Seeley, with his motherless children. We regret to learn that his health is not improving. He is suffering from a bronchial affection.

From Allahabad we learn the admission to the church of two persons—one on profession of her faith, and a man who had been excommunicated six or seven years ago; after long trial, and profession of penitence, he was again received. A third person was restored to the privileges of the church. Severe sickness had prevailed at this station, and one of the members of the church was called hence by cholera, "Fermana, the wife of Mirza Jan Beg, catechist. Her loss is a very severe one," Mr. Hay writes, "not only to her family, but the mission. She has for years maintained a very exemplary Christian character. Her meekness, kindness, and earnest piety, endeared her to all her acquaintances. For several months she conducted a female prayer-meeting on Saturday afternoons. Her whole deportment furnishes us with the best hope that she has attained the rest of the blessed." This is what the gospel can do for a Hindu woman.

A request had been received from an English gentleman at Banda, for the establishment of a school at that city, under a native Christian teacher, with a liberal offer of aid for his support. The missionaries were considering who, out of their little company of native labourers, was best qualified, and could be best spared, for this station. And we trust that our readers will pray unto the Lord of the harvest for an increase of labourers, especially of those who are natives of the several countries in which our missions are established.

Siam.—Our advices from Bangkok are under date of July 18. The brethren were pursuing their work with usual health, "with nothing of special interest to report, but having no reason for discouragement." We fear, however, they will have been much disheartened before this, by hearing that one or two brethren who, it was hoped, would have joined their mission, (and to which expectation they refer with great satisfaction in this letter,) have been led to remain in other parts of the vineyard. We think that prayers should be offered with special reference to the raising up and sending forth of more men to Siam. The country is open for all kinds of missionary work. The missionaries have been brought into communication with persons of elevated rank, as well as with the common people. Perhaps in no other heathen nation may we look eventually for a more sudden conversion of all classes to the religion of Christ. Our mission there has had a history of very marked interest; but it is altogether too weak in numbers, though in no other respect. Urgent calls have been made and often repeated, for more labourers. Who will go?

China.—Letters have come to hand, dated at Canton, September 24; Shanghai, September 24; and Ningpo, September 6. The principal event mentioned in these letters is the fall of Shanghai into the hands of local insurgents, that are not connected with the body under the command of Thae-ping. The missionaries and other foreigners were not molested. At Ningpo and Canton public affairs continued without change, though an uneasy feeling is said to exist among the native inhabitants of those cities.—We regret to learn that the health of Mr. Wight had become so much impaired as to excite apprehensions as to the result; but it was hoped the approaching cold weather would restore his strength.

Mr. W. Martin had made an attempt to reach the main body of the insurgents, which proved unsuccessful, the native boatmen refusing to proceed. Referring to their being professed Christians, and to their having begun to create a Christian literature, Mr. Martin writes as follows: "They have issued a number of tracts, among which is a Trimetrical Classic, containing an abstract of Scripture history; Instructions for the Young, being a summary of moral maxims; an Almanac, in which the year is divided into weeks, with each 'day of worship' (Sabbath) duly marked. This Almanac, further, rejects the distinction of lucky days, and the calculation of destiny, with which Chinese works of this kind have always been filled, on the ground that 'times and seasons are at the disposal of our heavenly Father, and he who piously performs his duty will at all times enjoy the divine protection.' . . . Some of their books contain gross errors, which is not so much to be wondered at as that they contain so much truth."

Mission to the Chinese in California.—Under date of November 10, Mr. Speer writes as follows: "Our church was organized on last Sabbath, with four members. Lai Sam was made an elder. The ceremony was solemn, and interesting to a large audience." Farther details are promised, on Mr. Speer's return from a visit to Stockton.

Missions to the Indian Tribes.—Since our last number we have received letters from missionaries among the Chickasaws, dated to November 9; Choctaws, to November 14; Creeks, November 2; Iowas and Sacs, to November 29; Omahas and Otoes, November 5; Chippewas and Ottawas to November 12. There had been some cases of fever among the girls in the Chickasaw school, and two of them had died. The missionaries were much afflicted by these deaths of their pupils, and the ladies of the mission had felt severely the pressure of nursing the sick. Ninety scholars were in the school, and the confidence of the Indians in the missionaries did not appear to be shaken by these sad bereavements.—At Spencer Academy, all were well, and going on as usual. Mr. Edwards, for two years at Spencer Academy, where he was a faithful missionary, has accepted the call of the church at Wheelock, Choctaw nation. Under the circumstances of the case, the Committee agreed to release Mr. Edwards from the Academy. His missionary connection will therefore be with the American Board of Missions, though his ecclesiastical relations will remain without any change.—At Tallahassee, among the Creeks, owing to the sickness of some of the teachers, much difficulty was experienced in carrying on the school, and more teachers are needed.—At the Iowa mission, a teacher, and two of the Iowa girls in the school, were admitted to the communion of the church; and some others were under serious impressions.—The buildings at the new stations among the Indians in Michigan are nearly complete, after a large amount of work, which was exceedingly embarrassing in its details, on account of the difficulty of getting materials, workmen, &c., at places so remote.

Sailing of Missionaries.—On the 26th of November, the Rev. Charles F. Preston, and J. G. Kerr, M. D., and his wife, sailed from this city in the ship Horatio for Canton, and on the 8th of December, Mrs. Way, of the Ningpo mission, sailed for Shanghai, in the ship Ellen Foster, from this port. Mrs. Way left her two oldest children at school in this country. Mr. Preston is a member of the Presbytery of Albany. Dr. Kerr was for some years in practice as a physician in Ohio. We commend all these missionary friends to the prayers of our readers.

INDIA: LODIANA MISSION.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE REV. JOSEPH WARREN.

The following journal and communication from the Rev. Joseph Warren, in relation to the enfeebled state of the mission at Lodiana, and the urgent necessity of strengthening it immediately, we would earnestly recommend to the serious consideration of every friend of missions, and especially to the students of our Theological Seminaries. The brethren at the station need our prayers and sympathies, and we trust it will not be long before their hearts will be cheered by the arrival of missionary recruits from this country. They have a right to expect this at our hands, and we cannot exculpate ourselves before the Head of the Church, if this mission is permitted to languish; especially as so many advantages have already been gained for spreading the gospel among the inhabitants of that part of the world.

Sorrows—Sabathú.

Every journey reminds a thinking man of the nature of his life. He meets with hindrances; he cannot reach points which he desires to see; he is hindered by the weather; he meets with losses and pains. After being hindered several days from leaving Landour, we were again detained by rain at Simlah. And at Simlah and Sabáthú we met with sorrows that strongly reminded us of the chequered nature of life.

I had known Mrs. Janvier from the time when she came to this country. We had met but once since; but that did not hinder our families from feeling that a degree of intimacy existed: we soon come to feel a great interest in every member of a contracted circle. I found her at Simlah, sick of a lingering disease, which incapacitates her for all labour, takes her husband away from his post at Lodiana for a time, and gives her friends scarcely a hope of her recovery. Her sickness and danger were in themselves an affliction to me as her friend; and the consequent interruption of Mr. Janvier's labours is to be deeply regretted. Although he is at work translating the Scriptures into Panjabí, and aiding to carry the Panjabí Dictionary through the press, and can continue these labours while absent from Lodiana, so that his time is by no means lost, yet it is a loss to his station in many respects to have him absent.

When we arrived at Sabáthú we met a letter there informing us of Mrs. Seeley's death at Futtehgurh. This was a deep affliction, indeed. She had lived in my family at Allahabad, on their arrival in the country, for nearly three months; Mrs. Warren had spent a summer in their family in the hills; and otherwise there had grown up much intimacy and great affection between us. On private grounds we must regret her death as that of a dear sister; and besides I could not avoid foreseeing that her death would take her husband from his important field of usefulness: himself in delicate health, with four motherless children, what can he do here? Our already weak force must be weakened, and very few are stepping forward to occupy the places of the disabled and fallen. Our field is widening, and wants increasing; we are called upon to stretch out the cords of our tent further, and to drive the stakes more firmly into the ground—and our number is decreasing. Is it any wonder that melancholy reflections crowded into my mind the day that we occupied the empty Mission House at Sabáthú?

The empty Mission House at Sabáthú! Yes; we have no man whom we can spare from the plains, while his health allows him to remain there, to occupy this post. It is in the hills; the climate is delightful; I have not seen a nicer day in India than that which I spent at this place; there is a Bazar, where a school might be set up, and where street preaching might be carried on; there are European soldiers, amongst whom good might be done; there are numerous villages of hill people, which an active man might reach—but there is no man for it. We visited the Bazar chapel, and found it ready to go to ruin. We visited Mrs. Jamieson's grave, and plucked some buds from a kind of cypress that is growing beside it. Then we rode down the hill, feeling that although the day had in itself been bright, beautiful, and temperate, it still had been one of the dark days of our lives. When will the Church awake to her duty, and send out men to fill these waste places?

That kind of "sadness of the countenance" caused by such things as these, doubtless "makes the heart better." It is good now and then to be compelled to look to Him who manages all things; who knows when to call his servants to himself, and how to deal with them who are still in the harness. It is because I hope that the communication of my sorrows to the Church will tend to make it "better," that I have sought to publish them. They ought not to weaken our hands; but they ought to drive us to the fountain of all strength.

Descent from the Hills—Lodiana.

The readers of our missionary periodicals and reports often hear about the stations of the Lodiana Mission from the missionaries who are labouring there, but they still may like to hear what my impressions of some matters were, during my late visit to those stations.

I parted with Mr. Woodside at Kasaulí, after Mr. Orbison of Ambala had joined us to take my place with Mr. Woodside in the return trip. I went down the hill in the evening, reaching Kálhá after dark. Here I found a hotel, a European postmaster, and a large native town. This town is in the midst of the Patiálá Rája's territory. He has given a piece of his territory to the English Government, that their officers, which bear a relation to the hill territory, may be on their own land—something in the same manner in which the District of Columbia has been given to the Supreme Government in America. I do not see why there should not be a station of our missions here, connected with Sabathú, in the same way that I have previously recommended that Dehra should be connected with Landour; though Dehra should be supplied first, on account of its greater importance. Invalids could often live in these stations nearly the whole year, instead of either going home, or making an entire break-up of their labours at their own stations, by going to the hills for a year or two.

I left Kálká that same evening, and early in the morning reached a large native town called Morandá. On account of the fierce sun I could not examine this town. Before night I left it, and reached Lodiana early the next morning.

The enfeebled state of the station at Lodiana, and urgent reasons why it should be reinforced.

To all the members and friends of our missions in India, Lodiana is, or ought to be, a place invested with a peculiar interest, as that where our first India mission was planted. One cannot but recollect how God in his providence guided the counsels of his people, and directed the attention of persons of a rank that does not usually concern itself much with such affairs, to this place; so that our first missionary, Mr. Lowrie, was advised and encouraged by Lady William Bentinck and her friends, as to his great undertaking. On looking at the mission establishment, I could not but remember how Mr. Lowrie described to me, some sixteen years ago, his feelings of sorrow, on being obliged to leave the place on account of his health; and for various reasons, I wished that he could see it as it is. I remembered those who have laboured here, and are in America now; I thought of one member of the mission, whom I had so recently left at Simlah, sick of an incurable disease—of others whose lives have been worn out here, and whose record is on high. I thought of the immense influence that had been exerted on the population of the Panjáb, and of the provinces on this side of the Sutledge intimately connected with it, by the schools, the Scriptures, the tracts, and the preaching of this mission; how the European character had been presented to the people of these provinces, by these means, in a much more favourable light than any in which it otherwise would have been viewed; and thus the settlement of the government, after the conquest, had been greatly facilitated: how the whole Panjáb had been indirectly cultivated as a mission field, by these means, so that when missions were set up in it, they did not seem at all as if set up in new territory. And, in thinking of the time when Mr. Lowrie visited "the Old Lion," Runjeet Singh, I could not avoid conjecturing what would have been the effect of the school at Lahore, if it had been commenced at that time. Perhaps a few men might have been so influenced with it, and their knowledge and ideas so enlarged, that they would have kept their nation from their mad and ruinous collision with the English, and so preserved their government to this day. Perhaps this might have been a good—perhaps an evil; it might have furthered Christianity—it might have hindered it; we sorrow now over a lost opportunity; but if that opportunity had been granted, it might have cut us off from present greater ones. If we had been permitted to connect Christianity with the Sikh rule in the Panjáb, it might have extended, or it might have been restrained in its action; great and small might have been converted—and quite as likely might have hindered progress while granting protection. Would the Maharája have become a Christian, as he has now done? On the whole, I am entirely reconciled to the fact that Runjeet Singh did not encourage the setting up of a school on terms that Mr. Lowrie could accept. It would either have been overthrown again, and done no good; or, if it had done good, it might have prevented the overthrow of a native government—which overthrow is the greatest good which circumstances permitted.

I found Lodiana inadequately manned. Mr. Janvier, as has been mentioned before, was at Simlah, on account of Mrs. Janvier's very precarious state of health, leaving only Mr. and Mrs. Porter, and Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph. They have to sustain a large English and vernacular school in the city, take care of a native press and a dispensary, as well as to preach to a regular congregation, and in the chapel and streets of the city. Mr. Porter is silenced, as to all preaching, by a disease of the throat; and his health is so delicate that the charge of the press is all he can assume of the current duties of the station. Mr. Rudolph has to preach on Sabbath once in English, and once in the native language in the Mission church, and once in the native language to the congregation in the city chapel. On other days, he teaches in the school four hours daily, and prescribes to from forty to sixty sick at the dispensary, and also visits the city sometimes with the native catechists, to preach in the streets. To lay so many duties on one man—duties requiring exposure to all kinds of weather, and causing a constant drain of both physical and mental power—is to do our best to break the man down, and deprive ourselves of his labours altogether. More men ought to be placed at Lodiana at once. One house is permanently vacant there now, which ought to be occupied; and somebody, (I know not who, but it is the person who ought to have come out from America to Lodiana, and has not come,) is to be blamed for it.

But in regard to this matter, some may say that, since the civil and military officers, who formerly made Lodiana a very large English station, have been removed westward, in consequence of the conquest of the Panjab, there is now no necessity that Lodiana should have so many men as formerly. It is true that Lodiana, as an English station, has been greatly reduced; it is melancholy to drive through the roads, once skirted by fine villas, and see the gardens becoming a desolation; one house fallen, and another falling down; one with the roof burnt off, some dismantled, the roof-timbers and doors carried away, and the walls left standing in shattered and ragged masses; and the unnatural and disagreeable quiet that reigns, where any one can see that lately the scene must have been so different. An old ruin may be interesting; a new one is only distressing. But the reduction of the station, so far as I can see, is no reason for the reduction of the mission. The native city is there yet; the English school is there, and flourishing; the streets are there, and the same varied crowd of Hindoos, Sikhs, and Musalmans, who have been there all the time; the press is there yet, pouring out its treasures for the region around, and requiring as much labour as ever. There is no less to be done than if thousands of English were there. And this city presents peculiar opportunities of doing good to the regions beyond; probably no other place has so direct and extensive a connection with Kashmire and the region about it. The oppressions practised by native rulers in Kashmire, from its conquest by Runjeet Singh to the present moment, have nearly driven out the whole shawl manufacture of the valley; and far the greater part of it is now carried on at Lodiana, under English protection, by people of Kashmire. These people still look on Kashmire as their home; they would doubtless soon flock back to it if they could; they keep up a constant and extensive intercourse with it as it is. The Sikhs from the other side of the Sutledge have a great deal of intercourse with this city, and this makes this place still, as it has long been, one of the main points from which light and truth must emanate for the Panjab. The ordinary population is large enough to occupy the time of four men. The neighbouring accessible towns are many and important. There is absolutely no reason for making our number there less than it used to be.

There is a matter connected with Lodiana, and the labours and requirements of the place, which I have not yet mentioned, and which I feel a delicacy in mentioning, lest I should hurt the feelings of an esteemed friend. But a view of the whole case cannot be given without it; and perhaps I, as not being connected directly with that mission, may more properly speak of it, than any of themselves. There is a female orphan asylum there. Such an institution always needs a good part of the time of one missionary lady; and it would often be of advantage to have some of the labour of a missionary gentleman expended upon it too; for the better these orphan girls are educated, the better will be the mothers of the next generation of native Christians. Mrs. Porter has charge of the orphan girls at Lodiana; and were it not that I mean neither to praise nor censure individuals in these sketches, I could say much in praise of that lady's indefatigable industry and self-denial. But, in the crippled state of that Mission, this is not all that comes upon her. Mr. Porter's health, and Mr. Janvier's distance from the press, cause a part of the proof reading for the press to be done by her. Now the state of things there ought to be laid before the Church at home distinctly The health of the other ladies of that mission will not allow them to take up Mrs. Porter's work if she should be obliged to lay it down. There ought to be a family added to that station immediately—indeed, the present operations there, which can be dragged on with their present force, must be ruinously affected by any additional case of sickness; and we cannot expect any thing but such sickness. I wish the churches could see the place and the work as I saw them; I fear that no description will convey a proper idea of the reality. And if my seeing things as they are, and seeking to convey a notion of them to the public, will only have the effect of causing a renewal of public interest in this, our oldest and our honoured station, I shall never regret the saddening effect which the sight had upon me. It is not always best for the Church to fancy that all her prospects are bright; it is better, in this case, that she should feel that she has here a great opportunity to work for her Lord, and that she is neglecting it, and placing important operations in danger of damage or defeat.

There are a great many of the Affghan princes and great men, who have been banished from their country by political dissensions, living at Lodiana. Here also reside Mohan Lal and Sálih Mohamed, of Affghan celebrity, now living on pensions from the English. All these great men are surrounded by crowds of dependants. If our missionaries had leisure for it, they might cultivate the acquaintance of these men, and extend their influence even to Affghanistan—but now there is no time for it!

The shawl weavers are mostly very poor, and are sometimes little better than the slaves of the monied men who employ them, and to whom they are constantly indebted. Some of them came to Mr. Rudolph as inquirers, and wished him to do something to relieve them from that slavery. It would not have required much money to do it—the men might have been brought under the influence of Christian teaching by doing it—but there was no time that could be given to it, and the men went back again!

South of Lodiana there is a new sect growing up, who worship "the Father Jesus," as they call him. They are extending far and wide. The leader, doubtless, is moved by a corrupt ambition; but all such movements have produced Christian fruit when there have been men to follow them up, watch them, and seize opportunities of usefulness. Mr. Porter has visited the place once—much might be done about it, and with great hopes—but there is no time for it!

As I have said before, Lodiana is peopled in a most motley manner; and a great variety of strangers visit it, affording one of the very best opportunities for street preaching and tract distribution. I went with Mr. Rudolph to the city. We had a large congregation without effort—a city inquirer was present—a learned man from Kashmire disputed with us—Sikhs heard us. I saw no place where a better opportunity of the kind is offered. Mr. Rudolph does attend to this kind of business; but I have seen and experienced enough in the missionary field to know, that where there are schools, and presses, and congregational preaching to be attended to, the street preaching, being that which can be intermitted with least present inconvenience, is sure to go to the wall. My own whole missionary life has afforded one long, sorrowful exemplification of this truth. I have been tied to a press and a congregation, so that five days out of seven there was neither leisure nor strength for out-door and aggressive work. I do not complain; I only say that Lodiana should be strong enough, (and all other stations too,) to allow of these things being done, and that not left undone.

Dear children of God, on account of these things "is any among you afflicted? let him pray."

JOURNAL OF THE REV. A. RUDOLPH AT A HINDU FESTIVAL.

Jwala Mukhi, Friday, April 15th, 1853.—On my way to the preaching-tent I passed by a tank of stagnant water, covered on the surface with a coat of greenish matter generally seen on stagnant water. Bathing in this holy spot is supposed to be meritorious, and consequently men and women were busily engaged in the act, the latter evidently taking little pains to conceal their naked bodies from the gaze of the men. What would Christians at home say at such a sight? The truth is, when missionaries write home, they have to conceal, for decency's sake, the most horrid features of idolatry. What would Christians say if we were simply to mention all the objects that are worshipped in India? There is much contradiction in idolatry. The women, who on meeting one in the street, would draw their veils so closely over their face that but one single eye of theirs remained visible, would expose their bodies on such occasions, in the most shocking manner, without the least pretence to chastity.

Having reached the tent, I had a most interesting discussion with a man, in the presence of a crowd of listeners. He was not an opposer, had rather a philosophical turn of mind; he did not defend idolatry, but spake in terms of reverence of Christ; he had evidently read or heard of him before. His many questions furnished ample opportunity for giving an account of what Christianity was. But he had many doubts; he could not see Christ, and wanted some visible help to bring him to Christ. He said the ferry was of no use unless there were a boatman to lead the passengers over the stream. I told him Christ was the ferry; we who had put our trust in him were standing in it, inviting the passengers to come along with us, and to put as much confidence in Christ as we had done. When I spoke to him of the internal, divine life of the believer, he said it was just that which he sought, and could not find. He had read the Scriptures, but could not attach any meaning to many things in them. I advised him not only to read, but to pray that God might reveal Christ to him and enlighten his mind, and make plain to him what seemed obscure. The man was almost offended when I got up to go to breakfast, but he seemed satisfied when I told him I would be back after a few hours, and then stay till evening.

About noon I started again for the preaching tent, and had not gone far when the Pandit who was at the preaching-tent yesterday met me on the road. He told me he was just on the road to the Bárahdarí to have a talk with me. I asked him to come along with me to the tent, which he did. He said, I have only one question to ask, it is this: "If a man has to go a certain road, that was first beset with thorns and briers, and that at length has become pretty clear and plain, but there be a dog to the right of the road, and another to the left, both barking and biting at the man, how is he to get through?" I said the case might be a difficult one, but if he were a man of courage, he would try to get on notwithstanding the dogs, and may be that he would find both dogs chained, and that after all they might be able to do nothing more than bark. "Well," said he, "you have understood my question. The road is Christianity; the dog to the right is Mohammedanism, that to the left Hinduism; both are barking terribly; how am I to get through? I am fully convinced that heathenism is false; I have told the Brahmans and Pandits that all is a lie and a cheat; but they bite me, and rail at me, and have even beaten me with shoes." I took occasion to show him that he must expect to suffer shame for Christ, and seeing he had done so much for us, we ought not to count even our lives dear for his sake. He asked me how a man could be brought to faith in Christ. I gave him the history of my own conversion, which seemed to satisfy him.

While we were sitting at the tent, a man asked for a book, upon which the Pandit asked him what he had came for to Jwálá Mukhi. The man replied, to see the Devi, (goddess). "Well," the Pandit asked, "and did you see her? did she say any thing to you? did she give you any thing?" The man was enraged by having such puzzling questions put to him by one of the Brahmans, and at once began to vent his anger against him. "Ah," rejoined the Pandit, "you are also one of those whom we Brahmans have deceived and cheated so long; but I tell you now it is all a lie; do not believe it." The man began to stand up in defence of his religion, but found it to be uphill work against a Pandit so well acquainted with all the deceptions practised by his brethren. He said, "I was once blind as you are, and believed in the existence of a Devi. I myself was deputed by Runjeet Singh (the late Rájá of the Panjáb) to bring one hundred Man* of ghí to the Devi of Jwálá Mukhí, to feed the flame. Had that been used for food it would have been turned to some good purpose; but as it was, it was wasted upon dirt and stone." He had a long argument with the man, in which he exposed, with the most cutting sarcasm, the wickedness and greediness of the Brahmans, and at the same time he showed a good acquaintance with the New Testament.

In the mean time it had begun to hail and to rain; the pilgrims had all retired to find shelter somewhere. The Pandit was left alone with me and the native Christians and servants in the tent. We had a long talk on various subjects, both religious and scientific, which gave me an opportunity to observe that the Pandit was well acquainted with the religious, philosophic, and scientific Shasters of the Hindús; that he had become disgusted with all; had then adopted the Vedantic system, (which puts the human being on a level with the Creator,) which, however, did not satisfy his mind. He is almost a Christian, but his attachment to Christ seems not to be strong as yet; he appears not to have a strong feeling of the sinfulness of his sins. The philippics that he directs against Hinduism openly before the people, are so well chosen, and used with such masterly aim, that I cannot but rejoice that this man has been led to visit Jwálá Mukhí to testify against idolatry. What a powerful instrument he might become for doing good among his fellow-men, if Divine grace should see fit to fill his heart with the Holy Ghost, and the love of Christ his Saviour.

Saturday Morning.—On the way to the tent the man with whom I had so interesting a discussion yesterday morning, met me on the road; he had come for the purpose, to call at the Bárahdari. He said, "Sir, I have seen enough of the folly of the Jwálá Mukhí, and I am now on my way back to my home. I do not believe in the Devi, nor do I worship these stones; it is all a lie. When a dog in the house sees a thief, he barks to give notice to the inmates. Other dogs, in the road, hearing him, begin to bark too, and bark all night, though not because they have seen the thief, but because they heard the other dog bark. Ages ago, some one may have seen the Devi, and have given notice; but all the people that come now to the mela, bark for nothing; for they have not seen the Devi, nor is there any now in the Chúlhá. So long as the tiger is in the cage, he does not know his strength; but let him once escape, and he will find it out. These people have been kept by the Brahmans and the fear of the Devi in the cage until now; let them learn their strength, and there will be an end of the matter. I have had enough of it. I am going home, and if I can, I will pay you a visit in Lodiana." He shook me by the hand most cordially, and bade me good bye. All this happened before a crowd of pilgrims that were just coming in, and had gathered around us. Some of them seemed surprsied at the way the man spoke, and others joined in the laugh about the pretended Devi.

At the tent I was soon surrounded by people, and had a long talk with an intelligent man. The thing that he could not understand was, why one man was rich and the other man poor, one virtuous and the other wicked, why so many Englishmen were true Christians, and a great many more were not, although both had the same gospel. In short, the origin of evil was the great stumbling-block at which he took offence, and this he would have been glad of referring back to the great Author of the whole universe. A fat, vulgarl-looking fakír had, in the mean time, taken his seat by our side. He probably had tasted largely of the ghí and other good things of this world offered to the Devi, and I had spoken out too plainly, as he thought, against the deception, carnality, and covetousness of the Brahmans. He soon manifested his displeasure in words of anger, and when he saw that the people sitting by were all good-natured fellows, and consented to what I said, he left in a rage, saying there was no use in sitting there and listening to me.

In the mean time other men had taken their seats, and expressed great delight at something that I had happened to say, when a voice from behind exclaimed, "And why then don't you believe and accept the truth? what do you come for here?" I turned round, and found it was our friend the Pandit. The pleasant looks of the people began to change somewhat, and I thought I could discover some angry faces among them. They generally receive well the truth when spoken by us, but as yet they think it out of the way, when one from their own number, and especially a Brahman, attacks them in that way. I left the field to be occupied by the native brethren and the Pandit, intending to return soon after breakfast.

After breakfast I found the Pandit and the native brethren engaged in the work. It continued without interruption till evening. Sometimes there was much warm discussion, and some opposition, but at other times the crowd listened with undivided attention. The fat fakir returned with some of the Brahmans, probably with the intention to have them second his efforts in opposing the truth. I had told the fakir that if he would produce a single instance, where an individual by attending the fair and worshipping the Devi, had received a new heart, had his sins blotted out, and received power to live soberly, godly, and righteously in this world, I would say no more against the Devi. He replied, "The Devi was not to blot out sins and to change the heart, she merely granted 'Sukh' (happiness, prosperity) to the people that worshipped her." I turned to the people and said, now here you have the testimony of one of your own fakirs to the fact that the Devi cannot blot out sins, and cannot give a new heart, do you need any more testimony? I then asked the fakir how it was that the people that had on former occasions come here for "sukh" had received "dukh," (pain, affliction,) as I had often had occasion to notice. To this he had nothing to reply. He found the Pandit so good a match for him and his companions, that he soon excused himself, saying the sun was very hot, so they all went away. Sometimes some of the people struggled hard to help their Devi out of the scrape, but they found at last that they had nothing left to stand on, and they gave up the defence in despair.

When I got up to go home, a fakir, whom I had noticed for a long time among the crowd, stepped forward and asked several questions about our faith, and how it could be obtained; at last he said he wanted very much to learn all about it. I proposed that he should go with me to Lodiana, where he could learn the way to the truth more fully. He was delighted with the idea, and jumped at it with the greatest readiness. He said, "But I am poor, and shall want something to eat." I told him that God had fed him while he was his enemy, and I could assure him that he would not leave him unprovided, when he was seeking the way of truth. The people that listened said, "Certainly not." He pressed my hand very warmly, and then went along with me to the house. Here we had another little talk, and he left me, manifesting a good deal of feeling and attachment.

I had scarcely got through my dinner when the Pandit made his appearance, to open to me his whole heart; to tell me all his doubts, and that he had made up his mind to be a Christian. His chief difficulty seemed to be in reference to his wife, who will not hear anything about the matter. She abuses him for not observing the rites and customs of the Hindus, such as performing ablutions before his meals, &c. The other difficulty was in reference to the occupation he should choose, in order to earn his bread honestly. He said he had sold nothing but lies hitherto, but he had given up this traffic. I told him he had better now commence selling the truth, as much as he had sold lies before. "Yes," said he, "I have sold lies for fourteen years, and if I die to-morrow, what will become of me?" I asked him to come to Lodiana, to become acquainted with us, as well as with the customs of our Church; to see the school, and our native Christians, and to give us at the same time an opportunity of becoming more fully acquainted with him, and after that he should decide as to his duty. To this he agreed, and left me at 10 o'clock in the evening.

INDIA: FURRUKHABAD MISSION.

JOURNAL OF REV. J. F. ULLMAN.

A Mohammedan Mela at Shekhpore.

June 10th, 1853.

Some time ago, I gave you a brief description of a Hindu mela held at Singhrampore, which I and Babu Gopeenath Nundy attended. I shall now send you a few particulars of a Mohammedan mela which I visited, accompanied by our Catechist Hanukh. It was held at Shekhpore on the 29th of March. We went there on the 28th, in order to secure a good place for our tent, expecting also that something might be done before the principal day. Our tent was pitched in the shade of a pretty Mangoe-tope, close to the mela ground, where we were protected from the great heat.

Shekhpore, a large village, is eight miles from Furrukhabad, and almost exclusively inhabited by Mohammedans. As far as I could ascertain, they were all of the Shekh, or Shaikh, class, from which cause the place has most probably received its name. There is in the village a burial ground, containing a large number of Mohammedan tombs, and amongst them that of a famous saint of theirs, called by them Peer, which is considered to be very sacred, and to which, not only on the mela day, but also on other days, people are resorting, to perform their devotions, and present offerings. On our entering this burial ground, to see the tomb, some persons wished us to take off our shoes, as the ground was holy, which of course we refused to do, as, had we done so, we should have appeared by our conduct to sanction their superstitious views in regard to the Peer. As there were but a few present, they let us pass. When this Mohammedan saint lived I could not ascertain, but of his sanctity they relate a great deal.

A Coat of Miraculous Powers.

I was told that when he died, he left to his eighteen sons one coat, which had the peculiar property of causing the person who put it on to be thrown into a trance, and see visions. The difficult question, who should become owner of the coat, was decided by a dervish in favour of the youngest son; but the other brothers, being displeased with this decision, tore it into pieces, each reserving a part for himself. All of them, with the exception of that belonging to the youngest son, had, however, lost the wonderful efficacy. He had a new coat made for himself, and inserted that sacred rag in it, and whenever he put it on, he is said to have lost his senses, and seen visions. This became soon known, and multitudes of Mohammedans resorted yearly on a certain day to this place, when the young Shekh, arrayed in this sacred coat, visited his father's tomb, lying in a palkee, in a state of unconsciousness. After his death, some one in his family inherited the wonderful coat, and in this way it has come down from one to another unto its present possessor, Bunda Alee. You wonder that it is still in a wearable state, although it is more than a century old, and so did I, until I was told that it was continually kept in repairs: patch is put upon patch, and if necessary, a whole new cover is put over it. The one holy rag imbedded in it, communicates its wonderful property to the whole, no matter how big and unseemly it may appear. I could not help thinking of what is called "The holy coat of Treves," which the Roman Catholic Bishop of that town in Germany, some years ago, had found, and to which so many thousand Roman Catholic pilgrims went. The holy coat of Treves and that of Shekhpore might well be classed together, as equally deserving our reverence. One of the Mohammedans, being desirous to convince me of the truth of his story, told me that those who wore it never lived long, but that all the descendants of the old Peer, who had been in possession of it, died young. Supposing this to be a fact, any one who is acquainted with the Mohammedan character, can easily guess the cause of this; for he who was to inherit the coat, and together with it wealth and honour, most probably considered it too long a time to wait for the natural death of its possessor, and accelerated it by some means; telling the people that the sudden death of the Shekh was the supernatural effect of the virtue inherent in the coat.

Difference between a Mohammedan and Hindu Mela.

The first thing which strikes one who attends the first time a Mohammedan mela, is its different aspect from a Hindu mela. You see indeed a temporary bazar, but instead of raw provisions, there is ready prepared food offered for sale. Here and there, also, large pieces of beef are hanging for the same purpose, which with a Hindu is an abomination. Again, you see no women, as Mohammedans never take their wives to a mela, whilst on Hindu melas they constitute the majority, being far more devoted worshippers of their gods than men. We saw, indeed, women in a considerable number, who had put up their place—at least for a time—at a very sacred spot close to the burial ground, but these were women of immoral character, who had posted themselves in this conspicuous place, in order to be seen by every one. They gradually increased, and then removed altogether to an approaching grove, where, I was told, they always take up their quarters at the mela.

There were a good number of wealthy and respectable Mohammedans present at the mela, amongst whom the Nuwab Ruees of Furrukhabad, and some four or five other petty Nuwabs. They had their numerous large and commodious tents pitched, not in the tope of trees, where they would feel comfortable, but in the open field, because their forefathers did so, and, moreover, they wish to be seen and wondered at, which could not well take place in a wood, which rather hides from the view. One of the Nuwabs told me that he had arrived there a few days ago, during which time he had been suffering fearfully from the heat in his tent, because it was so entirely exposed to the sun. Yet they do not mind it, if only their vanity can be gratified. These Nuwabs have generally their wives with them, in temporary harems or tents, close by theirs, and surrounded by an enclosure.

Instead of the dirty fakirs at the Hindu melas you see a small number of more decent looking Mohammedan fakirs, with conical hats, who, in parties of from ten to twenty, go about begging or extorting money. Not far from the tomb of the Peer, a government police officer, with a number of under officers, has his tent also pitched, for, as on such occasions frequently quarrels or thefts occur, he must be near, in order to settle differences.

Preaching to a Mohammedan audience.

On the morning of the 29th we went to the sacred place, which was crowded with Mohammedans, and a small number of Hindus; for although the latter do not come to worship, yet curiosity seems to draw them. Not far from this place we ascended an elevated spot, and preached there for about an hour. Some of the Mohammedans, seeing us here, were evidently surprised. One of them we overheard saying, "There are the Padrees here also;" as if he intended to say, that there was no place where we did not follow them, in order to preach. Another, who seemed afraid that his religion would suffer by our preaching, said for himself, with evident sincerity, "Oh God save us!" Hanukh's preaching I liked much. He did it with admirable boldness, and having been himself formerly a Mohammedan, he knew their system so very well, that he could meet them on their own ground. He showed them that Mohammedanism was very little different from Hinduism, and then drew the parallel between both, which surprised a good many of the hearers, for they had never viewed it in such a light. Some turned away laughingly; others, feeling offended at Hanukh's boldness, in comparing them with the despised idolaters, either showed their anger, because they could not answer him, or tried to refute or silence him, if not by arguments, yet by noise and clamour. I then preached on the words, "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden," &c. When the noise and opposition became overpowering, we considered it prudent to return home. On our way, one of the people in his anger cried out several times to us, "You poor deceived people, when will you be converted to the true faith?" (meaning, of course, Mohammedanism.) We did as if we heard him not, and he soon desisted. Here and there we distributed tracts, and reached at last our tent.

Praying to a living saint.

From 12 o'clock, every one was on the lookout for the wonderful Shekh who was expected from Bhojpore, a town four miles from Shekhpore. He made the expectants wait a long time, until at last at 4 o'clock, the distant cry was heard—"The Shekh is coming! the Shekh is coming!" At once all were on the alert to get a glimpse of him. The Nuwab Ruees of Furrukhabad, dressed most gaudily, ascended his high elephant, to go to meet him, and was followed by a crowd of other Mohammedans, all intent on the same object. The road was on both sides lined by curious spectators. At last he came, reclining on a palkee carried on men's shoulders. I could not see the miserable hypocrite, nor had I a great desire to do so, but I was told that he exhibited some signs of being in a holy trance, for he looked down constantly, without saying one word. Poor deluded people! With a few exceptions, all of them really think that there is no deceit whatever in the matter, and that the Shekh is beside himself as long as he wears that wonderful coat with the sacred rag in it. Arrived at the tomb, he puts it off, and lo and behold, he is again in his right mind. But now let me tell you also the result of the whole. A Mohammedan would indeed, for merely getting a name, practice any trick of that kind, but here it is also connected with pecuniary gain. Crowds of people now rush into the burial ground, if they have not done so before, and present their offerings, which consist of money, sweetmeats, garlands of flowers, and large pieces of cloth, which are thrown upon the old Peer's tomb. At the same time prayers are offered to him, or rather, he is asked to intercede for them with God and the Prophet, to grant them what they need. And what is it? One wants a livelihood, or employment which would support himself and family; another wants riches; a third wants a wife; a fourth offspring; a fifth the death of his enemy; and others want other things, which they believe they will obtain by the intercession of the saint. If after this, by some means or other, no matter whether good or bad, they receive what they wish, or something like it, they think it is by the Peer's mediation; and if they are disappointed, it is because there was something wrong in the manner in which it was offered, or the offering was not large enough; and thus it is that the reputation of the Peer's sanctity and power of intercession is daily more and more spreading, until he becomes a prodigy.

Before our tent we spread two large carpets for visitors, and here Hanukh and myself preached to all who wished to hear the word of God, and gave tracts and gospels to all who could read. Some of the Mohammedans gave us a good deal of trouble, for they felt annoyed at our presence, and particularly at our telling them that they were poor deceived people, and that there was no way of escape, but by repenting of their sins, and believing in Christ, the Son of God. The fragments of a tract, torn into pieces, which I afterwards found before the tent, showed the feelings which influenced its former possessor. You need, however, not think that all Mohammedans are of that kind. There are always a few who listen quietly, and some who propose sensible questions, and for their sakes it was particularly that we had come hither.

After the Shekh's arrival in Shekhpore every one prepared for going home, for they had seen what they wanted. And you can naturally suppose that at such a time no one is inclined to listen much to what we have to say. We therefore also returned home in the evening.

MISSIONS AMONG ROMANISTS.

A LETTER OF THE REV. J. P. REVEL, D. D., MODERATOR OF THE SYNOD OF THE WALDENSIAN CHURCH.

Church at Turin—Good news from Sardinia—Notices of a missionary tour through Piedmont—Work of evangelization at various places—Modest appeal for help.

La Tour, Vaudois Valleys of Piedmont, Italy, October 19th, 1853.

Highly esteemed Sir, and dear Brother—It was not my intention to wait so long before writing to you, but the accumulation of business has not left me the liberty to choose. I hoped also to be able to give you some particulars concerning the public opening of the church in Turin, which was at first appointed for the 29th of September, then postponed to the 20th of this month, and now the director of the work informs me that the ceremony must be deferred, because the building is far from being finished within. These disappointments are painful, because a good number of friends from England, America, and other quarters, had made their arrangements to unite with us on that important and solemn occasion. I am, notwithstanding, happy to be able to say that this delay does not proceed from any difficulty raised on the part of the Government or of the people; on the contrary, we receive great encouragement from both these sources. The former, faithful to the spirit of the constitution, leaves all possible liberty to preach the gospel, and to disseminate the holy Scriptures among the Catholic population; and the latter show themselves every day better disposed to receive the good news of salvation. We who are engaged in the work see this, and we bless God; and the foreign brethren who have visited us, and could observe this, are struck with it. One of them wrote lately, "In the kingdom of Sardinia, the state of mind is at this moment such that no one can form a conception of it, without being witness to it. It is the waking up from a long sleep; it is the dry bones beginning to move. Everywhere the people begin to reflect, to recognize their error, to long for and demand something better. The Scriptures are widely distributed, and their divine author blesses marvellously the reading of them, without the intervention of any human instrument; whilst wherever the gospel is preached, it meets with a profoundly attentive audience, and many prove that it is the power of God unto their salvation. In the principal towns of the kingdom, Vaudois pastors are established, as well for the direction as for the extension of the good work. The colporteurs have admirable success. In one place, during the first week, four hundred copies were disposed of. In another town, as soon as the colporteurs showed themselves, people ran up to obtain these books, and in a quarter of an hour fifteen copies were sold; the people, as they took them away, exclaiming, 'Here is the true Bible! Here is the truth, which has always been kept concealed from us! May we profit by it!'"

During this summer's vacation, two of our Professors were sent on a missionary tour through Piedmont. The reports which they have made to us are very interesting, and communicate to us most important information. In one town they found a Canon who reads the Bible constantly, and who has already so well appreciated its instructions that he has given up his canonicate, which brought him two hundred and forty dollars a year; and his love for the truth in Christ prompts him already to make it known, though timidly, to others. In another place there is a priest who cannot any more read mass. He has procured a copy of the Bible for each of his nieces; he reads it and meditates upon it with the members of his household; and when at distant intervals they still go to the Roman church, they carry their Bibles, and read in them during the whole service, paying no attention to what the priest is saying or doing. In another place, the Syndic (or mayor) of the commune, received our evangelist with peculiar joy; showed the Bible which he reads, and many religious tracts. He deplored the state of indifference and of unbelief of the masses and of the nation, and added, with sadness, "It is necessary, in order that your work may prosper amongst us, that the spirit of the people be changed; all is corrupt." Our itinerant missionaries have everywhere met with some well-disposed persons, and such as might serve as points of support for a work of evangelization. They have sold many copies of the Bible, and since they have returned, they are frequently receiving letters from priests, monks, and other members of the Roman church, asking them for information concerning the principles of our church. You will doubtless join with me in admiring the fine field which Providence appears to design opening to the Professors and students of our Theological Seminary. The masters and their pupils will go during their summer vacation, to make missionary tours in the plains of Piedmont, to verify in practice the lessons of the winter, and to study together the best method of evangelizing our ignorant populations.

I have the great satisfaction of being able to say to you that our work of evangelization makes surprising progress. We have now eleven missionaries in the work. We have received encouraging reports from them all. They are placed as follows: one at Pignerol, with more than 300 hearers; two at Turin, more than 600 hearers; one at Cazale, 25 to 30 persons; two at Gènes, more than 400 hearers; one at Chiavari and Favale, 40 to fifty hearers; two at Nice, with an Italian congregation of 70 to 80, and a French one of 90 to 100 hearers; one at Constantinople, having a small congregation and a school, and one is about to leave for Florence. Although the bigotry of the Grand Duke of Tuscany has reached a point of disgusting stupidity, I hope that our young brother will not suffer himself to be dismayed. With zeal and prudence, he will be able to do something for those unfortunate brethren. What thanks have we to render to the Lord who, to accomplish these things, condescends to make use of a poor church which men have sought to crush by centuries of persecution, and then to smother by centuries of oppression, and which has been but five years set free from the heaviest chains! But it is not our efforts which obtain these results; it is the sympathies, the prayers, the contributions, the encouragement of every description derived from the brotherly love of the children of God spread throughout all places, that strive for us with the Lord. I hope that they will persevere, and not grow weary.

We are at this moment embarrassed to pay all our eleven evangelists, who are labouring in the bosom of Catholic populations. In case you do not deem it imprudent, I would pray you to ask the Board of Foreign Missions, of which you are the Secretary, if they could appropriate to us five or six hundred dollars from your receipts for our Italian mission. If you consider my request as not well timed, I beg you very earnestly to make no mention of it, for nothing would so give me pain as to appear importunate in the eyes of the venerable friends who have become so dear to me, since I have tasted with delight the most precious testimonials of their cordial love. I desire that you will have the goodness to say to each one of them, as occasion shall serve, how happy we are, my wife and myself, to recall them to mind in our home conversation, with our friends, and in our prayers * * * and believe me, I am, dear sir, with respect and Christian love, your devoted brother in Christ,

J. P. Revel, Pastor and Moderator.

OBITUARY.

MEMOIRS OF MR. M. S. COULTER.

Moses Stanley Coulter was born on the 30th of May, 1824, in Brooke county, Virginia. From this place he removed, with his parents, to the State of Illinois, where he afterwards resided. In the sixteenth year of his age, he experienced, as he hoped, a change of heart, and publicly professed his faith in Christ in connection with the Presbyterian Church. The many and urgent calls for labourers in the work of the gospel ministry, especially among the rapidly growing population of the new States of the West, could not fail to attract his attention, and he seems to have early satisfied himself of his own personal call to the ministerial work.

With a view to preparation for this work, he entered Hanover College, at Hanover, Indiana, in May, 1844. He was here a diligent and successful student, and stood high in point of scholarship, while his Christian deportment and attention to his College duties secured to him the esteem and affection of his teachers and associates. He was graduated with his class on the 19th July, 1848.

About this time an appeal was made by the Executive Committee of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church, through the Professors of the College, for a suitable person to take charge of their printing establishment at Ningpo, China. This appeal was at once presented to Mr. Coulter by the Professors. After much hesitation, he consented to communicate with the Executive Committee of the Board. He was invited by them to visit New York, for the sake of personal conference with the members of that Committee, with a view to the more intelligent decision of the question of personal duty.

Apart from the high recommendations which he presented, the officers of the Board were soon satisfied of his superior qualifications for the duties of the situation. Mr. Coulter had no purpose, however, of foregoing the privilege of preaching the gospel, and he for some time hesitated in his decision on account of the difficulty of carrying on his theological studies in a situation which must make large demands upon his time and energies. He sought the advice of the venerable Professors, Drs. Alexander and Miller, of Princeton, and finding that their opinion coincided with that of the officers of the Board, he consented to accept the appointment. He then spent some months in a printing office in New York, where he, with great facility, made himself acquainted with all the important practical operations of the establishment.

On the 1st of January, 1849, he was united in marriage to Miss Caroline E. Crowe, daughter of President Crowe, and they sailed for Canton, China, in the ship "Samuel Russell,," on the 24th of February following.

After spending a few weeks in Canton and Hongkong, they proceeded northward by the first opportunity, and arrived at Ningpo on the 24th of August. The Rev. A. W. Loomis, who had for some time had charge of the printing-office, was just at this time on the point of returning to the United States, on account of the failure of his health. Mr. Coulter was therefore called to enter immediately upon the duties of this responsible situation.

Mr. Coulter, soon after his arrival, placed himself under the care of the Presbytery of Ningpo, as a candidate, with a view to pursuing his studies, preparatory to the work of the ministry, to which he felt himself called. He felt that thorough preparation was not on any account to be dispensed with, because he expected to preach the gospel among the Chinese. He continued to devote a portion of his time to theological studies, until his last sickness, though the many demands upon his time by the duties of his position, prevented him from carrying on these studies as rapidly as he desired. Had his life been spared, however, he would probably have ere long been licensed by Presbytery to preach, and in due time would have been ordained to the full work of the ministry.

At the same time, Mr. Coulter did not neglect the important work of learning the language in which he hoped to preach. He gave his attention chiefly to the acquisition of the local spoken dialect, and as soon as he felt able to address an audience, was in the habit of visiting a small chapel every Sabbath, to make known the truth to as many as came to hear him. His progress in both the written and spoken languages, was such as to show that he possessed talents for the work to which he had devoted himself, of a high order.

Mr. Coulter, however, possessed other qualifications which rendered him a most valuable member of the mission with which he was connected, and which cause his associates very deeply to deplore his loss, not only for their own sakes, but for the work's sake. He possessed a sound and sober judgment, which rendered his opinion on the various questions continually occurring, of much value. He had a proper confidence in his own judgment, but was ready cheerfully to yield to that of a majority of his associates when it happened to differ from his own.

His modest and retiring disposition, his strong attachment to his friends, his uniform gentleness and kindness, endeared him to his associates, and, together with his unostentatious devotion to the cause of Christ, exerted a healthy influence in the circle of his acquaintance. He secured, also, a large share in the respect and affection of the Chinese with whom he was in the habit of intercourse.

Soon after his arrival at Ningpo, Mr. Coulter was elected a ruling elder in the Presbyterian Church, and held that office until his death.

From his childhood he manifesied an unusual taste for music, and possessing an excellent voice, he excelled in vocal music. The melody of that sweet voice leading the praises of the worshipping assembly in the house of God, must be prominently associated with his memory by all who have ever been in the habit of hearing him.

When Mr. Coulter first arrived at Ningpo, his fine manly form, and apparent strength of frame, seemed to promise a long period of labour in the work upon which he was entering. This hope, alas, was too soon to be disappointed. Scarcely had he entered upon his duties before he was attacked with fever and other diseases common in this climate. These attacks were repeated in the summer and autumn of subsequent years, and seemed to affect his constitution injuriously. In the winter of 1851—'52, however, his health and strength seemed entirely restored, and it was hoped that he had now become acclimated, and would escape the attacks which in former years had reduced his strength. But He who is "Head over all things to the Church," had otherwise appointed. In the latter part of the summer of 1852, his diarrhœa returned, and soon assumed an obstinate dysenteric form. The disease did not for some time confine him to his bed, but soon reduced his strength so much that he was unable to fulfil the onerous duties of his post, and he applied to the mission for some relief. His request was, of course, cheerfully complied with. Early in October his disease seemed to be so far checked that it was thought best he should use means to recruit his strength. For this purpose he was advised to visit Shanghai. He reached that city on the 8th of October, and remained until the 26th. Here, however, his disease again returned with more dangerous symptoms than had before appeared. His attending physician at Shanghai expressed to him the opinion that he would not be able to continue in the country, even if he should recover from the attack under which he was then suffering. This turned his thoughts towards his native land, though he was by no means in haste to conclude that duty called him to abandon the field of labour in which he had fondly hoped to spend his life. But it was not alone to his native land that his attention was now turned. His thoughts dwelt much on that "better country" which was the object of his hope. He spoke of the probability of a fatal termination of his disease, though others did not then regard the case as so serious. After his return to Ningpo, there was for two weeks a rapid amendment of his symptoms, which encouraged the hope that he soon might be entirely restored. He, however, seemed to have been all along convinced that his sickness would be "unto death."

A sudden and dangerous illness of his infant son, causing much fatigue and excitement, was the occasion of a relapse, which brought him very soon to the very borders of the grave. Many prayers were offered in his behalf, both by his own colleagues, and by the whole circle of missionaries at Ningpo, to all of whom he was much endeared. He continued, however, very low for some time, and it was evident that it would be necessary for him, if his life were now spared, to return to the United States. Accordingly, as soon as his disease seemed somewhat checked, preparations were made, as far as circumstances would permit, for his departure when his strength should admit of his removal. He lingered on for several weeks, and in the first week of December, his disease seemed so far checked that hopes were again entertained of his recovery. But his constitution had been too severely taxed, and although his disease had apparently left him, it was not till it had done its work—not until death had marked him for its own.

On the night of Friday, the 10th of December, a change occurred, of which he was conscious, and which he himself was the first to announce. On Saturday, it was evident to all that the time of his departure was at hand. Many friends called to bid a last farewell. Occasionally his mind wandered, and for a time while in this half unconscious state, Satan seemed permitted to assail him. But his feet were upon the Rock, and the adversary, though permitted to buffet, could not prevail against him. The cloud passed away, and he expressed his confidence in the Saviour of sinners.

That was a gloomy day. In the morning, an eclipse of the sun, nearly total, darkened the heavens, and spread dismay among the heathen around, who sought, by dismal sounds, to avert the catastrophe they dreaded. More sublime than the spectacle in the heavens, was that of the soul of our brother, struggling in the agonies of death, or rather, I should say, triumphing over death—yielding to his grasp for a moment, but only to mount up swiftly to those happy mansions which death can never enter. As the sun soon again resumed its wonted splendour, so, it was felt, the soul then passing through the dark valley of the shadow of death, would soon be basking in the bright beams of the Sun of Righteousness, never again to experience the hidings of his face. At three o'clock on Sabbath morning, the 12th December, 1852, his spirit took its flight, and passed, as we cannot doubt, "to brighter worlds on high." On Monday, his body was deposited in its last resting-place, to remain until the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt.

BOOKS AND VISITORS APPRECIATED.

A young lady, in an inland town of Pennsylvania, who has devoted herself to the self-denying task of instructing a school of coloured children, to which the Board made a donation of books, thus writes:

My scholars have again very cheerfully contributed a dollar to renew their subscription for the Sabbath School Visitor; and now we ask the favour of you to please forward it to the publishers. This little messenger, together with those interesting books which they received from the same kind friend, has been a source of great pleasure to these children. I made a certain standard of improvement and conduct a test of admission to the library, and it is pleasant to see how they strive to merit the privilege.

A gentleman in New Jersey writes as follows:

Enclosed please find my check for twenty-five dollars for the Sabbath-School Visitor; we could not do without it; we circulate them in the Presbyterian (coloured) Sabbath-school which I have had charge of for fifteen years; several teachers have been in the school twenty years.

Teachers and scholars all read the Visitor with great interest. The Letters on Presbyterianism alone are worth all the paper costs.

A CRY FOR HELP.

A domestic missionary in Indiana makes the following affecting appeal:

I am in a field of great destitution, and I am moved with compassion for the people in my pastoral charge. They not only have no shepherd, but have nothing to read as a general thing. True, I am appointed a shepherd over two churches in this county. But how can my voice reach all? I write to you at this time to know if I could secure the donation of some tracts for my field. Most gladly would I send pay for them if I could; but I have scarcely enough support for my family. Tracts would help me greatly. They would talk for me in the cabins at night, when read by hickory-bark firelight.

I make my request, and I would the Board had a view such as I now have of our destitute and spiritually dying community.

Another missionary in Indiana writes:

My field is very extensive—twenty-five miles long and about twelve wide. In all that range there is scarcely a minister that I can take by the hand and bid him God speed. The reading matter in the community is very small. Last winter your colporteur did a good work for me. In midwinter he explored the whole field, and astonished me with the amount of his sales. He is a faithful labourer, and has the confidence of the Presbytery. It is very important for this field that you should keep him in commission; he is acquainted with it, and he labours not for the salary, but because he thinks he is doing good.

I perfectly long to have more of the books of the Board distributed here. . . This week we have started a parochial school. It would be of immense value to the school, could we place the most important of your publications in it; but, like many other good things, it must be left undone.

The silent influences of the books that have been distributed here is immense. I fancy that I can see its effect already. It is truly like the silent falling of the dew. In this region the public mind, with regard to religion, is a perfect chaos. With our books and our preaching we are performing a very important part in forming that opinion. Our Church is gradually, in the eyes of the community, losing the hydra form in which she has been so often portrayed, and the people begin to think it is possible to be a member of her, without being a devil in heart.

Since coming here I have often thought of a remark once made to me in regard to certain errorists. It was that their operations in the West were like running fire over new ground, making it harder to till than at first. I have found it even so. Their churches, like the faggot, blaze for a moment brightly, then die. They have poisoned the minds of the community against us, and after having done so, find themselves unable to supply their religious wants. Many are the sceptics they have made by their wild fanaticism.

"LET THERE BE" DARKNESS!

The editor of the "Shepherd of the Valley," the leading Roman Catholic paper of the West, in a long editorial, from which we can extract only some of the choice gems, thus eloquently pleads the cause of ignorance, and denounces the Protestant practice of teaching the abominable art of reading. What a pity that he himself had ever learned his A B C! But having learned the evil of it, he is the better qualified to warn others against it.

"We are not the friend of popular education as at present understood. The popularity of a humbug shall never, we trust, lead us to support it. We do not believe that 'the masses,' as our modern reformers insultingly call the labouring class, are one whit more happy, more respectable, or better informed, for knowing how to read. * * * One of the best informed, most respectable, and most respected men of his station in life that we ever knew, could not, and cannot read a letter to this day.

"The idea that teaching people to read furnishes them with innocent amusement, is entirely false. It furnishes the majority of those who seek amusement from it with the most dangerous recreation in which they can indulge.

"In view of these and other facts, we, on our own private account, and not as a Catholic, but as a prudent man and as a good citizen, unhesitatingly declare that we regard the invention of printing as the reverse of a blessing; and our modern ideas of education as entirely erroneous. However, the thing is done, and cannot be undone. A new want has been created to a race which had, before this discovery, more unsatisfied wants than they well knew how to put up with, and an appetite has been created which must be satisfied. The question is, how to satisfy it with the least evil to the community at large and all concerned.

"The only thing that can now be done—since there is no possibility of putting the bad books out out of existence—is to endeavour to set before the people good wholesome food, in the hope that, if that be made accessible, not a small portion of them may cultivate a taste for it, and quit the savory poisons to which they have been addicted so long."

The worst of the "bad books" which the taste for reading has put into the hands of "the masses," and which produces the above tirade against the art of reading, is, in the view of the writer and his associates—the Bible!

THE SYNOD OF MEMPHIS.

The following is an extract from the Narrative of the State of Religion in the Synod of Memphis, presented at their last meeting:

"The attendance upon the means of grace is very generally increasing—Sabbath-schools are maintained with persevering zeal—a manifestly growing interest exists in regard to the religious instruction of our coloured population in families and Sabbath-schools. In this good work, which meets only favour among all classes of the community, Dr. Jones's Catechism has proved an invaluable aid. It is the general, perhaps universal practice of the ministers of this Synod, to preach specially and statedly to the black people, wherever a congregation can be obtained, in addition to the provision that is usually made for them in preaching to the whites by appropriating part of the churches to their use.

There appears to be in some of our churches an increased attention to the study of the Shorter Catechism among the children and youth.

The Boards of the General Assembly have our cordial support, and the books of the Board of Publication are distributed through our bounds by two efficient colporteurs.

The work alluded to in the first part of the above extract is—"A Catechism of Scripture Doctrine and Practice for Families and Sabbath-schools, designed also for the Oral Instruction of Coloured Persons. By Charles C. Jones, D. D. 18mo, pp. 154. 15 cents."

This admirable little volume is not so well known as it should be. Though designed primarily by its benevolent author, for the instruction of the coloured people, it is well fitted for a family question-book, and for Sabbath-schools.

THE SYNOD OF MISSOURI.

The Synod of Missouri, at their last meeting, recommended Mr. Henry Martin, who had been employed as a colporteur of the Board of Publication, to their churches, and requested church sessions and pastors to raise collections to defray the expenses of that important work.

The whole subject of the Synodical fund for a Depository of Presbyterian books, brought to the notice of the Synod by a communication from Mr. D. Keith, was referred to the Standing Committee; with instructions to examine into the state of that fund, and report to the Synod upon the subject at the next meeting.

"THE GRACE OF CHRIST."

The work of the Rev. Dr. Plumer with the above title has been for some time on the Catalogue of the Board's publications, and has met with general acceptance. The editorial notices of the work have been uniformly favourable, and in many instances highly commendatory. By the kindness of a friend, who lent a copy to a distinguished member of the bar, we are permitted to present the following extract from a letter of acknowledgment, which comes with the more force, as it was not written with the remotest view to publication.

"Excuse me for keeping it so long. It is not a work to be read for amusement, or to 'kill time,' but one which requires study, search, and research, with the aid of the closet. I have read it again, and again, and again. Several of its chapters are eminently practical, and calculated to do great good—full of 'great' and 'good' truths, which every one should wish to know, but which we do not everywhere meet with—expressed in the fewest and simplest possible words, after the Bible standard."

As a specimen of the work, we present the following extract:—

"If life be so short, let us defer no duty. Let there be a time for everything, and everything in its time. In Christian countries most men fail by wicked delays. Around that rock lie the bleached bones of myriads, who intended to live to God, but never did. Inch by inch their lives were stolen from them, and at the end all they could say was, 'The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved.' A disposition to put off preparation for death would be greatly strengthened by a knowledge that we had centuries before us. From Gen. v. 12, 22, some infer that Enoch was not truly pious, or at least not eminently so till he was sixty-five years old. However this may be, we all know the strong propensity in men to say, 'There is time enough yet.' Beware of this dangerous practice. The next hour may usher any one of us into eternity.

Our advancing years bring increased responsibility. He, who has lived thirty-five years has had five full years of Sabbaths. He who is seventy years old, has had ten solid years of holy time. Frequent interviews with distressed souls and dying people have painfully impressed the writer's mind that there are two sins which have a fearful burden and sting in them. The first is the slighting of gospel grace and mercy. The other is the neglect or abuse of holy time. Most dying sinners seem to desire longer time only that they may spend it as they should have done their holy Sabbaths.

Let us not waste our time in idle regrets on the shortness of life, but let us 'work while it is day.' 'The night cometh when no man can work.' 'It is good to be zealously affected always in a good thing.' Let us do even a little at a time. Despise not the day of small things. 'It is not great talents God blesses, so much as great likeness to Jesus.' Holiness is a greater means of usefulness than extraordinary natural gifts or vast learning. 'A heated iron, though blunt, will pierce its way even where a much sharper instrument, if it be cold, cannot penetrate.' One of the best models of zeal among fallible men is found in Nehemiah. A perfect pattern was Jesus Christ. The zeal of God's house consumed him.

Live and labour to be not only real but eminent Christians. Let us not sleep as do others. Heaven or hell will soon receive all that now live. Let your standard be the word of God and the example of Christ. Forget past attainments, and reach after greater things. Live as seeing Him, who is invisible. Never count that you have attained till you have got your crown. 'He, who is contented with just enough grace to escape hell and get to heaven, and desires no more, may be sure he has none at all, and is far from the kingdom of God.' Be not conformed to this world, but be transformed by the renewing of your mind. Fight the good fight of faith.

One reason, why some have so great a dread of the close of life, is that it is so rarely a theme of meditation. Men who will not think, cannot understand. Mere thoughts of dying will make no one holy, but they have often led men to seek salvation. I have read of a man, whose conversion was traced to those words so often repeated in Genesis v. 'AND HE DIED.' Live as you may, it will soon be said of you, 'and he died.' Are you ready for death?"

PSALMS AND HYMNS.

To meet a want often expressed, the Board have published an edition of the Psalm-Book in 18mo, a size between the 12mo and 24mo. It forms a beautiful volume, in a clear, distinct type, and of a convenient size. The two indexes of first lines are condensed into one, and other improvements made. All extraneous matter is excluded from this edition.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

For the accommodation of ministers and others who wish to avail themselves of this invaluable help to the study of the Scriptures, the Board have made arrangements with the publishers of Cruden's Concordance, by which they will be enabled to furnish a copy on fine paper, in full sheep or half calf binding, at $3.50, with the usual discount to ministers, and those buying a quantity of our books.

It is the unabridged work—a large royal octavo of 856 pp.

NEW TRACTS.

The Board have added the following tracts to their Catalogue:

No. 156. Respect for the Aged. By the Rev. Reuben Smith. Pp. 8.

This tract enforces with much earnestness and affection a duty alarmingly neglected in these days of so-called progress.

157. Too Late, or The Danger of Delay; illustrated in two striking incidents. Pp. 16.

The incidents are entitled "The Bank is Closed," and "The Disappointed Student." They strongly exhibit the danger of putting off the concerns of the soul.

158. Conversion and Character of Colonel William Yeadon, Ruling Elder in the Second Presbyterian Church, Charleston, South Carolina. By the Rev. Thomas Smyth, D. D. Pp. 28.

A remarkable instance of Divine sovereignty and grace, scarcely less striking and interesting than the case of Colonel Gardiner.

159. The Bible the Basis of Moral Character, a tract for young men. By the Rev. David Elliott, D. D. Pp. 16.

The author argues with much eloquence and force that the Bible contains all the elements adapted to the formation of a character of the highest purity and excellence. It is truly a tract for the times.

160. The College Student, or How to Promote a Revival of Religion. Pp. 20.

This tract contains an interesting account of a revival of religion which occurred in a College in the South, in consequence of the prayerful, earnest, and well directed efforts of two of the students. It should be read by every student in College who professes to be a follower of Christ.

161. Shall I go to the Lord's Supper? or the Duty and Privilege of making a Public Profession of Religion. By the Rev. Jonathan Greenleaf. Pp. 12.

The object of the author of this excellent tract is to remove the scruples of those humble believers, who are deterred from the enjoyment of this precious privilege, by a fear that they have not the requisite qualifications. It will be a word in season to many a burdened soul.

CATECHISMS.

It will be gratifying to the friends of the Board, and the lovers of the doctrines of our Church, to learn that the Board have already printed no less than 434,000 copies of the Shorter Catechism, that admirable "system of divinity in a nut-shell," besides many thousands in connection with the Psalms and Hymns, the Hymns for Youth, and the Confession of Faith. It is reasonable to hope that so much substantial truth, so widely disseminated, will, with the divine blessing, bear much fruit in the hearts and lives of the rising generation.

The Board have also published 224,000 copies of the "Young Child's Catechism, preparatory to the Shorter Catechism," which exhibits the elements of Scripture truth in the simplest form in which it can be presented to the infant mind. This Catechism has been translated into the Hindustani language in India, and into the language of one of our Indian tribes, by missionaries of the Foreign Board.

HONORARY MEMBERSHIP.

A donation of Thirty Dollars at any one time constitutes the donor, or any person whom he may designate, an Honorary Member of the Board of Publication. Honorary Members receive an elegantly engraved certificate of membership, and are entitled to draw one dollar's worth of children's books or tracts annually, provided they are called for during the year in which they become due.

FORM OF BEQUESTS TO THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION.

To the Trustees of the Presbyterian Board of Publication, and to their successors and assigns, I give and bequeath the sum of ———, or I devise a certain messuage, and tract of land, &c., to be held by the said Trustees, and their successors for ever, to and for the uses, and under the direction of the said Board of Publication, according to the provisions of their charter.

DEATH.

On the 21st of November, at Demopolis, Alabama, the Rev. Theodore Sayre, in the 48th year of his age.

THE CASE OF MISS CUNNINGHAME.

This young lady was imprisoned at Lucca, in the kingdom of Tuscany, for distributing the New Testament and tracts among the peasantry. At first the Duke absolutely refused to release her, even on assurance being given by her friends that she would leave his kingdom. Providentially that refusal has resulted in his confusion, and been made to promote the interests of truth and religious liberty. She has been released from her imprisonment, not as the result of a trial, but under the appearance of an act of grace. How much the fear of British power may have done, and how much the idea that a breach of the law could not be proved, may have effected, we know not. Miss Cunninghame, however, was unwilling to receive a pardon. She felt that she was an innocent and an injured woman, and desired to stand justified. One of her friends thus writes:

"Miss Cunninghame is in spirit as in blood, a worthy descendant of the great Scottish Reformer. I copy her own words on her liberation: 'I have not accepted the Grand Duke's grazia. On the contrary, I said at once, that what he owed me n justice I did not wish to receive in grace, and that until I consulted my advocate, I would not go out of the prison. However, in the course of a few hours, I got another message to say that they had orders to send me out, and that they begged me as a favour that I would go, or otherwise they would be obliged to turn me out. Then, said I, give me a paper stamped and signed, to say that I am turned out, and have not gone voluntarily, which accordingly they did. I am told that one half hour later I should have had a decree from the Second Court in my favour, which would have declared that I had done nothing worthy of bonds, and, therefore, that the case could go no further. It is currently reported that the cause of this pardon is, that despatches came from Lord Clarendon to say, that if I was not set at liberty at once, the British arms would be taken down from the Embassy. It is considered here the greatest triumph, since the Grand Duke has freed me, because England has demanded it, and it is universally known also that I am declared innocent legally.'"

Another correspondent writes:—"The anxiety of the authorities to get rid of Miss Cunninghame, by one means or other, was really amusing. They concealed but very ineffectually, the trouble and shame this inconsiderate capture had brought upon them; and, too late for himself, the Grand Duke discovered that the Ministers who had strenuously opposed his line of conduct had seen better than himself the humiliation it would, sooner or later, entail upon him."

Meanwhile, the result of Miss Cunninghame's imprisonment appears to be really blessed already. People are more anxious than ever to get these mysterious "tracts" which brought her into gaol, and to read that wonderful Bible, which they are told, on the best authority, (that of the priests,) contains so many things against their Church. At first, too, the terms of Miss Cunninghame's release were her immediate withdrawal from Tuscany. Yet she is still here; and, if it were needful, others might come too, and bring tracts for the benighted Papists, who are truly thankful for them, and read them with eagerness. In fact, we have arrived at such an unexpected state of circumstances, as to call upon us more urgently than ever for increased earnestness and more fervent prayer.

On each of the four Sabbaths of Miss Cunninghame's imprisonment, a sermon was preached to all the prisoners, the doors of the cells being being left open that they might hear. The Virgin Mary was, of course, the theme, and the name of Christ was scarcely mentioned. Long fabulous anecdotes were recited of the extraordinary merits of the "Rosalia," a festival now in vogue; and the poor, wretched prisoners were informed, that if they recited the prayers of the Rosalia, and refrained from looking into the poisonous tracts which were being circulated, evil, and even the devil himself, would be powerless against them.

HOME AND FOREIGN RECORD

OF THE

Presbyterian Church in the United States of America.

VOLUME V. No. 2. | PHILADELPHIA, FEBRUARY, 1854. | PRICE PER YEAR, Fifty Cents.

OUR NEW TERMS.—ENCOURAGEMENT.

We are exceedingly gratified to state that our new terms work well. Our subscription list has increased ten per cent.; and every day is adding to the calls for the Record. A clergyman who takes the right view of the importance of training his people to the exercise of the "grace of giving," and whose report in the "Appendix to the Minutes of the Assembly" shows no blanks in the columns for contributions, writes as follows:

"On last Sabbath, after sermon, I stated to the people the reduced terms of the Record, and urged its importance as a family paper, and as the most convenient way, requested those who wished it, to remain after the benediction, and give their names. The consequence was, that they remained almost en masse, and thus the Record is now taken in four-fifths of the families of my congregation. If my ministerial brethren, generally, would take this plan, your list would be largely increased, and missionary intelligence greatly diffused."

We can but commend our brother's practical good sense as well as rightly directed zeal. He nearly trebled his list. Who will go and do likewise?

The demands for our January number have more than exhausted the edition. None need fear, however, for the future. We shall be prepared to fill all orders, and if the continued increase justifies the expense, will issue a second edition of the January number.

We take occasion to say, that from some quarters we have heard complaints that the Record is not an interesting paper. Now it must be remembered that as to the matter, we are very much restricted by the object of the paper. If that is uninteresting, it must be either that our readers do not feel an interest in the benevolent operations of our Church, or that we fail to communicate the information in a suitable mode. For the former defect the remedy is in their hands, hearts, we should perhaps say, and not in ours. For the latter we beg the favour of practical suggestions.

The paper ought to be in every one of the seventy-five or one hundred thousand families of our Church.

From the Presbyterian of the West.

"OUR PASTOR."

"The labourer is worthy of his reward."—1 TIM. v. 18.

"Our Pastor"—he who watches for our souls as one that must give account—he who studies, reads, thinks, writes, in order to meet the weekly draught upon him—he who taxes his whole mental, spiritual, physical being to please our fastidious tastes, that haply he may "win" some—he who duly as the Sabbath's light returns, is at his post, to instruct, exhort, reprove, comfort, strengthen, console us—he who cheers us in sickness by his tender ministrations—he who kneels by our death-beds, and commends our parting spirits unto God—he who dispenses to us at the sacramental board the pledge of pardon and acceptance—he who is ever present at our bridals, and—

> * * "doth impose
> The irrevocable vow, and meek prayer,
> Present it to be registered in heaven:"

he who stands beside our dead to utter the words of farewell consolation—he who soothes our doubts, dissipates our fears, counsels us in every emergency—he who prays for us in secret, rejoices over our repentance, or mourns over our obstinate rejection of his message—he who, when he has done all, bears with our ingratitude, our caviling, our neglect, and loves us in spite of it—"our faithful, devoted pastor"—O! is he not, in the deepest sense of the word, a "labourer?" Did not Christ, with the strictest propriety, call his ambassadors "labourers?"

"The labourer is worthy" of what? "His reward." What is it? What is the pastor's highest "reward?" That, and that alone, which at first induced him to enter the ministry.

By a call that goes deeper than the ear, God speaks the word to some gifted youth. He temporizes perchance, hesitates, doubts, struggles, decides and re-decides. "The ministry," (in the language of the address recently put forth by the Synod of Philadelphia,) holds out to him a career of severe toil, with a meagre sustenance—a family exposed to painful annoyances and privations—himself compelled to resort for collateral aid to some secular pursuit; and even with this help, every sinew put to its utmost tension in order to keep up appearances, and make the two ends of the year meet. He counts the cost—he is perfectly aware that "in any department of life, except the ministry, he may count with confidence upon acquiring a competent fortune"—he sees it all; but souls are immortal, souls are precious. "Necessity is laid" upon him—he must "preach the gospel." The language of the heart is, "Here am I, send me." God accepts the sacrifice. God sends him. He stands among us as "our pastor."

Now will any one assert that all the reward such a man seeks is a salary? Perish the thought. His only adequate reward is souls—reclaimed souls—souls, that through his instrumentality, and because of his self-immolation, are destined to exult in inconceivable bliss throughout all eternity.

Are you giving your pastor his "reward?" Did he find you a thoughtless sinner? And have his words impressed, soothed, sacrificed, saved you? Have they led you in secret to the foot of the cross? And yet you are withholding that knowledge from him? Then are you defrauding the "labourer" of his "reward"—his deepest, sweetest, holiest "reward."

Or, if he found you walking in wisdom's ways, yet have his tender counsellings often refreshed your spirit? Have you gone often to the sanctuary weary, and worn with earth's cares, and returned home again, rejoicing because of some sweet message from his lips? Has he ever heard from you, in return, a single word of kind encouragement—an appreciating comment upon his ministrations? If not, you are defrauding him of his "reward." "Christian pastors" "have like passions with other men," and can do more work, and do it better, where they experience sympathy and affection, than where they meet comparative coldness, and are left to struggle with want. In point of fact, it may be doubted whether there is any class of persons who are so much alive to offices of kindness as pastors. The most trivial tokens of affection from their people have often sent a thrill of joy through the entire tenantry of a parsonage, and moistened every eye with tears of gratitude. And next to the supports and consolations drawn from above, they find encouragement and strength from the assured confidence and attachment of their congregation." So, very beautifully, says the aforesaid "address."

I have not spoken of the "labourer's" salary as his "reward," because, in truth, I consider it as his right, not his "reward." I put it not upon the footing of a "reward," because, by the law of God, an adequate support is the labourer's just right:—"Say I these things as a man?" "Saith not the law the same also?" "Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel, should live of the gospel.'" The Church is greatly culpable on this point. There is an apathy that ought to be done away with. Would it not be well if every congregation in our wide-spread Republic, were to take home, and prayerfully consider the question, "Is our pastor receiving a sufficient salary?"

Do we need a constraining motive? Let us find it in the fact, that Christ, himself, identifies his "labourer's" interests with his own. He that despiseth you, despiseth me." "He that receiveth you, receiveth me." "God's care of his ministers is one of the prominent and delightful themes of the Bible. There is no greater source of encouragement and hope to Christian pastors, than the tender and sleepless care which they know the good Shepherd exercises over them. Can it be believed that He regards with indifference the present state of things in the Church? that He approves of the injustice meted out to His ministers? that He views with complacency the anxiety and suffering they endure under the misguided and oppressive policy we are considering?"

"Believing as we do that there is a great sin lying at the door of the Church, for which the frown of Providence is upon her, we suggest it for your consideration."

> "'Tis not a cause of small import,
> The pastor's care demands;
> But what might fill an angel's heart,
> And filled a Saviour's hands.
> They watch for souls, for which the Lord
> Did heavenly bliss forego;
> For souls, which must for ever live
> In raptures, or in wo." M.

SPECIAL REPORT.

For fear that some of the Special Reports forwarded by mail may not reach their destinations, we publish a copy in this number of the Record, and would respectfully request the brethren who may not receive their Reports by mail, that they would be so kind as to make out their returns and forward them to us in time.

We would once more earnestly request our missionaries to make their Special Report and to forward it to us in due season. Upon reflection, they cannot but perceive the great importance of this matter, and will, we trust, realize it to be a duty which they owe to themselves, the Board of Missions, and the General Assembly of the Church. We would respectfully suggest to our brethren, that the neglect of so many in time past to make their Report, has produced an unfavourable impression upon the friends of missions, and seriously impaired the moral effect of the appeals in behalf of the cause, which have been based upon our statistical tables. We would be glad, therefore, for the sake of the missionaries themselves, as well as the interests of the missionary cause, if all who have been in commission during the year would make their report.

Office of the Board of Missions,
No. 265 Chestnut Street.

Philadelphia, February, 1854.

Rev. and Dear Brother—The period is again approaching when we shall be called upon to render to the General Assembly a report of the operations of the Board of Missions throughout the year, and as the results of the labours of our brethren in the missionary field must, necessarily, occupy a prominent place in that report, we forward to you the annexed form of a Special Report, which contains the various items on which the General Assembly desires information. Will you be so good, therefore, as not only to give us some information on each item introduced, but also make that information as full and as accurate as may be in your power. We would ask it as a special favour, that you pay particular regard to statistical information, and should you be in possession of any interesting facts connected with your missionary work, that you would insert them under the head of "General Remarks." Your report will, of course, include the amount of labour performed under the appointment of the Board, from the 1st of March, 1853, or, if appointed since that time, from the date of your commission.

As it will require some time to reduce into one, the numerous reports furnished by our missionaries, we earnestly request you, after filling up the blanks and completing your annexed Special Report up to the first of March, 1854, or to the end of your commission if it should close sooner, to return it immediately after date, under an envelope to the Secretary of the Board at Philadelphia. Your punctuality in this matter will greatly oblige us.

Grace, Mercy, and Peace be multiplied unto you in our LORD. Sincerely and affectionately yours,

G. W. Musgrave, Cor. Sec.

☞ You will please not introduce into your Special Report any other business than that which properly belongs to it. Otherwise in the press of engagements in the office, it may be overlooked. And should your quarter's salary be due at the time that you are forwarding your Special Report, do not expect payment on that report; but make a separate report for the quarter, and you will not be omitted in the regular payments of the Office.

GENERAL REMARKS.

MEETING OF THE BOARD.

The stated monthly meeting of the Board was held in the Mission Rooms, on Monday the 9th of January, 1854. The President, the Rev. J. J. Janeway, D. D., in the Chair—A. W. Mitchell, M. D., Secretary. The meeting was well attended; and all present appeared to take a lively interest in the various matters which were brought before the Board. The subject of Church Extension was particularly discussed, and a general and strong desire expressed that the churches would contribute more generally and liberally towards that important object. The subjoined statement was presented by the Corresponding Secretary, and referred to him for publication.

Mission Rooms, Philadelphia, January 9th, 1854.

The following statement will show the number of Missionaries commissioned and re-commissioned, and also the amount of receipts into the Treasury, from April 1st, 1853, to December 31st, 1853, as compared with the appointments and receipts during the same period last year.

I. The number of Missionaries commissioned and re-commissioned.

At Philadelphia, from April 1st, 1853, to Dec. 31st, 1853,	217
At Philadelphia, from April 1st, 1852, to Dec. 31st, 1852,	202
Being a gain of	15
At Louisville, from April 1st, 1853, to Dec. 31st, 1853,	154
At Louisville, from April 1st, 1852, to Dec. 31st, 1852,	115
Being a gain of	39

From this statement it appears, that during the first nine months of our fiscal year, as compared with the corresponding period last year, the number of missionaries commissioned and re-commissioned has been increased fifty-four, (54.)

II. Receipts.

At Philadelphia, received from April 1st, 1853, to Dec. 31st, 1853,	$28,972 78
At Louisville, received from April 1st, 1853, to Dec. 31st, 1853,	9,879 21
At Pittsburgh, received from April 1st, 1853, to Dec. 31st, 1853,	5,109 42
	$43,961 41
At Philadelphia, received from April 1st, 1852, to Dec. 31st, 1852,	$33,672 29
At Louisville, received from April 1st, 1852, to Dec. 31st, 1852,	7,983 24
At Pittsburgh, received from April 1st, 1852, to Dec. 31st, 1852,	4,014 74
	$45,670 27

It thus appears, that while the number of our missionaries has been increased fifty-four, our receipts have fallen off during the same period one thousand seven hundred and eight dollars and eighty-six cents! ($1,708.86.)

Church Extension.

Receipts from April 1st, 1852, to Dec. 31st, 1852,	$4,783 19
Receipts from April 1st, 1853, to Dec. 31st, 1853,	4,457 00
Deficit,	$326 19

From this it is apparent that something should be done to render our Church Extension scheme more efficient. From some cause or other, the churches generally have never contributed towards this object, notwithstanding the repeated and urgent appeals that have been made to them through the press, and by the officers and agents of the Board; so that the amount furnished has been utterly inadequate to meet the numerous and pressing calls that have been made to us for aid.

We are more and more convinced of the great importance of aiding our missionary churches in erecting suitable houses of worship. For the want of such edifices, many congregations remain stationary; and some actually become extinct! Many of our missionary churches, with suitable places of worship, would soon become self-sustaining; while, without them, they must long continue to derive their chief support from the Board, or be suffered to become extinct.

Would it not be well for the next General Assembly to consider this subject more particularly, and devise some plan by which this important scheme of our Church may be rendered more efficient? Could not some measures be adopted to induce the churches to contribute to this object more generally and liberally? Cannot something be done to render the action of the present Church Extension Committee more effective? Or would it be better to take this business from the Board of Missions, and appoint a separate Standing Committee to take exclusive charge of it, and to place it upon the same footing with the other great schemes of the Church?

Would it not be well for the General Assembly to recommend to the churches to endeavour, with God's blessing, to raise, during the year, the sum of, say ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS toward this great object, and to appoint some specific day for a collection to be made by all our congregations, in order to raise this amount? Other denominations have raised, or are now raising a sum equal to this for the same purpose; and why cannot the Presbyterian Church, with its superior numbers and wealth, do at least as much?

Would it not be well for the Presbyteries to discuss this subject at their next sessions, and to prepare their commissioners to the next General Assembly to take such action upon it as may correspond with their views? Might not our religious press also discuss this matter, and so prepare the mind of the Church for the adoption of the wisest and most efficient plan of Church Extension?

Something is evidently required to be done. We must either give increased efficiency to our present plan, or modify or change it, or the important and needful work of Church Extension can never be adequately accomplished.

In the meantime, in view of the immediate and pressing wants of many of our missionary churches, we would once more most earnestly solicit the contributions of the benevolent to enable us in some measure to relieve them.

III. WANTS.

Since the last monthly meeting of the Board, we have received additional and urgent calls for missionaries and missionary aid. Some of the fields referred to are of great importance, in which, we have reason to believe, large and flourishing churches might soon be gathered, if suitable men could be obtained to occupy them. We are at present greatly in need of men; and would therefore again ask the churches to pray that the Lord of the harvest would raise up and send forth many more labourers into his harvest. If any of our ministerial brethren are unemployed, and desire to know where they can usefully labour, if they will apply to us, we can direct them to fields which promise great usefulness.

IV. THE STATE OF RELIGION.

We continue to receive encouraging reports from our missionaries. Nearly all of them report a good attendance upon the means of grace on the part of their people, and some of them have enjoyed the special visitations of the Holy Spirit. There have been considerable additions made to the churches upon profession of their faith, and many are still inquiring what they must do to be saved. We have indeed great cause for thankfulness that God has vouchsafed to his servants so good a measure of success, and have great reason to be encouraged in the further prosecution of the missionary work. O that we did more fully comprehend the immensity of the work which is yet to be accomplished, and realize more perfectly the extent of our personal obligations and duties.

A PLEA FOR THE WEST.

The cause of Domestic Missions is one of deep and thrilling interest to every lover of the Church, and of the free institutions of our country. To maintain our civil and religious liberties, we must be a people deeply imbued with the principles of sacred writ. I am astonished at the apathy evinced on this subject by many Christians, and, alas, by ministers too, from whom we have a right to expect better things. Do Christians and Christian ministers expect to maintain their present religious positions, if they suffer the great West to become anti-christian? It is certainly a vain delusion, of which they will be disabused, when probably it will be too late to remedy the evil. The West will soon control the affairs of this great republic, and give it its character. After 1860, the West will have a decided majority in Congress, and will therefore control the national legislation, make war, or annex what countries she pleases, &c. In this point of view it is of vast importance to the Atlantic States, that the West be right. But, further, facilities of intercourse give us of the West a direct and immediate influence upon the East. Our people are among you by hundreds, and will soon be by thousands, exerting an influence for good or evil that you cannot at home by any means prevent. As we are at home, so will we be when among you. If, then, we are irreligious and infidel, you will have all that irreligious and infidel influence brought directly to bear upon you and your families in the East.

The marts of commerce are with you; we are the consumers of your products, and the suppliers of the breadstuffs, provisions, and raw materials. Now it is your interest that we consume as great a quantity of your products as we can pay for. It is an acknowledged fact, seen and known of all men, that Christianity produces this effect universally. It makes men industrious, and raises them in society, increasing their productions and their wants. Where Christian influence is not felt, people have but few wants; they are satisfied to live in a semi-barbarous state, making off their farms just enough to support them—satisfied to close life as they commenced it—and thus it is from generation to generation. They buy but little, and have so little to sell, that they add nothing to the commerce of the country or the world. Here, then, in this view of the subject, you are directly interested in the religious condition of the West. Your wealth in a measure depends upon it.

But there is still another aspect of this same branch of this subject, in which your direct interest is evinced. It is the prompt and honest payment of the debts created by the West to your merchants and monied men. The credit system is the system of trade. The West creates large liabilities in the East. Now, let a stringency occur in the monetary affairs of the country, and if there is not enough of religious principle in any State to make them honest, they will have stay laws, replevin laws, &c., and even repudiation, so that debts cannot be collected. Now I ask, What better insurance can you of the East have upon your assets than a sound religious influence? The business man that contributes to the evangelizing the West, but pays a very small insurance on his business. I insist upon it, he gives nothing for which he does not receive, in the different modes already pointed out, a hundred-fold. But let him, on the other hand, lend his influence to the production of irreligion and immorality, and he is wofully the loser by it.

The religious aspect of the West is one of great interest to the Christian. With deep and prayerful interest he asks, What is to be the religious character of this mighty people—a population soon to be numbered by millions? Will the voice of joy and salvation be heard in every tabernacle over this vast land? or will it be covered with the blackness of infidelity or Papacy? One or the other of these influences will be predominant.

In the remarks I have to make on this subject, I will confine myself to the State of Missouri, and mainly to my own Presbytery. The Presbytery of Palmyra extends over ten counties—about one hundred miles from north to south, and about fifty miles from east to west—extending along the Mississippi river from the county of St. Charles to the Iowa line, one of the most fertile, salubrious, and beautiful portions of this great State, and indeed unsurpassed, in my opinion, by that of any other State in this Union. The river counties are pretty well settled, and in an advanced state of improvement. The interior counties are being populated in about the ratio the West generally populates. Through this region runs the Hannibal and St. Joseph railroad, which is now being built, pointing to the Pacific.

In this region we have fifteen churches and ten ministers, and there are in every direction through this district Presbyterian families, or those raised Presbyterians, where other churches could soon be organized, had we the ministers to supply them, even occasionally.

You will be able, from what I have said, to form a tolerably correct view of the religious state of this people, and what work must be done by us to bring them under the genial influence of the pure doctrines and polity of the kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ. Presbyterianism is unpopular. All more or less oppose it, and caricature it—making it an antiquated system, not adapted to the present time, or congenial with our free institutions. Strange as this may appear, and especially so when the history of our country shows that it gave us our institutions, and that they are but its development; still multitudes believe it. This is the result of ignorance and misrepresentation. And yet in all this, and wherever its doctrines and polity are preached, it breaks down all this prejudice, and obtains a hold in the hearts of men. In a ministry of twenty-six years, I have not known it to fail wherever properly tried. There is a power in truth that makes a deep impression, in despite of all opposing obstacles. We have now got a fulcrum from which to work the mighty lever of gospel truth. Here and there we have little churches exerting a salutary influence, and are starting points to extend the truth as it is in Jesus, all around. With the blessing of the great King and Head of the Church, all we need is the right kind of ministers, and means to sustain them for a few years. By the right kind of men, I mean men who love the work of the Divine Redeemer, and are willing to endure hardness as good soldiers of the cross; who are not afraid of labour and privations, and who preach without reading. The reading of sermons is very unpopular with this people; they will scarcely hear a man preach in that way. I am well satisfied that much is lost by our Church, East as well as West, by the prevailing habit of reading sermons. Our ministers ought and can preach without reading. This field ought to be treated something after the manner foreign fields are treated.

Ministers ought to be sent into the destitute fields of the great West with a guarantee of a competent salary, until the people appreciate the blessings of a preached gospel enough to pay for it. Could this be done by your Board, the increase of our Church would be very rapid. The opposition of which I have spoken, would be broken down, and the people have time to appreciate the great advantages, temporal, as well as spiritual of our Zion. The work of Domestic Missions in the West is emphatically a great work. It has hardly been entered on by our Church. Our Church must do the work the King and Head of the Church is calling her to. The Church must furnish more funds. You ought to have at your disposal for this work this current year at least $200,000, and then with a steady increase. Could your Board but go forward as she might, if the churches would do their duty, (and who doubts that that sum can easily be raised for Domestic Missions by the Old-school Presbyterian Church?) why then the cause would advance steadily and rapidly—the receiving churches would soon be large contributing churches; and thus the tide would swell, until it would cover every part of this vast Republic, and then, in the form of Foreign Missions, cover the earth.

Twenty-six years ago, I left the venerated walls of my theological Alma Mater as a domestic missionary for the then wilds of Missouri. During all that time God, in his goodness, has permitted me to labour in this State in his glorious service. I have seen hard service; I have endured privations and encountered no little opposition: but at the same time I have had the pleasure of seeing Zion steadily arising—the wilderness, in a religious, as well as a natural sense, become the fruitful field: I have seen a church from an organization of seven, all told, in the country, become a strong and flourishing church, sustaining its minister. This is but one of many, many others that I could name.

So that, in view of my past life, I thank God that he gave me grace to become a missionary to Missouri, for I am very certain I have been enabled to do more for his glory, by a hundred-fold, than I could have done had I remained in my native State.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

SPECIAL PRAYER.

LAST THURSDAY OF FEBRUARY.

A day of special prayer has been appointed by the General Assembly, in reference to the increase of candidates for the ministry. The following is the resolution, recommending the observance of the day.

Resolved, That the lamentable dearth of candidates in the Church, while the call both from the Home and Foreign fields is becoming more frequent and pressing, is the subject of serious alarm; involving great responsibilities on all concerned, and demanding in the most urgent manner the immediate and particular attention of ministers, elders, parents, and pious young men; and the Assembly express the opinion that constant and earnest prayer should be made to the "Lord of the harvest," both in public and private, until a gracious answer is given in his holy providence; and that the last Thursday of February next, be recommended as a day of special prayer and public instruction on this subject in all our churches.

On so solemn an occasion, and on so important a subject, a few thoughts may be acceptable to our readers. May God give them efficacy in arousing attention, and in awakening a sense of personal accountability!

I. The necessity of a day of special prayer is obvious from the circumstances of our low estate.

The statistics of our candidates for the ministry summon the Church to the mercy-seat, with an urgency of appeal, which no intelligent and zealous Christian will resist. The number of theological students in our different seminaries for the last ten years, has been as follows:

1844,	244.	1849,	250.
1845,	257.	1850,	241.
1846,	255.	1851,	254.
1847,	258.	1852,	267.
1848,	246.	1853,	240.

The average for these ten years is 251.

The number for the present year is substantially thus:

Princeton, New Jersey,	108
Alleghany, Pennsylvania,	53
Union, Virginia,	25
Columbia, South Carolina,	38
New Albany, Indiana,	4
Danville, Kentucky,	23
Total for 1854,	251

It will be seen that, although the number is a little better than last year, there is no decided and substantial increase; that there still continues to be a lamentable lack of service on the part of our pious youth; and that the number for 1854 is but up to the average of the last ten years. During this period of stationary statistics, there has been an increase of at least six millions to our home population, with greatly increased difficulties in evangelizing it; and the developments in the foreign field have been unparalleled. Awful as this calamity is, in relation to the unfulfilled work and duty of the present generation of Christians, its influence will pass on from year to year, entailing wo and evil on a still wider and more fearful scale. It is obvious that there are strong reasons to justify the Assembly in calling upon the churches to pray in a special manner to the Lord of the harvest.

II. The nature of special prayer partakes of the qualities of true prayer in the general. The very observance of a special day for a special object implies, however, prayer more earnest than is common. A great aim demands the whole heart—the warm, compassionate; enlarged struggles of a soul very earnest in the presence of the All-seeing. Lukewarm supplications are out of place in an emergency. Special prayer must be vehement prayer.—It should be also more prolonged than ordinary prayer. Why appoint a time and a season, unless to "seek the Lord and His strength" with supplications, frequent, prolonged, persevering? Although length of prayer is of itself no warrant of an answer, yet when joined with fervour, it shows an intenseness of purpose which the Lord loves to recognize in his saints.—Special prayer is, of course, more definite than ordinary prayer. It has a singleness and directness of desire which characterizes all its upward glances and utterances. One burden rests heavily upon the heart; and in the present case, how great the burden! The Church of Christ is suffering from the want of holy, consecrated youth, to fill the ranks of her ambassadors. "Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth; the faithful fail from among the children of men." Here is burden enough to seek relief from God. "The harvest truly is great, but the labourers are few." The one chief, prominent petition is, that "the Lord of the harvest would send forth labourers into his harvest." Special prayer should also awaken more penitence and contrition of spirit. The more earnest, persevering, and definite petitions are at the throne of grace, the more will they ordinarily excite grief in the humbled soul—grief for past insensibility, inadequate views of duty, neglect of performances, general want of fidelity, and special deficiency in prayer and service about the work in question.—More dependence belongs to special prayer. Faith is the essence of acceptable supplication. When a great public want summons the Church to the throne of the heavenly grace, confidence in God should be in strong exercise. Unbelief is a great sin, and never a greater one than when defiling the worship of the soul in the act of special prayer.

III. The object of the recommended observance is to secure the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon our youth. The want is the lack of candidates; the remedy is in the grace of God. The object of invoking the descent of the Spirit is to secure renewing and sanctifying grace for the rising generation; and in particular, that many may be called into the ministry. God alone can do the work to be done. There may be, and there must be, planting and watering; but the increase must come from a greater than Paul or Apollos. The number of youth in American colleges is, in round numbers, 25,000; in academies 250,000; and in schools 4,000,000. This immense aggregate of human mind in a formative state, needs the power of God to baptize it into eternal life. Without this holy omnipotence, it must become corrupt, and be a source of corruption; itself dying and smiting others dead. The hope of our youth is in converting grace. But beyond this, the Church seeks another baptism for many of them, even that which will inaugurate them into the office of the ministry of reconciliation. This high display of the divine prerogative is made in answer to prayer. The Lord of the harvest, who causes immortal mind to become ripe for heavenly gathering, will send forth reapers, when his saints obey the appointments of his word. It is in vain to employ incidental instrumentalities—well ordered though these be—unless the Spirit comes down upon our youth and claims them for God, the Church, and the ministry. The great object, therefore, in the approaching season of special prayer, is to invoke the presence of the Spirit in our institutions of learning and at our firesides, in order that our youth may be renewed in the image of God, and many of them designated to serve him in the sanctuary.

IV. The hopefulness of special prayer is an encouragement to the Church to engage in the duty. Has not our blessed Lord so worded the precept, as to imply that the right kind of prayer for labourers will insure his sending them into the harvest field? That glorious text, in Matt. ix. 38, like the Urim and Thummim, is the very oracle of God, giving a response of light to every consultation of faith, and distinctly intimating both duty and reward to every adoring believer. The Bible has never given plainer and more direct instruction on any subject than on this very one, the increase of the ministry. His own declaration assures us that prayer for labourers is according to his will; and our hope of an answer is through "the confidence that we have in him, that if we ask any thing according to his will, he heareth us." The gifts of the Spirit are communicated with a munificence of condescending love, unknown to the exercises of all human experience: for "if ye, being evil, know how to give good things unto your children, how much more shall your Heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him." Observe, the gift is the glorious one of the Spirit; the willingness with which it is given is "much more" than that of parental love, and it is given to them that "ask" him. Can any followers of Christ, looking at the Scriptures, doubt? "O ye of little faith, wherefore do ye doubt?"

But the providence of God accords with the word of his grace. Many a pious father and mother have had their petitions answered in the conversion of a beloved son, and in his call to the gospel ministry. Special prayer has abounding memorials of God's rich grace. Hannah, a pattern of mothers, has had in Divine Providence, many mothers to follow her example of consecration, and God has given, through them, many Samuels to his Church.

The instances of answer to the special prayers, offered in behalf of young men in colleges, &c., have been very numerous, and very marked and wonderful. Revivals of religion have followed the observances of this particular day in a manner that confounds unbelief. It has been estimated that nearly one-half of all the ministers in some of the New England States have been converted in college revivals. Outpourings of the Spirit have frequently commenced in the midst of the public religious services. The reader is referred to an article in the 4th volume of "Home, School, and the Church," just issued, and to preceding volumes, for a few details, which will repay perusal. The hopefulness of prayer for the increase of the ministry receives its sanction from the word and the ways of God. Scripture and Providence are its glorious witnesses.

V. The duties connected with special seasons of prayer, deserve a pious remembrance. We shall mention three. One is, the duty of continuing to pray after the particular season of special prayer is over. If the object sought is sufficient to justify the observance of a particular day for the common and united supplications of the churches throughout the length and breadth of the land, surely it ought to have a place in the daily heart-prayers of individual Christians. There are times of emergency on this and all subjects; but the duty of praying to the Lord of the harvest has claims upon the regular and affectionate devotions of the closet. At any rate, it will not be questioned that every Christian in the land should continue to pray for the specific object before us, at least until the present emergency has ceased, and "until these calamities be overpast." It is to be feared that too many content themselves with feeble, or it may be strong, petitions to God on the particular day designated, and then abandon or intermit the remembrance of our Church's wants, and of our Saviour's precept. Brethren, will it be, can it be, denied that to continue in prayer is one of the implied duties growing out of the very observance of the specially appointed season? Let us "continue instant in prayer."

Another duty devolving upon the Church, in view of the present emergency, is the duty of labouring for the cause, which is the subject of our anxieties and prayers. The petition, "Give us this day our daily bread," implies the obligation to use all the means in our power to procure subsistence. To pray for an increase of ministers, and to do nothing that tends to promote it, is an inconsistency of Christian practice which religion cannot sanction. Among the things that may be done, are such as the following:—Instruction of the people from the pulpit on the great topics relating to the Christian ministry; attention to the young, on the part of ministers, with a view to the selection of promising youth for an education; the consecration and training of children for the glory of God and usefulness in the Church; the collection of funds for indigent candidates under the care of the Board of Education; public provision for the education of our youth in religious institutions, where their minds may become imbued daily with divine truth; in short, the use of all means tending to exalt the ministry, and awaken the conscience and energies of the Church in reference to its perpetuation, flows directly from "the assembling of ourselves together" in special prayer to the Lord of the harvest. The zealous labours which accompany prayer are the best proof of the sincerity of Christian devotion.

Watching for results is another of the duties of a prayerful spirit. "Continue in prayer, and watch in the same," is an injunction of divine wisdom. A carelessness about results shows an indifference to the object asked. "Watch and pray." "Praying and watching thereunto with all perseverance." There is deep meaning in patient waiting, in the workings of faith looking for results, in the anxieties of a soul that seeks an answer in the outpourings of grace, and in the developments of Providence.

Brethren in the ministry and in the eldership; fathers and mothers at the heads of households; pious youth ready to enter upon the active scenes of life; this subject has solemn responsibilities to us all. How great an interest did our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ take in it! He was himself a minister. He called, and taught, and prayed for, and sent out ministers. Among his last messages of comfort and love were the sweet words to his apostles recorded in the sixteenth and seventeenth chapters of John. His last command before leaving the world contemplated the preaching of the gospel "to every creature;" and, as if still more to magnify the ministerial office, he enumerates pastors and teachers among the ascension gifts bestowed upon the Church from the throne of his glory.

May the Spirit of all grace enable the Church to bear upon its heart the perpetuation of the ministry of reconciliation, and to labour to train it as to character, in all piety, wisdom, energy, and self-denial, and as to numbers, to send forth a band, in God's name, sufficient to conquer the world unto righteousness!

THE DAY OF SPECIAL PRAYER—may its results be held in everlasting remembrance! "Pray ye to the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest!"

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS.

FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS OFFERED.

The Board of Education are happy to be able to state that the ruling elder in our Church, who last year placed five thousand dollars at the disposal of the Board, to assist in establishing and sustaining religious schools, has renewed his munificent offer for the year 1854. The donation is to be applied to schools alone, not to academies or colleges. It is hoped that this offer of assistance to those who may need aid in establishing schools for the religious training of children, will stimulate many to undertake the work. There are undoubtedly many places where religious schools are much needed, and where they might be easily established. Whilst our Church desires to sustain the common school system, as among the public blessings of the land, she has reserved to herself the liberty of embarking in education whenever and wherever her duty to God calls upon her to do so. As a specimen of her interpretation of duty, it may be stated, that in one of the towns in Pennsylvania, there are three public schools, from all of which the Bible is excluded. The pastor and elders of the church in the town, finding remonstrance to be in vain, felt that their covenant obligations required them to provide for the religious education of the children under their care, and accordingly established a school on religious principles. Such an undertaking is surely justifiable and praiseworthy. That Christian school has now thirty children, who daily receive Biblical and catechetical instruction, along with other elementary knowledge. This is one of the schools which is sustained in part by the liberal donation committed to the Board for such purposes.

The appropriations of the Board of Education to any one school do not ordinarily exceed one hundred dollars a year; and in many cases a less sum is given, according to circumstances.

The following is an extract from a letter, received last week, relating to a parochial school in Indiana:

"The school owes its origin to Mr. H. K., a ruling elder. He saw with pain the children growing up without religious education. The school went into operation on the 14th of November last, with 12 scholars. It has been in operation four weeks, and now numbers 27, with a prospect of more. The school is opened with prayer, and all the children recite in Scripture once a day. Once a week the Catechism is recited by all those whose parents are Presbyterians, or who make no objection. At first we met with considerable opposition; but since the school has been in successful operation, and has become a fixed fact, the opposition has died away. A Universalist, who was bitterly opposed, now says that it will do more to elevate the community than any school that has ever been attempted here.

"There are already four in the school who, I hope, will become ministers.

"We have an excellent teacher. He comes from the 'Witherspoon Institute,' Butler, Pennsylvania. This proves the great importance of the Presbyterial Academies in furnishing well trained, pious young men for teachers."

The Board of Education have no doubt whatever that religious schools, academies, and colleges have a most important relation, in the providence of God, to the increase of the ministry, and to the cause of religion in general. They confidently expect that the truth of this declaration will be verified, through divine grace, in the history of the Church.

LAFAYETTE COLLEGE, PA.

It is with great pleasure that we announce the fact, that the endowment of one hundred thousand dollars, for Lafayette College at Easton, Pennsylvania, has been all subscribed. This result is a most important one. At the time the College was placed under the care of the Synod of Philadelphia, its situation was extremely discouraging, being without students and without funds. Through the indefatigable and persevering efforts of the President, the Rev. Dr. D. V. McLean, it has now secured an endowment of one hundred thousand dollars, and eighty students are in attendance. This large sum has been raised chiefly in Eastern Pennsylvania, Maryland, the District of Columbia, and Northern New Jersey, and for the most part in subscriptions of one hundred dollars. The worthy President has not only succeeded in securing an endowment for his college, however, but, through the numerous sermons and addresses he delivered, and his conversations from house to house, we have no doubt he has excited a spirit in favour of education, which is as valuable as the money subscribed. The success attending this effort has encouraged the Trustees to go still further. At their late meeting, we understand that they resolved to raise an additional fifty thousand dollars, so as to make the endowment ample for all possible purposes. Dr. McLean is about entering on this work, and with the same zeal and wisdom which he has heretofore shown, he has reason to hope for similar success.—Presbyterian.

THE ASHMUN INSTITUTE.

At a stated meeting of the Presbytery of Newcastle, held on the 5th of October, 1853, the following paper, after discussion, was adopted without a dissenting voice:

"Considering the many Christian congregations of coloured people in this country which are unable to secure educated ministers of their own colour; considering the communities of such people in many parts who need educated men amongst them to fill the places of teachers and other responsible situations; considering the wants of Liberia, and the importance to its present and future welfare, of having suitably qualified men to fill its offices and posts of authority, instruction and influence; considering the vast missionary work yet to be done in Africa, and to be mainly done by persons of African descent; considering how extremely difficult it is for coloured youth to obtain a liberal education in this land, arising from the want of schools for that purpose, and their exclusion from all the regular institutions of learning of a higher grade; considering the strong recommendation to that effect from our Board of Education, and its full endorsement by the General Assembly of our Church; and considering the favourable indications of Providence at this time apparently calling us to such a work:

This Presbytery, trusting in God, and, under Him, depending on the Christian liberality of the friends of the African race throughout our country, do determine as follows:

1. There shall be established within our bounds, and under our supervision, an Institution, to be called the Ashmun Institute, for the Scientific, Classical and Theological education of coloured youth of the male sex.

2. That J. M. Dickey, A. Hamilton, R. P. Dubois, ministers, and Samuel J. Dickey and John M. Kelton, ruling elders, be a Committee, to whom shall be intrusted the temporary charge of this undertaking. It shall be their duty to collect funds for the same, and to appoint a treasurer to hold such funds and pay them out on their order, the expense of collecting to be borne out of the money collected. It shall be their duty to select a suitable site for the buildings, and, whenever a sufficient sum shall have been collected, to commence the erection of plain and convenient edifices for the purpose intended. It shall also be their duty to take immediate steps to procure a suitable charter from the State of Pennsylvania, by which the property may be lawfully held and managed by nine Trustees, to be elected from time to time by this Presbytery, to which Board, when duly organized, the Committee aforesaid shall surrender all their powers, as well as the money and other property belonging to the Institution.

3. The Board of Trustees named in the charter shall consist of the following persons, viz: J. M. Dickey, Alfred Hamilton, Robert P. DuBois, James Latta, John B. Spotswood, James M. Crowell, ministers, and Samuel J. Dickey, John M. Kelton, Esq., and William Wilson, ruling elders. It shall be the duty of this Board, under general instructions from this Presbytery, to put up suitable buildings and improvements, as they may have the necessary means, in no case ever involving this Presbytery in pecuniary obligations. They shall appoint the teachers and professors, and name their salaries; they shall establish rules and regulations for the government of the Institution; they shall have authority to procure its endowment, not exceeding the sum of $100,000; and, when required by this Presbytery, they shall report to it the state of the Institution, the state of the funds, and all interests committed to their trust."

On the 14th of November following, this Committee having met, and elected their officers, did agree to purchase a certain property, containing about thirty acres, for the sum of $1250; they appointed a sub-committee to draw up a copy of the charter and procure its enactment by the Legislature of Pennsylvania; they appointed some of their own number to visit certain cities for the purpose of collecting funds, and otherwise promoting the interests of the Institute; instructed their chairman to open a correspondence with a minister of our Church well known and highly qualified for the work, with a view to procure his services in raising money for its erection and endowment; and made arrangements for issuing this Circular.

To these items of information we would add a few words by way of address to our brethren of the Presbyterian Church:

Some four years ago the Presbytery of New Castle was called together to lay hands upon the head of a young brother, and thus with prayer to God set him apart as a minister and missionary to Africa. The act was performed reluctantly by a part at least of the members; and during the service, the thought of a victim preparing for sacrifice, as the young and ardent Christian knelt in the midst of our circle, occupied the mind. The forms of many dear and personal friends, who had made but a short stay upon the shores of Africa as they passed on to heaven, presented themselves: Laird and Buchanan, prominent amid a multitude so highly gifted and so soon cut down, seemed to call upon us to hesitate, and to ask whether there was not some other agency by which Africa might be evangelized. And may we not calmly ask you, whether it does not seem as if God in his providence had put under our hand near four millions of the children of Africa, to whom its climate is not a pestilence, who ought to be prepared as far as may be necessary for this work? Is not our coloured population to be brought into the Church and kingdom of God? And if so, how are they to be employed in labour for the conversion of the world? If there be a place for them in which thus to labour, is it not Africa? And may we not be (though in the spirit of self-sacrifice) supplanting them in their birthright inheritance, the work of missions in their father land? But they must be prepared for the work; they must be prepared in this country; they must be prepared by white men, and they must be prepared mainly at the expense of white men. These points we need not argue. If white men are to be their teachers, they must live here, and here have the means of support and proper oversight while they are engaged in this preparation.

There is a second view of the subject, almost as important as the first, the providing of preachers and teachers for the coloured population in our own country, especially in the free States. Causes have operated for years past, and not likely to cease, to separate between the two races; leading to separate assemblies for the worship of God. Within the territory covered by our own Presbytery, viz: Chester county in Pennsylvania, Cecil county in Maryland, and New Castle county in Delaware, there are forty-two places of worship exclusively occupied by coloured persons, having their own preachers, and we know of no one among them properly qualified, as we view the gospel ministry, to teach them from the word of God. Amid such struggles as we witness for the erection of new Theological Seminaries, having already what some suppose ample accommodations for our candidates for the ministry, might we not profitably direct some part of our funds toward the endowment of the Ashmun Institute, as a mission school for Africa, and to prepare pastors for their own people in the free States at home? From the last report of the Board of Missions we learn that but one church of coloured people was aided from their funds during the past year, while great sympathy is expressed for the destitution of this class of persons.

The site selected for the school is a pleasant and eligible one, in Chester county, Pennsylvania, at a place called Hinsonville, where some families of coloured persons have for a number of years resided, being owners of small tracts of land. It lies in a central position to the three Presbyterian congregations of New London, Fagg's Manor, and Oxford. No prejudice can now exist against the location of the school in this place, and the surrounding influence will prevent such interference as would be fatal to all hopes of success. A Principal has been selected, and will no doubt be appointed by the Presbytery, eminently qualified to conduct the Institution, whose mind has been drawn toward the work of missions in Africa, but who will remain at home, we trust, and send out many from under his teaching to occupy his place there.

In conclusion, we would say that, with many good wishes and promises of co-operation from different parts of our Church, and the most hearty endorsement by our Board of Education, and the last General Assembly, and also with the blessing of our Divine Master, we feel that we may hope for success. And may we not confidently appeal to you, beloved pastors and members of our Church, and well-wishers to the African race, to extend to us your sympathy and prayers, and grant to us that pecuniary aid which you may spare, and without which all our desires and all our efforts must prove unavailing?

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,

No. 23 Centre Street, New York.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

Mission House, January 13, 1854.

Missions to the Indian Tribes.—Since our last, letters have been received from Rev. Alexander Reid, of the Choctaw Mission, dated the 13th December; from Rev. W. A. Watson, December 31st, and Miss Mary J. Wilson, November 25th, of the Chickasaw Mission; from Mrs. Mary A. Lilley, November 30th, of the Seminole Mission; from Rev. S. M. Irvin, December 10th, of the Iowa and Sac Mission; and from Rev. William Hamilton, 17th December, of the Otoe and Omaha Mission.

Mr. and Mrs. Lilley had both suffered much from sore eyes, a disease that had prevailed extensively in the country for some time past, but were better at the date of their letter.

Mr. Watson and his family had suffered so much for some months past from chills and fevers, that he was compelled to withdraw from his work for a time. His last letter was from South Carolina, where he had arrived, and where he hoped after a few months' relaxation, to have his health restored, and be able to resume his labours in the spring. Miss Wilson, of the same station, has suffered still more from the same disease, and fears are entertained that she may be compelled to withdraw from the missionary work altogether.

Mr. Reid speaks of the good health of the mission family at Spencer. The school, at the present time, embraces one hundred pupils, all of whom are prosecuting their studies with diligence, and conducting themselves in a way to give general satisfaction.

Western Africa: Liberia Mission.—Our letters from this mission are, from Mr. H. W. Erskine, of Kentucky; from Mr. B. V. R. James, Monrovia, 29th September; from Mr. Washington McDonough, Settrakru, 11th August; from Rev. James M. Priest, Sinou, 6th September; and from Rev. David A. Wilson, Monrovia, as late as the 8th November.

The members of the mission were in the enjoyment of their usual health, and were prosecuting their missionary work at their respective stations without interruption.

Mr. Wilson mentions the safe arrival at Monrovia, of Rev. Messrs. Williams and Clemens, with their wives, on their way to Corisco. He also communicates the pleasing intelligence that two of the young men of his Latin class had become the subjects of grace, and that several others seemed to be seriously inquiring what they must do to be saved. The Presbyterian church at Monrovia had also experienced a season of reviving. Six persons were added to the church at their last communion season.

India.—Our advices from India are dated at Lahor, October 18; Ambala, October 15; Saharunpur, October 17; Agra, November 7; Mynpurie, October 19; Futtehgurh, November 4; Allahabad, October 19. A church had been organized at Lahor, consisting of eight members, besides the missionaries. Four of the members were natives. Our readers will unite with the missionaries in the prayer that "the dews of the Spirit may water this vine, and make it bear much fruit." At Ambala, a fine school-house and chapel were nearly completed. It is a well-built house, costing about $2500, nearly one-half of which had been contributed by friends in India. The health of Mr. Woodside not permitting him to reside in the plains, he was about to occupy a station at Dehra, an important place in the lower range of the Himalayas, and not far distant from his former station at Saharunpur. Several of these letters mention, with great regret, the death of the Hon. James Thomason, Lieutenant-Governor of the north-western provinces. He was a man of fine abilities, a ruler greatly distinguished, a sincere follower of the Saviour, a warm friend of missions. His loss will be severely felt by all classes.

Siam.—We have letters before us, from Samuel R. House, M. D., of September 12th, and from the Rev. S. Mattoon as late as October 6th.

In the previous number of the Record, apprehensions were expressed that our brethren at Siam would be greatly disappointed, if not discouraged, when they heard of the failure of two brethren to join their mission, whom they had been encouraged to expect. Mr. Mattoon, in the letter just received, alludes very feelingly to this disappointment, but writes in good spirits, nevertheless; he and his associate being resolved, by the help of God, to labour on in patience and faith, with the confident expectation that God, in his own good time, will send them other labourers.

All the members of the mission were well, and prosecuting their labours as usual.

China: Canton Mission.—The only letters which have been received from any of the missions in China, since our last, are from Rev. A. P. Happer 24th October; and from Rev. John B. French, 25th of the same month.—Mr. Happer speaks of the return of Mrs. Happer from Macao, where she had been for the benefit of a change of air, in greatly improved health. They were making preparations for the establishment of a small school for girls, to be under the care and superintendence of Mrs. Happer. Mr. French speaks of the good health of the mission family generally, and speaks encouragingly of the work in which he is engaged. "Since the repairs of the chapel have been completed," he says, "the services have been well attended; I have had crowded houses, and feel greatly encouraged. God has granted me the desire of my heart, in thus opening up before me a wide door of access unto the people; and now my prayer is that he would continue unto me my health and strength, and give me grace to follow the leading of his providence, and improve diligently the opportunities of usefulness thus afforded me. And O! that the Spirit of truth may come and open the hearts of this heathen people to receive the messages of mercy, and to believe in Christ to the salvation of their souls." Who will not add, Amen!

CHINA: NINGPO MISSION.

NARRATIVE OF A VISIT TO THE DISTRICT OF FUNGHWA, BY THE REV. W. A. P. MARTIN.

This account of a missionary tour to a district of country not far from Ningpo, and one that has seldom been visited by Christian missionaries, will be read with interest, especially as it shows the readiness of the Chinese to listen to the preaching of the gospel.

Funghwa—its situation, and the character of its inhabitants.

Within the large district of which Ningpo is the centre, there are five other walled cities, containing from ten to forty thousand inhabitants, all of which, together with numberless towns and villages, and a crowded rural population, are perfectly accessible to itinerary missionary labour, and probably might easily be occupied as permanent stations. In three of these, occasional efforts have been made, and in one of them we have recently opened a chapel and dispensary. The other two, owing to their remoteness and difficulty of access, have been rarely visited. One of them, Fung-hwa, with the country to which it gives name, is noted for the fierce, independent spirit of its inhabitants. Six or seven years ago, feeling themselves oppressed with unjust taxes, they resorted to the only mode of redress known in this despotic country, and advanced in hostile manner towards the gates of Ningpo. A detachment of troops was sent against them, who were, however, handled so roughly, that the officers were glad to settle the difficulty by a compromise.

On the evening of May 18th, I set off to visit this place, taking with me Shih-nyiar, one of our recent converts, and about one thousand volumes of small books for distribution. It was already sunset, and the boat in which we embarked was small, slightly built, and already loaded nearly to the water's edge. The night grew dark, and a brisk breeze raised the waves of the estuary, up which we were proceeding. Every wave made our frail craft shake as though it would go to pieces, and the spray dashed over its sides in a threatening manner, so that our boatmen would have been glad to tie up for the night. But there was a difficulty in the way of doing so, which will serve to illustrate the condition of this over-crowded, half-starving population. It would not be safe to land there, as that would expose us to the danger of being robbed. We were, therefore, obliged to proceed for a couple of hours, till we came to a village, at which we waited for the dawn of day and the flowing of the tide. Leaving thence, we came to a beautiful stone bridge of five arches, the middle of which was about forty feet in height. This fine bridge, which was designed only for foot passengers, horses being little used in this part of China, was probably erected by some wealthy person, who expected by the merit of this act, to atone for all the misdemeanors of his life. The Budhists assign to the building of bridges and roads a high place in the catalogue of merit; and this doctrine, notwithstanding the almost total neglect of government, is sufficient to keep the bridges and roads throughout the country in pretty good repair. Tired of a boat too small to admit of standing or walking, I left it at this place to pursue the winding course of the river, while I proceeded on foot to the next town by a nearer route. The country through which I passed was a perfect level, intersected by numerous canals, skirted with rows of trees, the dark foliage of which, together with the green rice fields and yellow wheat, which the farmers were just harvesting, gave to the scene a very pleasant variety. The fields, too, were swarming with people, who often left their work and followed me in crowds, for the sake of seeing a specimen of those foreigners of whom they had heard so much. And on interrogating them, I was glad to find that they had not only heard of the terrors of foreign arms, but were also acquainted with the name of that God and Saviour whom we have come to preach.

Visit to a beautiful stone Pagoda.

The next town was the limit of tide navigation; and as the broad estuary had now dwindled into a narrow rivulet of a few inches in depth, I was obliged to shift my little store into a lighter craft, and continue the journey by having one man to walk on the bank and draw the boat with a tow-line, while another propelled it with a pole. Taking advantage of the slow progress of the boat, I set off to visit a beautiful stone pagoda, which surmounted a grassy hill, at a little distance from the bank. Reaching it with some trouble, I was disappointed to find that, unlike many pagodas which are hollow with winding-stairs inside, this was a completely solid structure, without any stair-way to the summit. A hill not far off was surmounted with another of these singularly useless ornaments. Indeed, a person unacquainted with Chinese superstitions, who should be informed that those tall granite towers, which beautify so many landscapes, are neither used for temples nor forts, watch-towers nor observatories, would find it hard to guess what they were designed for. They are merely meant as points of attraction for the "good luck" which they suppose to permeate space in a kind of magnetic current, and to which they ascribe riches, honours, long life, progeny, and all other blessings. O! when shall they be delivered from this deadening materialism, and be brought to seek all blessings at the hand of the Father of lights, from whom cometh down every good and perfect gift?

A Budhist Monastery.

From this place, a short walk brought me to Mountain Forest "convent," one of the largest monasteries in the country, and only a mile distant from the city of Funghwa.

As there are few commodious taverns in China, especially out of large cities, Budhist monasteries, like those of the Papists and Armenians in Syria, are generally open for the entertainment of guests. I accordingly took lodgings for the night in this seat of idolatry, and in the morning proceeded to the city, which we found to be small and thinly peopled, most of the business being transacted without the wall, at a place called the "Great Bridge."

Preaching in the town hall—Democratic spirit of the people—Distributing books.

Entering a temple in quest of a preaching place, I was followed by a crowd of people, whom I requested to procure benches and seat themselves, while I should make known to them the gospel. But there were no benches at hand, and some of the company met the difficulty by suggesting that I should go to the public-hall. I remarked that the magistrates might, perhaps, be displeased with my taking such a liberty; to which they replied, with a democratic spirit, which is not yet extinguished even in China, that the "building was erected with the people's money," and immediately led me to it. It has a large shed-like structure, furnished with seats and tables sufficient to accommodate two thousand persons, and divided into several apartments by partitions of lattice-work. In one of these I spent the whole day in addressing successive companies, who listened with respect, received books eagerly, and often expressed their approbation of what they read and heard. The next morning I returned to the hall, and spent some time in preaching and the distribution of books. Having found, however, that Shih-nyiar, the young convert that was with me, was able to present the truth in a clear, forcible manner, so as to command attention, I concluded to leave him to instruct such as might assemble at this place, while I myself took a palanquin for Se-u, a large town at the distance of about seven miles.

Visit to "Temple Hill,"—Cordially received by the people—Preaching the gospel in a heathen temple.

After a ride of nearly two hours through a hot sun, I was set down in the midst of a populous village, which I at first took to be the desired place, but afterwards learned was called "Temple Hill." The inhabitants appeared as glad to see me as if I was an old friend; and when I had explained my object in coming, conducted me to a large empty building, where they furnished me with a chair, table, and a cup of tea, while they stood round to hear what I had to say. The wind, however, whistled through the open front, so that I could not be heard without great effort. On my mentioning this, they proposed the "New Temple" as a more convenient place. I accordingly repaired thither, and endeavoured to unmask their newly-painted idols, and teach them the worship of the true God, and our Saviour Jesus Christ. On coming out, I observed inscribed above the door, "Sing koo Meow," i. e., Temple of the Holy Virgin. Within were three female figures, the middle one of which might readily have been taken for a Madonna, while the others might stand for two other Marys; and if I had been present on a festal day, I should have witnessed the rites of pagan worship in the tapers and rosaries, the incense and bells, together with the "vain repetition" of prayers, partly in a dead language, by tonsured monks and nuns, a more than fancied resemblance to the paganized Christianity of Rome.

A stage converted into a pulpit—A large and attentive audience.

After exacting a promise from my host to visit me when he should come to Ningpo, I went on to Se-u, where I was conducted to a large ancestral temple. Here I attempted to address the people, but the crowd soon became so great that, standing as I was on the temple floor, I could neither be seen nor heard by those in the rear. I told the people it was impossible to speak in that situation, when they immediately shouted, "To the stage! to the stage!" and led the way to a high platform in front of the temple for the acting of theatricals, which are always performed in the presence of their idols, as religious worship. I mounted the stage, and surrounded by nearly a thousand people, discoursed of a more solemn theme than was ever exhibited on that stand, as long as my voice held out. When I was through, observing that the temple was inscribed "To our First Parent," I remarked, "He is my ancestor, too," to which one of the company replied with a sentence from the Chinese Classics: "All within the four seas are brethren." Se-u is even more populous than the walled city of Fung-hwa, and, together with that place, presents an inviting field for a missionary.

Return to Ningpo.

Returning to Mountain Forest Convent, I spent the next day (Sabbath) partly at the Great Bridge, where we had crowds of attentive listeners, and partly in rest, which, after the fatigue of the three preceding days, I greatly needed. On Monday we set our faces homeward, commending our desultory labours to Him who commands to "sow beside all waters," and preaching and distributing books in the villages through which we passed.

SIAM MISSION.

LETTER FROM REV. S. MATTOON.

We earnestly commend to the prayerful consideration of our young men about to enter the ministry, the pointed appeal with which this letter commences, for more help. It has been reiterated many times of late, but as yet we have no knowledge of any one in our Theological Seminaries who is looking forward to Siam as a field of missionary labour. We trust it will not be long before we shall hear of a hearty response to this call, and the hearts of our brethren there be cheered by the arrival of more missionaries.

BANGKOK, Sept. 2d, 1853.

We are in receipt of your letters of May 2d and May 30th. We were glad to learn that the mission year ended so favourably with you, and hope that the discussions in the General Assembly will give a new impulse to the work. But where are the men? Are there none willing to give themselves to the heathen? Are there none who remember that Christ gave himself for them when they were in the same lost condition that the heathen now are? If he had excused himself from his self-denying mission, none of us could have been saved. O that we all might have more of the spirit of our Master! We had confidently hoped that we should have heard that some had decided to join us in this field, but we are still left in uncertainty. May the Lord sustain those now here, and speedily send us others!

Cemetery granted by the Government of Siam.

I have nothing new to report as to our circumstances or work. The king has lately given a site for a Protestant cemetery. We have heretofore had to depend upon the kindness of private individuals for a place to bury our dead. We have now an ample spot, pleasantly located. But we shall be at a great loss for funds to properly enclose and prepare it for use. There are but one or two English residents here, and they not wealthy, and the labour and expense of such a work will fall principally upon the missionaries, who are certainly not able to expend much for such objects. It should be the work of Governments to provide such a place in every land to which their citizens resort. English sailors have frequently died here, and in some cases they have been interred by the kindness and at the expense of missionaries.

The writer's views of the merits of "Neale's Residence" in Siam.

I have just been looking over Neale's Residence in Siam, a book about which you once made some inquiry, and which I hear is sold, if not republished in America. After looking it through, I should say that it could not be taken as authority on any point whatever. The man has been here, as we know from other sources than his own statement, but how he could have written such a book after being here even for one single day, is a mystery. His statements are generally incorrect, and many of them must have been manufactured without any foundation in truth. His illustrations are as incorrect as his statements. His account of Bangkok, of which he must have seen more than any other portion of the country, may be taken as a sample. He gives us 70,000 floating houses, when one, or at most two thousand, would cover the whole. He makes them to line the banks of the river in several tiers, with streets between them, whereas there is nowhere but one tier at each bank. He makes the entire population to live in these floating houses, while the large portion of them have always lived on land; and his memory must have been poor indeed, if he could not have remembered, even after twelve years absence, that there were streets of a mile or more in length, built up as compactly as New York or London. The former capital, Aynthia, a town of some twenty or thirty thousand inhabitants, he gravely tells us consisted in 1840 of six fisherman's huts and a betel-nut stall—while he says that twenty-five years previous it was more densely populated than Bangkok. It was destroyed by the Burmans some eighty or ninety years ago, and since that time has never been more populous than it is now. He reaches it, too, in three hours from Bangkok; while under the most favourable circumstances, it is a journey of sixteen or eighteen hours, and generally occupies two days. He goes to this place in a procession with the late king, who goes still farther to make offerings at a festival, which I think is now heard of for the first time in Siam, and there the king remains for several successive days and nights—while, in truth, I suppose he never was out of his capital, or slept for a single night out of his palace, from his accession to the throne to the day of his death. But it is useless to follow this unscrupulous book-maker any further. It is sufficient to say, that he is nowhere reliable, and most of his work is pure romance. It is a pity that such a work should be put in circulation concerning a country so little known as Siam, as many will look upon it as authority.

INDIA: AGRA MISSION.

JOURNAL OF REV. JOSEPH WARREN.

Jalandar and Amritsar.

After spending a few days at Lodiana, I went in one night to Jalandar, arriving in the morning at about half-past seven. This is a new station, having grown up altogether since the English annexed the Jalandar Doab after their first war with the Sikhs. European troops are stationed here, as well as native regiments; and as a consequence, the station is large. The barracks are handsome; the bungalows are neat; two handsome churches, Episcopal and Papist, stand side by side; the roads are finely Macadamized. All this is about three miles from the native city, and I had to pass through it going to the mission establishment, which is close to one side of the city.

Account of a station maintained entirely by native converts.

I felt quite as much curiosity about this station as about any one in our missions; for it is occupied only by our native brother, the Rev. Golok Náth, and an East Indian schoolmaster; and it is an interesting question, how far we shall be able to extend our operations through such instrumentality. On my return visit I spent the Sabbath there, and preached in the large school-room. We had a very good congregation, principally of unconverted natives, though of course the members of the two families of the mission, and some inquirers, were present. We spent some time in examining a Musalman candidate for baptism, in whose case Golak Náth wished for my assistance and advice. I was glad to find that he had been carefully instructed, and that there seemed to be no disposition to hurry his baptism, in order to gain the credit of having an accession to the church. His admission was postponed, because he had not a full perception of the worthlessness of his own works to procure salvation. We had another conversation with a young Hindu inquirer; but he was sick, and we could not prolong our talk with him. He seemed to be a promising man.

On my first visit, when going towards Lahor, I visited and examined the school. The classes seemed to me well arranged and carefully taught. The principal remark that I have to make, I quote from Golok Náth's own words, as near as I can recollect them, and I believe the view they present is perfectly just. He said: "Sir, we can do very well with this school until the pupils come to require instruction in the more advanced branches of mathematics and philosophy; but we are obliged to stop short of what is desirable, on account of our own education not being sufficiently extensive. And as to the English language the same is true; we are both persons who have learned English; it is not our vernacular; and though we are tolerably well acquainted with it, and can teach the elements of it successfully, yet when we come take in hand the more difficult authors, we find ourselves without the niceties of idiom, and consequently at a loss to communicate that kind of knowledge of it, which shall enable our scholars to become accomplished in it." Now all this is true, and the perception of its truth does Golok Náth great credit. A man may know English so well as to speak it fluently, and write letters in it, and refer to English books with profit to himself, and yet not be an accomplished lecturer on Shakspeare, Milton, Locke and Bacon.

Reasons why an ordained missionary should be located at this station.

Beside this, there are other reasons why an American ordained missionary should be placed at Jalandar, if possible. As long as white people are the ruling class in this country, so long some importance will be attached to the European colour, dress and habits, by the ordinary natives, and a missionary will have more influence than any native brother. The European community also will more readily confide in a white man. I do not mean to say, however, that a native minister cannot gain the confidence of all classes; I believe that he can; and that our brother at Jalandar has done so to a very great extent. Probably a union of both at the same station is the most desirable arrangement. The native minister would be more accessible through the similarity of social and domestic arrangements; and European character would add its influence and prestige to the common stock. To work together in harmony, both would require certain good qualities, in the absence of which, they would be better separate; but this is not the place in which to speak of them.

The style of living kept up by Christian converts in Northern India.

My intercourse with our native friends at Jalandar was most pleasant. From a desire to entertain me as well as possible, they adopted the English mode of cooking and eating: though they retain, when by themselves, the native, with certain exceptions, of which we cannot but approve—such as the adoption of spoons, instead of fingers, as instruments. They have some articles of English furniture about them, because they are visited by Europeans sometimes; and they themselves are such persons, that in all circumstances they will appear respectable; but yet the place and circumstances in which I saw Mrs. Golok Náth to greatest advantage was when she invited me to sit in her private parlour. She was seated on a piece of carpet that was placed in the middle of the room; her arm rested negligently on a large round pillow; her whole attitude, suiting her dress, displayed a degree of grace, which one could hardly conceive of as connected with a seat on the ground. Here she appeared at ease, unembarrassed, and lady-like.

Journey from Jalandar to Armitsar—Description of the latter place.

The distance between Jalandar and Amritsar is one long night's stage. I reached Amritsar, the first time, too late in the morning to go out to the city with our friends, the Episcopal missionaries. They kindly bestowed their hospitality on me. In the course of the day one of them lent me his horse and buggy to go to the city. He did not like to go with me on account of the heat; and if I had not wished to see all that was possible of so interesting a place, I would not have gone out; for the hot wind was blowing, and the air was blistering. I found the city a nice one for a Hindustáni place; but I cannot give a description of it. I went first to the English school-house in the city, to call on, and take with me, an old acquaintance—David, a Sikh Christian, who was baptized several years since by my old friend, the Rev. Mr. Perkins, Episcopal missionary at Caunpore. David went with me to the Durbar. This word is the usual name of the Court, or Hall of Audience, of a king; and in this case it is applied to the building in which the "Granth Sáhib"—almost literally Sir Book—is kept. Granth means a book, and Sáhib means a gentleman, or sir; and the Sikhs call their sacred book, granth sáhib.

A magnificent building situated in the midst of a sacred pond.

The Durbar is placed in the middle of an artificial pond of water, which is square, and about one hundred and fifty yards in length and breadth. It is surrounded with brick and stone work, with steps leading down to the water on all sides. This pond it is which is especially named Amritsar—the head or fountain of immortality. From this the city takes its name. The water, though thick and dirty, and covered with a green slime, is considered most holy by the Sikhs; and bathing in it is esteemed almost or quite equal to an ablution in the Ganges. The pond is surrounded with good buildings, many of them lofty and well finished; and all of them considered holy, from their vicinity to the water. No common sweeper is allowed to clean them—the priests attached to the durbar performing that office themselves. The missionaries hire a part of one of these buildings for a Panjábi school; and every day one of the priests comes to sweep it, that ordinary sweepers, who are reckoned very low and unholy, may not touch it. At a short distance from two or three of the corners, are tall round towers, surmounted by gilded cupolas, giving an appearance of lightness, elevation, and richness to the whole.

But the jewel of the whole place is the durbar itself. It is approached by a white marble causeway, leading from the centre of one side of the pond. The main building is of white marble, nearly square, and I should think measures about fifty feet on a side. The marble walls, up to the cornice, are probably twenty-five or thirty feet high; and the roof, consisting of a dome and pinnacles, is heavily and beautifully gilded, presenting one unbroken surface of burnished gold. The marble walls, without and within, as well as some of the pavement around, are inlaid with coloured marble and precious stones, in figures of birds, leaves, and flowers. The ceiling over the principal room is of copper, embossed in most elaborate figures, and splendidly gilded. A smaller room behind the main building has doors and ceiling of the same gorgeous description. Where wreaths of flowers, in the embossed work, are made to end in a prominent rosette, a jewel is set in the centre. The marble causeway, and the pavements surrounding the buildings, are flanked by large marble lamp-posts, having at a convenient height many niches in each one for placing lamps; and above these niches are a cornice, a small dome, and a pinnacle, all thoroughly gilded. The effect of the whole is most gorgeous. I never before had a notion of the essential beauty of gold; and I could not have supposed that so much of it could be used about any structure, and it still not look either foppish or barbarous. The effect here, however, notwithstanding it was so fine, was that of solemn and stately magnificence.

A book worshipped.

The durbar contains nothing but a copy of the granth. Before it lay a heap of coppers, cowries, and flowers, which had been recently offered. Near it sat two priests with native guitars, singing hymns. The Sikhs deny that they worship any idol; and they really think themselves clear of this sin; but they give the same worship to this book which a Hindu gives to his gods of stone. I begged the men who were singing to stop and tell me how they could consider themselves free from idolatry. They stopped a moment, and earnestly but civilly denied my charge; and then told me they were not there to argue, but to sing; which they began to do again immediately.

The throne of the chief Guru—Preaching the gospel where it had never been heard before.

On leaving the durbar, David the Christian, and some Sikh priests, took me to see the throne of the chief guru of the sect, in a building overlooking the pond. We entered the lower part of the building, and passed up a wide staircase to the throne-room—a large, cool, sombre-looking apartment, with the throne elevated on a daïs, with a large canopy over it. Many Sikhs were scattered all over this building, some chatting in groups, and many sleeping out the hot hours. As I went up stairs and through the apartments, the news spread that a foreign gentleman was come to see the throne of the honourable guru; and the sleepers were aroused, and the talkers silenced, and all gathered themselves up and followed me. I asked them if I might go under the canopy of the throne. They expressed an unwillingness that I should do so, but made no objection to my standing on the steps. I did not know how they would bear a proclamation of the truth, but I determined to go as far as they would permit me. I began by praising the beauty of their durbar. When I got their ears, I assured them that I did not mean to treat them with any personal disrespect; but that, believing as I did, that there was, and could be but one true religion, I wished to explain to them what that was. Then I gave them a sketch of their own, followed by an earnest call on them to choose a Christian guru, and follow his instructions; to follow Christ, instead of a fallible man like their first guru. There were about one hundred men present. They listened gravely, and without any apparent displeasure. When I reminded them that their religion was bound up in the Sikh state, which had been annihilated, and with a kind of apostolical succession, which had been interrupted, and was supported by promises and predictions, which had been falsified, the feeling that seemed to be excited in their hearts was one of deep but gentle melancholy. It was a touching scene; and it has left an impression upon me that will always make me feel more kindly towards the Sikhs. I talked only about a quarter of an hour. I shall never forget that it was once my privilege to stand on the steps of that throne and preach Christ where I think he had never before been preached.

INDIA: LODIANA MISSION.

JOURNAL OF A TOUR FROM LAHOR TO RAWAL PINDI, BY REV. J. H. MORRISON.

Mention has been made, in previous numbers of the Record, of the religious movement in Rawal Pindi, and the desire expressed by those most actively engaged in it, to have Christian books and teachers. It was in view of this, that Mr. Morrison undertook the journey, of which we have a full account in the accompanying journal; and although he was disappointed in relation to the character and design of this movement, there is reason to believe that the journey itself will be productive of important results to the missionary cause in that part of the world.

The controversies which he had with this new sect, as also those with the Mussulmans in the same place, may have made lasting impressions on their minds. A Brahman who was present at these disputations, afterwards acknowledged to Mr. Morrison that his arguments and illustrations had convinced him of the falsity of the Purans and the Sidhánt; and he acknowledged further that the Hindu religion had but thirty or forty years to live. Such acknowledgments as these, and such principles as have been adopted by this new sect, which Mr. Morrison went more particularly to visit, show that Hinduism, and perhaps Mohammedanism too, are losing their hold upon the people, and this we might reasonably expect to be one of the first fruits of the gospel.

But another important result from this tour will be to set Rawal Pindi more prominently before the Missionary Board and the Church, as a suitable place for a new mission station. It is situated about one hundred and eighty miles to the north-west of Lahor, on high table land, about fifteen hundred feet above the level of the sea, and is said to enjoy a delightful and healthy climate. It is the largest town and cantonment between Lahor and Peshawar, and may we not hope that the time is near when we shall have a mission station at that place?

LAHOR, Oct. 18th, 1853.

Since my last, I have had an attack of fever of the same kind as that which laid me aside so long in Sabáthu, but this time, instead of three months, I was only three weeks laid aside. As soon as I had sufficiently recovered to undertake any missionary work, I started by dák for Ráwal Pindí, about one hundred and eighty miles north-west of this. The reason why so long a tour was undertaken at the season of the year when marching is out of the question, and even dák travelling difficult and dangerous, nay, even that too sometimes impossible, was, that we had heard that a large number of Hindús had abandoned all idolatry, and had commenced worshipping the one only living and true God, and that they wished very much to have a missionary come and see them. It was said, also, that they were greatly persecuted by the other Hindús. From all we could hear, it seemed to be important that some one should go to them while in that state, and endeavour to lead their minds to the Saviour.

On the day of my arrival there, I was too unwell to do anything, and the next day being the Sabbath, I thought it best to remain quiet that day also. A gentleman of the station, however, informed them of my arrival, and one of the principal men of the new sect came to see me. From him I learned that the movement had been in progress some eight or ten years, but that during the Sikh reign they durst not make any publication about it, or let their sentiments be publicly known. But now, under the English, they had nothing to fear, and had begun to publish their doctrines, and had attached to their party sixty-one persons, some few of whom had gone back. They had derived a good deal of assistance in their opposition to idolatry, from some of our books, which they had received at Hardwár, but they do not appear to have paid any attention to the doctrines of salvation contained in them, or to anything else, except so far as they could use them in their crusade against Hinduism.

Their plan of salvation—Discussion in relation to its merits.

The plan of salvation as proposed by them is by simple meditation on the Supreme Being. I showed him that meditation never could satisfy the justice of God, and therefore could be no ground for the pardon of sin, nor was it alone sufficient to change the heart and sanctify our natures. Indeed, he had to admit that their system embraced neither of these essential elements of a plan of salvation for sinners. When driven into this dilemma, he said he was not sufficiently versed in the subject to answer me, but that their Pádrí could satisfy me on all points. Well, on Monday morning early, I went, accompanied by the gentleman above mentioned, to their Dharam sálá. Here I found a number of people assembled, listening to an old man reading the Granth of Nának. They treated us with great politeness, and brought chairs, and gave us a seat near the Pádrí. Very soon the place and the little court-yard were crowded with Sikhs, Hindús, and Musalmans, all curious to hear how the new sect would stand the test to which a Christian Pádrí would put them. The discussion soon commenced, during which his effort was to show that dhiyán, contemplation, was sufficient for salvation, and my effort was to prove and illustrate its utter insufficiency. The discussion was occasionally interrupted by interference from other Sikhs and Hindús, who felt that their systems had no better foundation, and must go with that of the new sect. This led to desultory discussion, until it became too late in the day to remain longer.

Discussion resumed—No system of religion can stand, that has not a Saviour.

Next morning I went alone, and resumed the discussion. The old Pádrí had the day before been driven into so close a corner for want of a Saviour, that to-day he determined to take a new tack, and make Nának their Saviour. This the Hindús say he never thought of before. I asked him who he made Nának? Was he God? or an incarnation of God? To adopt either of these views would have in their estimation been to abandon a fundamental article in their creed, and that from which they take their name, Nirankárí. Nirankár means incorporeal, and Nirankári means one who believes God to be an incorporeal being, and that he never has become incarnate. He could not therefore adopt either of the above hypotheses, but admitted that Nának was a sinful man like ourselves, but that he was a Saviour to them, inasmuch as he pointed out to them the way of salvation. I replied that one sinner could not be the saviour of other sinners, and that even admitting all he said, it drove them back on to the old ground of contemplation, which had already been proved to be insufficient. He then flew to the refuge common with many here, that there is no such thing as sin or virtue. I then asked how that could be, since he had just admitted that all men were sinners, not even Nának excepted. Driven off this tack, he affirmed that God was the author of all sin and virtue. To this I replied, 1st, that he had just said that there was no such thing as sin or virtue, how then could God be the author of that which had no existence. 2d. He had quoted the following couplet from the Granth, in proof of his last proposition;

Kare karáwe áphé áp
Mánus ke kuchli nahin, háth.

The meaning of this is, that God does and causes everything to be done, and man is nothing but his hand. Now, I argued, if this were true of God, he must be the worst and most unholy being in existence, and consequently the book that thus dishonours him could not be his word; therefore the granth is false, and must lead its followers astray. He was a good deal nettled at being thus driven from one refuge of lies to another, until at last he had got into a corner from which he saw no escape; and to make matters worse, a Hindú, seeing his position, took advantage of it to throw in a word to increase, if possible, his embarrassment. This was too much for the old man's temper, and he blew out with a full blast of vile abuse against the man and his religion. I endeavoured in vain to calm him down, but finding I could do nothing, I took up my hat and left the assembly.

The new teacher tries to gain a victory by silence.

As I went out some of the Hindus followed me, and asked me to visit their Dharam sálá the next day. Accordingly I went there the next day. Seeing this the Nirankáris began to fear that they had given me offence. Consequently the old Pádrí, with two or three of his disciples, visited me, and brought with them a present of sugar-candy to sweeten me towards them. I then reasoned with them about the impropriety of their conduct, when the old Pádrí said his heart had not yet been changed. To this I replied by asking him what his religion was good for if it did not change our sinful hearts. Again I went to their Dharam sálá, and the old Pádrí tried a new plan with me. It was to keep quiet and not object to anything I said, or allow any one else either to object or to ask a question. This was very difficult to carry out, for his people were not willing to leave my arguments and preaching unanswered. But still he persisted in trying to keep them silent, by arguing thus with them: All the gentleman says is perfectly true—why should you object or argue? Christ is his Saviour, and Nának is ours; let each one cling to his own religion. I then took up that point, and drew a contrast between Christ and Nának, to show that the latter was not and could not be a saviour for them or any one else. To this he replied that such as he was they would stick to him, even if he went to hell. I then remarked that by taking that stand they had fairly turned their backs on the truth, and closed their eyes and ears and hearts against it, so that there was no further any use in arguing with them. Once after this I called on him (the Pádrí) at his house, where a number of his disciples resort for evening worship, but he pursued the same course, and shut out all access to his mind or heart. He is evidently determined to be a great guru, and the leader of a new sect, by which his name will be handed down to posterity.

Characteristics of this new sect.

A word now as to the tenets of this new sect. They adopt the Granth, or Bible of Nának, and while they profess to abandon and abominate all idolatry, they do in fact worship the Granth just as much and in the same way as the other Sikhs do. They wave over it the chaurí, bow down to it with the forehead touching the ground, and present their offerings before it just as the other Sikhs do. When taxed with idolatry in this, they say that they do not worship the book, but the word it contains. They do not bury their dead, because the Musalmáns and Christians do so. They will not burn them, because that would assimilate them too much to the Hindús. They therefore throw them into the water. They seem to have no idea of an atonement for sin, or the necessity of regeneration. Their whole plan of salvation is summed up in one word, Dhyán, contemplation. The idea of calling Nanák a Saviour, the people about them say, was forced on them by a discussion with them. Having thus been driven to a partial admission of the necessity of a Saviour, and having some of our books among them, they, or at least some of them, may be led to Christ, the only Saviour for lost sinners.

Their object in going to Europeans for Christian books.

Their object in visiting the Europeans and asking for books, and expressing a favourable feeling towards Christianity, and a desire to have a missionary visit them, was no doubt to gain favour with the authorities. This favour they thought they might use in two ways: 1st. By making capital of it to gain proselytes; and 2d. To secure favourable decisions in the courts when brought there in consequence of the improper means they adopted to advance the interests of their sect. Before leaving the place, I determined to go once more and make a solemn appeal to their consciences, grounded on the full exhibitions of the gospel, which I had already made to them. Accordingly, the day before leaving, I went for the last time to their Dharam Sálá, but not finding the Pádrí at his post, I waited some time, hoping he would come. Disappointed in this, at last, I attempted to address those present: but having no one to restrain them, the moment I began to speak, several of them began also, so that it was impossible to get a hearing, and I was obliged to leave them as I found them. That my views of their motives are correct is proved by the fact, that from the time they found they could not use me either to further their interests with the authorities, or in preaching a crusade against the Hindus, but that I impartially exposed their errors as well as those of others, they ceased visiting the Europeans of the station and asking books from them. Even since my return home, I have received a letter from a gentleman there, who tells me that not one of them has shown himself to him since I left.

Preaching in the Bázárs—Controversy with Musalmen.

Although I was to some extent disappointed in reference to the Nirankáris, yet I was not idle, nor was my journey altogether in vain. I remained there four weeks, going to the bázárs once or twice almost every day, and almost always preaching to large crowds. As soon as I began to preach publicly in the bázár, the Musulmans began to be troublesome. Then I brought the Korán to bear on them. At first they denied that the book from which I read such things was their Korán—that it contained nothing so bad, but that I had corrupted the copy in my possession for proselyting purposes. I then challenged them to produce their own and compare. This they did, hoping to convict me publicly of falsehood; but the comparison soon compelled their learned men to admit that mine was verily their own Korán. When I had secured this admission, I challenged them to prove that it was the word of God. This they answered only by saying that it was proved already. How? I asked. "God said so," they replied. "Prove that," said I. "Why the angel Gabriel brought it to Mohammed," said they. "Prove that," again I replied. They retreated to the Korán itself. "But," said I, "in my estimation, that is false, and I call on you to prove it to be the word of God before I believe it." Having thus fairly brought them to a stand, I said, "If you cannot prove it to be the word of God, I can prove that it is not the word of God, and that, too, by its own verses." I then referred to two verses, which they carefully compared with their own Korán, and found them to correspond; but while I was looking for another verse, they quietly shut up their Korán and walked off and never produced it again, although I remained some three weeks preaching to and discussing with them. Although defeated here, they did not let me alone. Almost always some of them were present to annoy me, and, if possible, prevent my preaching the gospel. Their plan was to propose questions and make objections, and then when I began to answer, so many began to speak at once that no one could tell what any one else said. I told them that was not the way for sensible men to discuss a subject; that one should speak at once, and then listen to the reply. To this they agreed perhaps fifty times during my stay, but as often whenever I began to reply, if they saw the reply would trouble them to answer it, they resorted to the same old trick. At last I told them their word was not to be trusted, and that no discussion could be held with them in the bázár. I then proposed to get a house, where all shall sit down, and no one be allowed to speak, except the disputants, and they were to speak alternately fifteen minutes. To this they agreed. On the following Sabbath the steward of the Dák Bungalow where I put up, to whom the mosque in which we were to discuss belonged, went to the city, and asked them when the discussion would come off. They replied that they had sent out to different places, about fifteen or twenty miles off, to call in their learned men, and that they, too, were in the mean time preparing for it, having already written sixty-four pages of foolscap in preparation, and that as soon as all was ready they would let me know. After this I waited a week and a half, but received no intimation of their making any further advances in their preparation for the discussion; but, on the contrary, unmistakeable indication of backing out or delaying until I should have to leave, and then proclaim that they had driven me off. All this time they did not cease to annoy me in the bázár by their little satellites. I then went to the old Qází, the principal man among them, and charged him and his brethren with wilful deception, and told them now I would wait no longer, but would go the next morning to the place agreed on for our discussion, and if he chose to appear there, he should have an equal opportunity with me to speak in defence of their system, but if he did not, that I would publicly expose the iniquities of Mohammed and of the Korán, and then publish through the city his defeat or disgrace. He agreed to meet me at the time and place appointed. I then published this agreement extensively in the city, and invited all to attend. One man, whom I met, seemed to be a very respectable person, and a man of more than ordinary education and intelligence. To him I mentioned the whole story, and told him that I suspected, after all, that his brethren would back out.

He replied, "Now I have come, and they shall not back out, and I will myself be present too.

Musalmen shrink away from a public controversy.

Next morning, notwithstanding all their pretensions and promises, I went there, and found not a soul there to meet me. The Amám of the mosque went away to call the Qází, but soon returned, and informed me that he had left the city! The servant who attended me, said he knew where they were in the habit of assembling together, and that he would go and bring them. He, being a Musalman, felt something for the disgrace they were bringing on their religion by their course. So he went, full of confidence that he could bring some of them. But he too, soon returned, to report that he could find but one of the whole clique, and he refused to come, unless the rest would go. So I had nothing left but to proclaim their disgraceful retreat from the discussion, about which they had made so much ado, and their total defeat, which I did. The whole thing seemed to produce a good impression on many minds. The steward of the bungalow, himself a Musalman, and builder of the mosque in which we were to discuss, said they were all afraid to meet me; that he had tried to get different mullas to meet me, but none of them would venture; and that the plain, simple-minded, common people, spoke very highly of the doctrines I preached, but that the base sort reviled them, and the learned were afraid.

Before turning my face homeward, I visited Hasan Abdál, a town, about thirty miles north-west of Rawal Pindí. This is a place of considerable note among the Sikhs, on account of a print of a hand of Nának left on a rock there. The story is variously told. One form of it is, that in his peregrinations, he came and sat there under a tree with a servant, whom he told to go to the top of the hill close by to a tank for water. This of itself is absurd enough to condemn the whole story, with intelligent, reflecting people, for the hill is a high, rocky, solitary hill, with no higher hills anywhere near it. But such is their story.—Well, there lived at this tank a Musalman fákir, who would not let him get any water there. Then Nának put his hand against a rock in the side of the hill, and pushed the whole mountain to one side, so as to let the water come out from below, and dry up the tank above, so that now the Sikhs have plenty of good water below, and the fakir is obliged to come all the way down for his water. Another story is, that the fakir tumbled down a rock, in order to crush Nának; that he seeing it, put up his hand, and kept it from falling on him, and thus left the print of his hand there. A third is, that Nának said to his servant, on hearing of the fakir's refusal to let him have water, "Never mind, it will come to us itself;" and soon after, it gushed out at the foot of the hill, and left the tank above; but how he left the print of his hand, I do not remember. Hearing so many different stories about it, I told them, made it look to me as if the whole were false, and that on examination of the print, I told them there could be no doubt that it had been made by stone-cutter's tools, and that, too, by men who were no workmen, for it was so rough and badly shapen. "Yes," they said, "that is true, when the Musalmáns were in power, they obliterated the original print, and we have been obliged to dig it out anew." Such is a specimen of the silly objects and childish stories that bring together multitudes from distant parts of the land at great pains and expense. How ready man is to believe a lie, and even to bow down and worship the grossest and most manifest absurdities, while at the same time every avenue to the soul is hermetically sealed against the smallest ray of the light of divine truth, and their hearts are set against the true spiritual worship of the God in whose hand their breath is! O! when will the light break in upon this Egyptian darkness? O Lord, how long?

Another place I visited, is Sháhi Núrpur, about ten or twelve miles from Rawal Pindí, close in to the foot of the mountains. Here is a Khánqáh, or Musalmán monastery. These monasteries are always connected with some tomb or tombs of saints, who have distinguished themselves by some miracle. The miracle claimed for this saint is, that he stood in the water up to his neck for twelve years, until the fish ate him up! How he stood in the water after his feet were gone, or how much, if any thing of him, the fish left for his friends and disciples to bury, no one thinks of inquiring; it is enough that the story has been handed down for generations, and the extravagance and absurdity of it seem to constitute the only ground of their belief and reverence. Should any inquisitive stranger interpose such questions, the answer is always ready, that it was a miracle performed by the power of God, which we have no business to inquire into, or right to limit. It is said, that all the time he was in the water, he neither ate nor drank any thing but milk, which was brought to him daily by a labouring farmer. But, strange to tell, he never drank of one cow's milk a second time, for the very night after he drank the milk, the cow from which it was taken died. Still the farmer's devotion to the saint was so great, that he continued to give him milk daily, even at that expense, until he had lost one hundred cows and buffaloes, and had no more means to replace them. He then tried to induce his neighbours to take their turn in supplying the saint. Failing in this, he went and reported the matter, when the saint told him to start and run home, calling all his lost cattle by name. He did so, and to his joy and surprise, they all answered the call by scampering after him. Thus they followed him home, and were shut up in a yard, where, during the night, they were all converted into statues of stone, as large as life! This was told me by a man who said he had seen some of these statues, and he firmly believes the whole story. The Khánqah is filled with a herd of idle, ignorant, bigoted sensualists, seemingly among the most degraded and hopeless of their species. They and their visitors bow down with the forehead to the ground before the tomb, just as the Hindús do before their idols, and rub on their noses and eyelids the ashes of the fire kept burning there continually. Once a year there is a great mela at this place.

Ráwal Pindí is situated on a table-land, about fifteen hundred feet above the level of the sea, in lat. about 33¾ deg. North, and a little over 73 deg. East long., and a delightful climate. It is the largest city and cantonment between this and Pesháwar. The country around is very fertile, and the city growing rapidly. A Bráhman complained to me that formerly he could turn out his cow to pasture, and let her roam where she pleased, but that now he was obliged to take her out along the banks of the stream, or cut grass for her. I asked him the reason of this change. He said that since the English came into possession of the country, the land was much more extensively cultivated, consequently there was so much the less range for their cattle, and in the immediate vicinity there was none at all left. This same Bráhman acknowledged that my astronomical arguments and illustrations had convinced him of the falsity of the Puráns and the Sidhánt. He also acknowledged that the Hindú religion had but about thirty or forty years yet to survive. I argued that that fact proved it false, as he had admitted the above books to be, and that as an honest and wise man, he ought to abandon them all. "But no," he replied, "true or false, I will stick to them." Convinced, but unconverted! O! what an illustration of our need of the outpouring of the Holy Spirit.

For the reasons above given, Rawal Pindí will, no doubt, in time become a mission station of some society. Could we get even a qualified teacher, we might go there now without any pecuniary expense to the Board. A school has just been commenced there by the authorities, for the support of which they have set apart a portion of the town duties, about 125 rupees per mensum. This school, I have good reason to believe, would be made over to us, with the fund and a building worth 2500 rupees, or perhaps we might have to give some mere nominal sum for the building. Then, no doubt, enough could be raised in the station to increase that sum to 200 or 250 rupees a month.

JOURNAL OF THE REV. A. RUDOLPH AT A HINDU FESTIVAL.

We commend to the special attention of our readers, the views with which this journal is concluded. No one can fail to be impressed with the insufficiency, and, according to our ideas of conducting missionary operations in this country, the inadequacy of the means that are employed for reaching and influencing the minds of the great masses of men in India, and other parts of the pagan world. And yet it is very obvious, that these means, imperfect and superficial as they are, are producing results far beyond our expectations. We are not sure that a crisis is not being formed in the public mind in India at the present time, that will ere long tax the resources of the Church to their fullest extent. We would commend this matter to the serious and prayerful consideration, not only of the students in our Theological Seminaries, but to that of multitudes of pious young men in our churches, who are turning their attention to secular pursuits, instead of the Christian ministry.

I feel much encouraged in my work; I see that the mass of the people are preparing for a change. Many of our books are read; they have done some execution already. Fourteen years ago, when I entered the mission field, we found nothing but ignorance in matters of religion. The common people were unacquainted with the very first principles of natural religion. Now the case is different. The people have become in a measure familiar with gospel doctrines and gospel morality. Much of it has recommended itself so well to many, that they suppose it to be a part of their own system, not remembering where they learned it. Much also is misunderstood by the more ignorant classes, who have not had the advantages of any but the commonest education. The question occurs to my mind, whether the mode adopted by the Christian church for evangelizing this country is not imperfect to a high degree. The missionary, desirous of carrying the gospel message to as many perishing souls as he can, pays flying visits to towns, villages and fairs, and leaves behind him Scriptures and tracts to enable the people to make themselves further acquainted with the Christian religion. This is all that he can do for them. But what becomes of the seed sown into ground so imperfectly prepared. Much, no no doubt, is lost, while many a tender plant, unheeded and unwatered by the skilful hand of the husbandman, grows up a monstrosity, acquiring its deformity by partaking largely of the nature of the soil, and in the end it turns out to be nothing but a caracature of Christianity. Some plants indeed, in spite of all disadvantages grow up to be trees that bring forth fruit in their season, but alas, how few are these! If even Christians require line upon line and precept upon precept, will a visit of a day or two paid to a town or village every third, fourth, or fifth year do for the heathen? A great change will come over this land. Idolatry is crumbling to pieces even at the touch of reason, not to mention the gospel. But will the church at home be prepared when this great change takes place? Or will the few missionaries then in the field be left alone to direct and regulate matters among the millions of Hindustán? It would be well for the Church to ponder over this matter. Or have they already done all that they could do to the full extent of their ability, both in regard to men and means?

Sabbath morning.—This is the last day of the mela; the number of pilgrims has diminished since yesterday. The fair is regarded by the people as a perfect failure this time. To us it is satisfactory to see the attendance on these idolatrous festivals gradually decrease, and therefore lose in importance. There is no confusion and but little noise on the mela-ground, and we are able to attend to our work with comfort, and, I hope, with benefit to those who hear the gospel message. Two Mohammedans, simple-minded men, tried this morning to defend Islamism, and were not a little surprised at the revelations we made in reference to it. A Hindú that had listened to the discussion said to me after they were gone: Sir, I have been on the point to become a Mohammedan, I had already applied to the Rájá for permission to change my religion, and this permission has been granted to me. But the Mohammedans won't teach me the Korán, they say it is not for the common people to read it. Now I see from what you have said, that it is a false religion. I cannot express what I felt, when I heard you talk. How can I learn more about the religion of Jesus? It seems to contain just what I have been all along in search of. I advised him to go with us to Lodiana, to stay there a sufficiently long time to become better acquainted with it, and then to judge for himself as to his course of duty. He consented gladly, but whether he, or the other two, mentioned above, will not be turned aside by their relatives and friends, or the doubts of their own hearts before to-morrow's sun dawns, remains to be seen.

After breakfast I took my seat again at the tent, and had many an interesting talk with the people. The Pandit did much execution with his cutting sarcasm at the credulity of the people. His revelations of the deceptions practised by the Brahmans were often very amusing, and produced many a hearty laugh at the expense of the Devi and her votaries. A company of men listened for a while, who had come more than six hundred miles to pay their homage to mother Devi, as they expressed it. Qádirbalchish asked them, whether a woman that had forsaken her husband to live with another man was not called an adulteress. They of course answered the question in the affirmative. "Well," said he, "and have you come six hundred miles to commit adultery with mother Devi, having forsaken the only true and living God?" When these poor men started from their homes, they probably did not anticipate to hear such things at Jwálá Mukhí, the source of all consolation, as they thought. May the word of truth spoken to these, prove to be a better source of consolation to them, than their broken cisterns, that can hold no water. We continued our work till late in the afternoon, when I finally addressed the people, warning them to heed the word of truth and consolation, and to flee to the fountain of living waters. After an affectionate farewell, I started for the bárahdarí. On the way, my progress was frequently arrested by people that had still some questions to ask. This had been a busy Sabbath with me, but I hoped to have the evening to myself. In this, however, I was mistaken.

Immediately after dinner, the Fakir, who had promised to go with me to Lodiana, came in, and soon after, the man mentioned above, that so frankly had acknowledged the follies of Jwálá Mukhí. At last the Pandit also made his appearance. The native Christians joined us, and we sat till ten o'clock in the night talking matters over. I tried to counsel them, and to remove doubts and fears from their minds. The Pandit and Fakir seem to continue firm in their resolution to go with me to Lodiana. The third promised to pay me a visit when convenient. The man that came this morning, saying that he had been on the point of becoming a Mohammedan, has not come back again. Whether any of these will prove to be plants of the planting of our Lord, time and eternity will show.

Thus end our labours at this fair. I am amazed to see how Hinduism crumbles to pieces under the mighty strokes of the gospel. I feel as if it were all a dream. The Lord is doing wonders among this people, let us rejoice and be glad in him. His shall be the praise and the glory throughout all eternity. Amen.

TO MINISTERS AND ELDERS.

Our colporteur enterprise is likely to become embarrassed for want of funds. We have nearly one hundred colporteurs now in commission. The number increases weekly. Pressing and urgent calls come from all parts of our country, importunately demanding this humble, but important help. It must be remembered, that for funds to sustain this work, we are as dependent as the Board of Missions, on the benefactions of our churches. We cannot appropriate to it one cent from the income of the commercial department of the Board. While a few of our books are, for peculiar reasons, sold at about the same price they would be in the usual market, the mass are much cheaper, and we cannot increase the price to raise an income for colporteurs.

Let it then be constantly remembered, that the colporteur enterprise is distinctly a MISSIONARY WORK—not a substitute for the preaching of the gospel, but an humble aid, and designed as a harbinger to precede the ministry, a help to co-operate with it, and a temporary means to supply our many crying desolations, till such time as ministers can be found and sent.

We refuse no applicant for want of funds, but contributions have, lately, come in slowly and meagrely, and unless there be important increase, we shall be painfully compelled to decline enlarging our operations, on a field, constantly growing with our amazingly increasing, and widely spreading population.

Let us look at a few statistics. Excepting five foreign Presbyteries, and thirteen comprised in the Synods of Pittsburgh and Virginia, which act independently of the Board, and are most nobly and energetically co-operating, there are 125 Presbyteries in our church. Of these, by the Minutes of the last Assembly, there were twenty-nine from which no contributions were made to our funds. The ninety-six Presbyteries from which contributions were received, being very generally scattered over the country, show an encouraging aspect of the interest felt for this object. But then, in these Presbyteries only 347 churches made contributions. In other words, of 2490 churches but little over one-seventh have contributed a cent. Had one-half of our churches done half as well as these 347, (whose average contributions were $43,) our income would have been doubled.

Will not our brethren bestir themselves, and in every church, where no existing plans or conflicting arrangements prevent, give us the benefit of a contribution at once. Let every church officer, who reads this, BRING THE SUBJECT TO THE NOTICE OF HIS SESSION, ON THE FOLLOWING SABBATH. Let a contribution be solicited, however small, and remitted to Dr. A. W. Mitchell, 265 Chestnut Street, and then let each bear in mind, to bring the subject before Presbytery at its next meeting in the spring. We have but one collecting agent in our whole church, and we would gladly dispense with the cost and moral friction of this method of procuring funds; but till our churches will enable us to do so, by regular systematic contributions, we shall be compelled to employ agents.

We desire to place no obstacle in the way of any well-intentioned scheme of doing good. But are not our books as faithful, plain, and evangelical expositions of gospel truth, and our tracts as well adapted to do good, as any to be found? Are not our colporteurs as zealous, diligent, and pious? We had almost as well object to denominational ministers, and denominational churches, as to denominational labours in this field.

FRUITS OF A LIBRARY.

From a letter recently received by an officer of our Board, from a missionary in Tennessee, who has been labouring thirty-one years in the ministry, we are permitted to make the following extract.

"I have witnessed seventeen young persons in one of my congregations, who were brought to Christ by means of a library I procured from our Board about one year before. This was but the first fruit of a more glorious harvest to be gathered from the fruits of that library. The school (to which the library belonged) is still going on, and there are from sixty to seventy children and young persons in connection with it." He adds, "The books I have been able to procure for my own library are a great blessing to me."

CALL FOR MORE COLPORTEURS.

In another column will be found the terms which are offered to colporteurs. Persons wishing to engage in this service, often write for information, and when the applicant resides at a distance, the correspondence occasions considerable delay in completing arrangements for entering on the work.

We trust that all who feel interested in this important, though humble, auxiliary to the missionary work of our Church, will use all practicable diligence in increasing the number of our colporteurs. Since the publication of the notice in our December number, several applications for employment have been made. But we still need more, and we especially ask our ministerial brethren and Professors in theological and literary institutions, to seek out and bring to notice, men of suitable character for this work. It is not every one who can sell books who will make a good colporteur. We want men of undoubted piety, who can pass, unhurt, through the temptations to inconsistent conduct, to which colporteurs are sometimes exposed. They should be men of unblemished integrity, capable of keeping accounts in a simple form, and men of great prudence and strong common sense. It is expected of them to visit families, where they offer books, in the character of Christians, and that they use all suitable opportunities for exercising a religious influence by conversation and prayer.

We are persuaded that our Church suffers for the want of widely-circulated and well-read religious books; and throughout our country—in towns and villages, on steamboats and railroad-cars, and in hotels, are to be found the busy and efficient colporteurs of a very different order, who minister to our people, along with others, a literature, which is any other than religious. Could we only avail ourselves of the unemployed talents, the napkin-hidden talents of our Church, we might soon leave few parts of the country unexplored or unsupplied. There are scores of laymen, whose time is not fully employed in secular duties, who might give two or three months to this service. We need ministers, we need them for the home and foreign field, and, in many places in our country, there is little hope that the want will be very speedily supplied. Souls are perishing for lack of knowledge; and while the colporteur system is not, and never can be, a substitute for the gospel ministry, it is an excellent substitute for nothing. Let us do what we can with the means in our hands, and God will grant his blessing.

REPORTS OF COLPORTEURS.

We continue to receive encouraging reports from our colporteurs in various sections of the country. Were it proper, we could give large extracts from many of them, evincing the importance of their labours in disseminating right views of Christian truth among the ignorant, and especially in dispelling prejudice and error touching the distinguishing doctrines of grace.

One who has been labouring in Western New York sends us some minutes of his efforts in circulating the Confession of Faith, which present evidences of the existence of a most deplorable degree of destitution. He reports, among other instances, that of a whole congregation in which not a copy of the book could be found; and of an elder who professed that he had never seen, nor so much as heard of such a work. He testifies also to the readiness with which he disposed of large numbers of copies, and the diligent and efficient co-operation of ministers, in promoting its circulation.

From another we learn that while our books are highly prized by all orthodox Christians, they encounter much opposition from the unregenerate, Universalists and Arminians. This is not surprising—compliments from some men are any thing else than creditable.

Additional testimony to the sceptical and infidel character of much of our foreign German population is constantly coming before us. Every motive of patriotism and Christian love for the souls of men, urges us to the duty of redoubling our efforts to spread over our land the volumes and tracts which expound the fundamentals of our common Christianity. Let there be light, for the worst of all famines prevails in those sections where there is a famine of the bread of life.

With pleasing evidences of an increasing appreciation of our publications, we are constantly reminded of the importance of more active local efforts to disseminate them. True, that much of the seed may fall by the way-side and on stony places, yet pastors cannot too laboriously aid to train their people to right religious reading. In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thy hand, for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, this or that. "As far," says a colporteur, "as I have been able to trace the effects of these good books, I find them shedding light and comfort to the people of God and building them up in the most holy faith; and, doubtless, many from whom we have not heard, and from whom we shall never hear, until the resurrrection, have through these books been awakened to a sense of their lost condition, and brought to a saving knowledge of Jesus Christ, and others have no doubt gained clearer views of the great doctrine of salvation."

SYNODS OF NORTH AND SOUTH CAROLINA.

Many of our readers are already aware of the very cordial response made by both these venerable Synods to the visit of the Secretary in November.

In both, not only were resolutions expressing the utmost confidence and approval unanimously adopted, but the colporteur enterprise received a special attention.

The Synod of North Carolina was forward in this work many years ago, preceding the Board in systematic efforts for circulating our books. A great loss was sustained by the Synod, and also by the Board of Publication, in the death of our beloved brother Gretter of Greensboro, North Carolina. By his zeal and well-timed energy and prudence, he was a most valuable and efficient superintendent of the enterprise in the bounds of that Synod. The committee, of which he was chairman, is continued, and we have every reason to believe, that in the brother, the Rev. A. Hughes, selected to supply his place, will be found one, who will display equal interest, and prove equally efficient. When God has use for his servants in another and higher sphere, he is not forgetful of the interests of his Church here.

We take the liberty of reminding our brethren in that Synod, who have not already attended to the matter, that as the season for soliciting contributions to our funds for supporting colporteurs has arrived, and with some parts of the Synod already past, we trust they will not be unmindful of the action of Synod, in urging the subject on their attention.

In the Synod of South Carolina, no Synodical Committee had heretofore existed. Arrangements were made for constituting one. In several of the Presbyteries, however, the subject had received attention, and Presbyterial Committees had already been actively engaged in the work of collecting funds and superintending the enterprise of distributing books. We respectfully remind the brethren of that Synod also, of the importance of diligence in complying with the resolutions of Synod on the subject of soliciting contributions from their churches, regularly and annually, for sustaining the colporteur enterprise.

THE COLPORTEUR ENTERPRISE IN VIRGINIA.

We call the special attention of our readers in the Synod of Virginia, to the following spirited and sensible address of Rev. S. W. Blain, who has recently entered the field as Agent of that Synod, for collecting funds. And we trust that the example and success of the committee in charge of the work, will stimulate other Synods to go and do likewise.

THE BOOK AND TRACT CAUSE OF THE SYNOD OF VIRGINIA.

Will the churches sustain the enterprise of their Synod? I ask the question for the purpose of calling attention to this subject. From a resolution passed at the last meeting of Synod, I would infer that it was the opinion of Synod that the churches did not feel that interest in this enterprise to which it is fairly entitled.

This is, perhaps, no more than what might be expected. This is comparatively a new enterprise. It has hardly had time to fix itself in the affections of the people of our churches. They do not feel and understand its importance and necessity, because their attention has not been turned to it sufficiently. It is true that six years have passed since the Synod determined to carry on the colporteur work for themselves within their own bounds. But what are six years for inoculating with zeal and knowledge, in any great cause, a people scattered as ours are, over the broad surface of the State? Wild fire runs —wild and chimerical schemes fly before the wind. Moral epidemics will spread over a land in a season —they take hold of the weak and infirm. Our people are in general sober minded. They must know before they can feel or act. Their own minds must be roused to consider before they can know to any good purpose. The pity is that our hearts are so slow in taking hold of what is good;—that things which are for knowledge and holiness, should advance so slowly into favour with God's people.

And besides this, the book and tract cause has none of the grand and striking features of the Bible, or the missionary cause, foreign and domestic. Its field is more circumscribed. It is outwardly more humble, and it has had during a very short period of its existence, agents to plead for it before the people.

But notwithstanding all this, the enterprise has worked. Thousands of books and tracts have been put into circulation. The Executive Committee, in quiet, unostentatious labour, have carried forward the cause committed to them, as well as they could with small means and few men. A good work has been done, if it cannot be designated as great. And the great cause has won for itself a warm place in the hearts of most of our ministers and many of our churches. I wish that every minister and every church member would give it just that portion of his heart and his hand to which it is entitled.

With the exception of the resolutions for establishing the fourth professorship, I do not remember any which were ever passed with more unanimity and enthusiasm by the Synod, than these by which the book and tract cause was organized. The brethren were wearied with a tedious judicial case, and their hearts seemed to bound with pleasure, when a good brother presented before them this scheme, by which the foundations might be strengthened, and intelligence and piety promoted. I believe they went to their homes rejoicing that something had been done which would tell for good upon the country and upon the Church.

To what extent the attention of the brethren has been withdrawn from this subject, I cannot tell; or to what extent their interest in it for want of this attention may lie dormant. This only I can say at present. It is an enterprise of their own, at the installation of which their hearts rejoiced. It is the same good cause now that it was in '47. Indeed, it commends itself to our judgments and affections with tenfold claims; for it has lived and been content to work, doing good in its humble way, though no smile from without has ever lighted upon it—but many a frown. And every good man who will inform himself concerning it must love it, and cheer and help it onwards by his prayers and contributions.

BOARD OF COLPORTAGE OF PITTSBURGH SYNOD.

Our brethren of Pittsburgh Synod are going on with their work with increased zeal and efficiency. Having procured a liberal charter, they are now prepared to labour on a more extended scale. With a very respectable capital, their means of disseminating good books give promise that the future generation of Christians reared up in their churches will be distinguished for increased intelligence, piety, and enlightened views of privilege and duty. Let our Synods everywhere take pattern from this noble body, and our Church will, throughout the land, be known and appreciated as the staunch friend and supporter of sound principles, of gospel truth, and of civil and religious liberty. It is only necessary that, as a Church, we practically exhibit a consistency with our theory of doctrine and order, to gain the approbation of all wise and good men, while we thus answer the high purpose for which God has constituted his kingdom in this world, contributing our part to fill earth with the blessings, and heaven with the glories of the gospel of the grace of God.

Which was noticed in our last, is now ready, in five styles of binding:—Sheep, plain, 60 cents; Arabesque, 70 cents; same, gilt, 85 cents; Imitation Turkey, $1.50; Turkey, $2.00.

"THE WALDENSES IN PIEDMONT,"

Is the title of the beautiful book already noticed in December, and now issued in various styles of elegant binding. The following extract from a letter, dated July 27th, 1853, will interest our readers, as testimony to the present state of this truly wonderful people.

"I have just come from the valleys of Piedmont. My visit to these churches of primitive Christians has been satisfactory to myself, and I trust profitable to others. I have been everywhere received as an old acquaintance, as a messenger from God; churches, chapels, houses, are all open to us. What a change since the time, twenty-one years ago, when I, with brothers De Jersey and Erham, were banished from Piedmont, for having preached Jesus and his grace to the poor children of Adam! I have been begged, and even entreated, to return thither as soon as possible, and to stay with them some months; and the question has been asked, Could you not come and take up your abode with us? The churches of the valleys are on the stir; Italy, too, is on the stir; Pignerol, Geneva, Nice, as you well know. (Professor Malan, of La Tour, has just been sent there by the table.) Turin and other places are seeking the truth, which saves from threefold slavery of the Pope, sin, and the devil."

MISSION SEMINARY, BALE.—Bâle, as is well known, is the seat of the mission seminary established by Dr. Blumhardt in 1816. "It was founded as a monument to the glory of God for the deliverance of Germany from foreign domination." Its great object is to fit young men, by a course of study and discipline, for foreign missionaries. The original number of pupils was seven, who came with Blumhardt, who had been a pastor in Würtemburg. Auxiliary societies, for the support of the Institute, were soon founded in Würtemberg, in French and German Switzerland, and in the middle and North of Germany. The course of study, in the preparatory school and in the Institute proper, embraces Latin, Greek, Hebrew, Arabic or Sanscrit, Natural History, Geography, &c., and the common studies embraced in a theological course. Each student enters into an obligation to labour as a missionary in whatever field the Committee may point out, unless there are special reasons to the contrary. An aptitude for the acquisition of languages is considered as an essential prerequisite. The Institute has a large and commodious building, near the city wall, in the west part of the town, with some land adjoining. It is wholly dependent on the voluntary contributions of the friends of missions, and the personal labours of the pupils. Great freedom is allowed in relation to the religious opinions of the students. "They are not required to subscribe to the faith of Luther, or Calvin, or Zuingle, but to that of Jesus Christ." The Scriptures are made the uniform standard of appeal. The young men have gone out under the patronage of various societies, e. g., of the British Church Missionary Society, the Bâle Missionary Society, of the Evangelical Russian Church, &c. The Institution has published for many years a valuable monthly Missionary Magazine, containing many matters of interest to the philologist and the geographer. Before the departure of the young missionary, his instructions are given to him at Bâle, Strasburg, Tübingen, Dresden, or some other important place, much according to the custom in the United States. The portrait of each student is also engraved and suspended in the room where the Committee meet. At the present time, there are upwards of two hundred of these portraits. Many of them are strikingly indicative of the talent and moral worth which have here been devoted to the cause of Missions. The thirty-first anniversary of the Institute was held in June, 1846. The present number of students in both departments is forty.

HEAVEN.

That clime is not like this dull clime of ours—
All, all is brightness there;
A sweeter influence breathes around its flowers,
And a far milder air.

No calm below is like that calm above;
No region here is like that realm of love;
Earth's softest spring ne'er shed so soft a light—
Earth's brightest summer never shone so bright.

That sky is not like this sad sky of ours,
Tinged with earth's change and care;
No shadow dims it, and no rain-cloud lowers—
No broken sunshine there!

One everlasting stretch of azure pours
Its stainless splendour o'er those sinless shores;
For, there Jehovah shines with heavenly ray,
There Jesus reigns, dispensing endless day.

Those dwellers there are not like those of earth!
No mortal stain they bear;
And yet they seem of kindred blood and birth—
Whence and how came they there?

Earth was their native soil; from sin and shame,
Through tribulation they to glory came;
Bond-slaves, delivered from sin's crushing load,
Brands plucked from burning by the hand of God.

Those robes of theirs are not like those below;
No angel's half so bright!
Whence came that beauty—whence that living glow—
Whence came that radiant white?

Washed in the blood of the atoning Lamb,
Fair as the light these robes of theirs became;
And, now, all tears are wiped from every eye,
They wander where the freshest pastures lie,
Through all the nightless day of that unfading sky.

LIGHT AND SALT.

MATT. v. 13.—Ye are the salt of the earth.

Christians are light and salt. Thus said Jesus Christ:—Ye are the salt of the earth. . . . Ye are the light of the world. But salt must have saltness; and a candle to give light must burn. If the salt have lost his savour, wherewith shall it be salted? . . . . Neither do men light a candle, and put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick. Matt. v. 13—16.

We must have the grace of God in our hearts—must have salt in ourselves. Mark ix. 50. The candle must be lighted by divine grace, or it can give no light. The more salt the greater the savour; the more heat, the greater the light.

We are to keep our hearts with all diligence. Prov. iv. 23. And there are two reasons why we should cultivate the Christian graces in our own souls.

In the first place, it is only thus that we can be prepared to do good to others. Eminent holiness is essential to great usefulness. We cannot season others, if we have no salt in ourselves; we cannot give light to others, if we have not the flame of grace burning within us. Let your light shine, says the Saviour; but that it may shine, it must burn. The more it burns, the more it will shine.

But, in the next place, independently of the importance of this work—this inward growth—in its relation to others, it is the duty of every Christian to make progress in the divine life. We must grow in grace. 2 Pet. iii. 18. We must run with patience the race that is set before us. Heb. xii. 1, 2. We must fight in the Christian warfare. Eph. vi. 10—20. We must press toward the mark. Phil. iii. 12—14. Our own vineyards must be cultivated. Cant. i. 6. We must not be conformed to this world, but be transformed by the renewing of our minds. Rom. xii. 1, 2. Our aim should be to die unto sin, to live unto righteousness, and to become daily more and more like Christ. Then others will take knowledge of us that we have been with Jesus; and we shall then indeed be the light of the world, and the salt of the earth. Rom. vi. 11; Acts iv. 13.

Christians are not, and cannot be, too active; but would not their activity be more efficient for good, if they were more diligent in cultivating piety in their own hearts? And would not they thus become more prayerfully, more intelligently, and more benevolently active? Would not they thus better illustrate and justify their title, LIGHT AND SALT?

RELIGION OF THE CROSS.

"Reader, as long as you live, beware of a religion in which there is not much of the cross. You live in times when the warning is sadly needful. Beware, I say again, of a religion without the cross.

"There are hundreds of places of worship, in this day, in which there is every thing almost except the cross. There is carved oak and sculptured stone. There is stained glass and brilliant painting. There are solemn services and a constant round of ordinances. But the real cross of Christ is not there. Jesus crucified is not proclaimed in the pulpit. The Lamb of God is not lifted up, and salvation by faith in him is not freely proclaimed. And hence all is wrong. Reader, beware of such places of worship. They are not apostolical. They would not have satisfied Paul.

"There are thousands of religious books published in our times, in which there is every thing except the cross. They are full of directions about sacraments, and praises of the church. They abound in exhortations about holy living, and rules for the attainment of perfection. They have plenty of fonts and crosses, both inside and outside. But the real cross of Christ is left out. The Saviour and his dying love are either not mentioned, or mentioned in an unscriptural way. And hence they are worse than useless. Reader, beware of such books. They are not apostolical. They would never have satisfied Paul.

"Reader, Paul gloried in nothing but the cross. Strive to be like him. Set Jesus crucified fully before the eyes of your soul. Listen not to any teaching which would interpose anything between you and him. Do not fall into the old Galatian error. Think not that any one in this day is a better guide than the apostles. Do not be ashamed of the old paths, in which men walked who were inspired by the Holy Ghost. Let not the vague talk of men, who speak great swelling words about catholicity, and the church, and the ministry, disturb your peace, and make you loose your hands from the cross. Churches, ministers, and sacraments, are all useful in their way, but they are not Christ crucified."—Ryle.

From the Genesee Evangelist.

A CALVINISTIC DIVINE.

The late Professor B. B. Edwards, of Andover, is thus described in his "Theological Character and Position," by Professor Parks, in his admirable memoir:

"We think of him and should think of him, as a large-hearted Christian, and may dislike to have him styled a Calvinist, rather than a Lutheran. I should not render him entire justice, if I should insinuate that he loved to make the severer features of Calvinism prominent in his intercourse with men. Still, in a peculiar degree, his life developed the true spirit of a Calvinistic divine; a spirit which has not been commonly ascribed to the admirers of the Genevan creed; a spirit which has not been always harboured by them; the spirit, however, which is fostered by the reasonable and Biblical expositions of that sublime faith. He looked up to Jehovah as a Sovereign, and trembled before him. He would not boast, nor be egotistical; for all his powers and attainments he traced up to the everlasting decree, to the love which planned them before the foundation of the world. He stood with awe at the foot of the throne, which, resting on its own strength, is firm, changeless, immovable. He repeated with marked reverence the name of the great 'I Am.' He walked softly before the Monarch who elects one and abandons another. In the near prospect of seeing the Arbiter of his destinies face to face, he paused and was thoughtful, and bowed his head, and his words were few. 'Be still, and know that I am God,' was the phrase that ever subdued him. He was not dogmatical—how could he be, if he valued his creed?—for he knew the littleness of his powers, and counted himself to have no more than an insect's eye, and to be shut up to the vision of a mere small surface; and can such a man utter assuming and presumptuous and overbearing words? He did not calumniate his brethren—could he do so, if he fostered a hearty trust in the doctrines he professed?—for he had learned his own vileness, as well as that of his fellow-men, and he felt that both he and they deserved alike to be driven before the Lord as grains of chaff;—that instead of upbraiding his companions in evil, he should beg, from his place in the dust, 'God be merciful to me a sinner!' He knew, and he felt, that his heart was searched by the Ruler who killeth and who maketh alive, and that he was under the dominion of a Monarch who giveth no account of his matters to his servants, 'nor borrows leave to be;' and with these thoughts of his Judge, he was humble, and subdued, and still; he went to his grave, meditative and penitent, nor did he strive, nor cry, nor was his voice heard in the streets;—this is the true spirit of a Calvinistic divine."

TO THE PRESBYTERIES AND CHURCHES.

FUNDS NEEDED.

In order to obviate, if possible, the necessity of any sudden and embarrassing contraction in the appropriations of the Board towards the support of our missionaries, we feel it to be our duty seasonably to inform the Presbyteries and churches of our prospective pecuniary liabilities and necessities. We desire, by timely notice, to obviate, if practicable, the necessity of any contraction whatever; believing as we do that our missionaries are not receiving more than they should—not as much, in many cases, as they should be receiving—nor as much as the Church is abundantly able to afford. But as it will be impracticable to continue our appropriations, on their present scale, for any length of time, without greatly enlarged contributions from the churches, it is right that the Presbyteries and churches should know it, so that they may provide, in season, the requisite funds.

The appropriations of the Board, recommended, and in many cases earnestly pressed by the Presbyteries, have, during the first ten months of our present fiscal year, exceeded those made during the corresponding period of last year, about seventeen thousand dollars. The increase of appropriations at the office in Louisville has been, during the time just mentioned, about nine thousand dollars; and at the office in Philadelphia about eight thousand dollars: thus making the total excess of appropriations about seventeen thousand dollars. The receipts of the Board, during the same period, as far as ascertained, compared with the corresponding period of last year, have fallen off more than five thousand dollars!

With these facts before them, the Presbyteries and churches will plainly perceive that, unless either the appropriations are reduced, or the receipts largely increased, the balance which we had on hand at the commencement of this fiscal year will not only be exhausted in the course of time, but we shall be involved, inevitably, in debt.

Now what shall be done? The difficulty, it is true, is prospective; but the prudent man foreseeth the evil, and should adopt seasonable and adequate measures to avert it. We do not think the appropriations ought to be reduced, if the requisite means can be procured to meet them; because the missionaries in general are, as it is, inadequately supported; and any material reduction would prove not only painfully injurious to them and their families, but also decidedly adverse to the interests of the churches which they serve. Besides, much of this increase in the amount of our appropriations has been produced by the augmentation of the number of our missionaries, and the expensiveness of important and promising missions recently established, and which could not be relinquished without great damage to the cause.

What then shall be done? The answer is, let the churches contribute more generally and liberally to this important and urgent cause. There is abundant wealth in the Church to enable the Board to meet their prospective pecuniary liabilities—is there not grace enough to cause it to be consecrated to this object? Surely we ought not only to be able to sustain the comparatively small number of missionaries now employed, but, in view of the immense territory yet to be supplied with the preaching of the gospel, we ought to be able greatly to increase their number and efficiency.

But while we thus freely state our conviction of the duty and ability of the Church, and express our earnest desire to be able to continue the appropriations that are now made towards the support of our missionaries, we feel constrained to repeat the statement, that this, for any considerable time longer, will be impossible, unless the contributions of the churches are largely augmented. The Board cannot disburse more money than it receives. And if the brethren would deprecate any future contraction on the part of the Board, they must, by the blessing of God, induce the churches to be more liberal in their contributions.

Having thus seasonably and frankly stated the case, and made our appeal for supplies, if the necessity should be forced upon us to curtail our appropriations, we trust that no man will reflect upon the Board; but that those alone will be held responsible upon whom the responsibility justly rests, viz., those who have the pecuniary means in their possession, and yet withhold them from the treasury of the Lord!

ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS FOR CHURCH EXTENSION.

The proposition to raise one hundred thousand dollars for the erection of church edifices, has excited, as might have been anticipated, a lively interest; and we are beginning to receive, from various quarters, expressions of approbation and encouragement. Our religious press, so far as we have had an opportunity of observing, have seconded the motion with a promptitude and spirit worthy of the highest commendation; and for their manly, decided and energetic advocacy of it, we tender them our sincere thanks. We have now reason to hope that the measure so pregnant with good to the Church at large, and to innumerable communities in particular, will in due time, by the favour of God, be consummated. We rejoice in this hope, because we are deeply persuaded that greatly enlarged effort on the part of our Church, in this direction, is loudly called for, and that it would be followed by immeasurable good.

Hundreds of congregations might be gathered in various sections of our extended country, if suitable houses of worship could be erected for their accommodation. For the want of such accommodation, many Presbyterian families fall in with other sects who have church edifices, and are thus gradually absorbed by them. Many weak and feeble congregations, after struggling for a while without a house of worship, finally disband in discouragement, and become extinct. Many others are prevented from growing, as they otherwise would do, and are kept alive mainly by the sustentation afforded by the Board of Missions. With suitable church edifices, they would soon become not only self-sustaining, but contributing churches.

The want of suitable edifices not only embarrasses the Board in its efforts to extend the boundaries of our Church, but it vastly increases the expense of supporting the missionaries already located. As their congregations continue weak and feeble, of course they are unable to do much towards the temporal support of their pastors or stated supplies; and they must therefore be chiefly sustained by the Board. Besides, thousands of dollars are paid by the Board to the missionaries, above what would be otherwise required, because their poor and feeble congregations are making the effort to erect for themselves, without direct assistance from others, a house of worship. The Presbyteries frequently recommend us to continue, and sometimes to increase the salary of missionaries, because their people are making such efforts, and cannot therefore give what they otherwise could and would toward the maintenance of their ministers. And thus thousands of dollars are given to comparatively barren fields, which might under other circumstances be rendered fruitful, and thousands more are given, indirectly, towards the erection of church edifices, by the Board of Missions, which might be used by the Board for the support of additional missionaries, and in proclaiming the gospel to multitudes in other places, who are utterly destitute.

The sum proposed to be raised may appear to some to be too large; but considering the numbers and wealth of our denomination, it ought to be raised without difficulty. Other Churches, with not half the numbers and strength of ours, have raised an equal amount, and why cannot we? If the measure is heartily agreed upon, and then prosecuted with unanimity and energy, it can certainly be accomplished. And considering the urgent necessities of our people, scattered as they are throughout the land in small and feeble bands, ought not the effort to be made?

We would respectfully ask the editors of Presbyterian papers, who approve of the measure proposed, to keep the important object before their readers, and to use their potent influence towards its accomplishment. We would also respectfully suggest to our Presbyteries, to take this subject into consideration at their approaching sessions, and to instruct their Commissioners to the General Assembly, so that they may vote in accordance with the views and wishes of those whom they represent. We feel deeply interested in the honour, as well as the success of our beloved Church, and would much rather that the effort should not be made at all, than that it should be feebly and ineffectually attempted. With a vigorous and united effort, we have no doubt it would succeed, but not otherwise.

We subjoin the following letter, recently received from the chairman of a Presbyterial Committee. Similar statements are frequently made to us, from various parts of our country; and our present Church Extension Committee would gladly respond to them all, if they had the means at their disposal. We will only add, that the Committee, during the month of February, appropriated, to various churches, about two thousand dollars in advance of the treasury. Will not the benevolent replenish this exhausted fund?

Portage City, Wisconsin, Dec. 27th, 1853.
Rev. G. W. Musgrave, D. D.

Dear Sir—At the last meeting of the Presbytery of Winnebago, held at Dodge Centre, on the second Thursday of this month, a paper was received from the session of the First Presbyterian Church of Vineland, Winnebago county, asking to be recommended to the Church Extension Committee for aid to the amount of one hundred and fifty dollars ($150), in erecting a house of worship, to be erected and completed according to the rules and regulations of the Church Extension Committee. This request was granted, and the Committee of Missions of the Presbytery was ordered to forward the same to the Board. In performing this duty, the Committee would say that it seems absolutely necessary to the success of our enterprise in that region, that a house of worship be erected. The people have undertaken to build, expecting the above amount of aid, and if they are disappointed, our cause must suffer great embarrassment, and our church enterprise there prove, it may be, a complete failure. With a house of worship we hope there to build up a flourishing church and congregation. We must not fail for lack of the aid asked, if it is possible for it to be granted by the Extension Committee. It very often happens that the erection of a house of worship in a village or neighbourhood, is the only means of securing the ground or of building up a church. We have often found it true that a new era dawns upon the church as soon as a house of worship is completed. And every dollar wisely expended in aiding feeble churches to erect new houses of worship, really saves to the Board of Missions twice the amount thus expended. A church can do but little towards the support of the gospel until they have a house of worship. It is easier for a congregation to raise $300 for a minister when they have a good house finished, free of debt, than to raise half the amount without a house. We are becoming more and more convinced of the wisdom and economy of the Church Extension Scheme, and we hope you will be able to grant the application of our Presbytery for the church of Vineland. Fraternally yours W. W. McN.

A MISSIONARY FIELD NEAR HOME.

There is usually so much more of romance associated in the minds of our young men, with missionary labours in some new State or vast territory in our own country, or in some mysterious and populous kingdom abroad, that I am afraid a call from a field like that I labour in, will scarcely be regarded by the sons of the church. It is simply a call for two or three hardy and enterprizing young men to come into Bedford county, Pennsylvania, and engage in the work of making the wilderness and the solitary places glad, and the desert to rejoice and blossom as the rose. Here is one of the old counties of the Keystone State, which, notwithstanding the fact that it has been frequently clipped to make new counties, is still of goodly dimensions, and I am the only Presbyterian pastor in it. Here is a large corner of the venerable Presbytery of Carlisle, which is yet virgin soil; here is a large field white to the harvest. Romanism, Quakerism, Campbellism, and other wild plants, both new and old, have sprung up in this field. It is high time for the true vine to be planted and tended. The people are ready, and in some places quite anxious, for the old-fashioned preaching. The ————, always wide awake, see that here is a goodly field for cultivation, and as is very natural, they are straining every nerve to occupy the county. Two or three faithful Presbyterian ministers could lift up a standard against them to some purpose. The people would soon see, I am satisfied, that the old wine of Presbyterianism is better than the new wine of ————.

My own charge ought to be divided, and it would give sufficient employment to two men, where one is overburthened now. Besides this, a pleasant pastoral charge could be formed, at once, in the eastern part of the county. Then, in the western part, missionary labour is most loudly called for, and my opinion is that a convenient pastoral charge could be formed on that side of the county also. I shall be all impatience till two or three other labourers are in this inviting field.

Let me ask the young brother who will leave the Seminary next spring, and knows not where to pitch his tent, Are you fond of the grand and beautiful in nature? Here we have the most varied and charming scenery. Are you fond of poetry? Here among our mountains, you will have opportunity to cultivate your taste. Are you a lover of the natural sciences? Here you will be surrounded with abundant materials for study. Do you wish to lay a good foundation for future usefulness, by taking active exercise in a pure and healthful air? Here is the place for you. Have you any fondness (as I must confess I have,) for mingling with a plain, honest and hospitable rural population, remote from cities and railroads with their demoralizing influences, such as live in great comfort and independence in the peaceful, lovely valleys that run among these hills? Come then to Bedford county; and if you are fond of a change, you will find, during the summer months, many hundreds of cultivated people, from different parts of our land, attracted hither by our far-famed healing waters and mountain scenery. Above all, are you willing to labour in a quiet way, in an out of the way corner, for the instruction and salvation of very many precious souls, now ignorant of that simple, sublime and eternal truth it is our privilege, as Presbyterians, to preach? Then, come over and help us, in these ends of the earth.

INTERESTING INCIDENTS.

Rev. and dear Brother:—During the last three months of my labours in this field, the Lord has not, indeed, visited us, as he has other churches, with a great revival of religion; and yet he has been present with us in such a manner, as greatly to encourage us to press on in the performance of duty, trusting in his free and unfailing mercy. Several cases have come to my knowledge of persons who seem to be in earnest, inquiring after the way of life. About six weeks ago I was requested to visit a man who, I was told, was deeply concerned about his soul, but from diffidence or some other cause, was endeavouring to conceal his true feelings. I found him labouring under a sense of guilt. He said he felt himself to be a sinner, lost and ruined, and that his only hope was in the mercy of God through Christ. But how "to come to Christ," how "to receive Him"—ah! that was the difficulty. I left him, earnestly praying in my heart, that if the Holy Spirit has opened his eyes to see his sins, he would also open his eyes to see Jesus a Saviour, almighty, and infinitely precious.

There is a boy of some promise, about fifteen years of age, in the school at ——, who has been for a long time in an interesting state of mind. I believe him to be a converted youth. The account which he gives of himself is, that a year ago he had been employed to carry the mail on horseback, on the Sabbath, a distance of forty miles. Knowing that it was wrong, it required some persuasion from the contractor and others, to induce him to undertake it. But he was far from being satisfied. Alone on the road he thought of his desecration of the Sabbath, and conscience lashed him. He thought of his now vacant seat in the Sabbath-school, and in the sanctuary of God, and he became much troubled. In a short time he felt constrained to abandon such a course as sinful. But conviction of sin fastened in his soul, and he could find no peace until he sought it in Christ.

The preaching of the word has been attended with increasing seriousness at all my different stations. The Sabbath-school for coloured persons at —— is in a flourishing condition. The scholars generally take an interest in it, attend punctually, and learn readily. The Sabbath-school for the whites is not as prosperous as it has been, though sufficient causes may be assigned for its declension.

The Lord has afflicted our little church by taking away some of her most valuable members. Three years ago Mr. ——, at the age of seventy-six, and very infirm, walked sixteen miles from home, to enjoy the privilege of sitting down with the people of God around the table of the Lord. For thirty years previous to that time, during which period there was no Presbyterian church organization in less than a hundred miles of this place, he stood, a burning light in the midst of darkness. And to the last moment of his life, he continued to witness a good confession. On Friday, the 4th of November, after a brief illness, he fell asleep. Another aged disciple, Mr. ——, more than eighty years old, very poor, and dependent on his own hard labour for a scanty subsistence, requested me last summer to procure for him Scott's Family Bible. I wrote to Philadelphia for it; but before the books arrived, I was informed that our friend would probably not want them. A stroke of paralysis had laid him on his bed. Unable to move a limb, or even to speak, he still seemed happy, a cheerful smile always on his face. I hope the Lord will sustain him.

A CALL FOR MISSIONARIES.

We direct the attention of our ministerial brethren, who may be inquiring for fields of labour, to the following communication from one of our missionaries in Indiana. If any are disposed to respond to his appeal, they will please address the Corresponding Secretary at this office.

Dear Sir—As this is the first report I have presented to the Board during the current year for which I have your commission, it is due that I should inform you of the reasons for this delay. The two most prominent were ill health and extra labour. Besides my pastoral charge, which extends over more than half the county in which I reside, I have given voluntarily a partial supply to a feeble little church in an adjoining county, and to two or three destitute missionary neighbourhoods. In addition to this, I was appointed by Presbytery a member of a committee for a voluntary exploring agency in the southern and eastern portions of our territory. This work required a good deal of time and labour, and is not yet completed. But our investigations, as far as conducted, have served to develope certain facts, pleasing and painful. Pleasing, that God in his providence has opened up to us a wide and promising field just at our doors. Painful, that we have neither the men nor the means in our Presbytery, nor can we obtain them from abroad, to cultivate this field. Pleasing, that while in this wide missionary field, where there are but few members of the Presbyterian Church, the members of other Churches, and prominent persons not members of any Church, should show such special kindness to Presbyterian ministers, and express their decided preference for, and their earnest desire to obtain such preaching.

Painful, that with our present force we cannot meet such a felt want and expressed desire. Pleasing, to find so many baptized members, who, though they have been living for years carelessly and secure, without the word and ordinances of the gospel; yet when permitted again to hear them administered as they did in infancy and youth, are led to sigh for the return of such privileges, and lament with bitter tears the condition of their children growing up without such training. Painful, to leave them with half-formed resolutions of amendment amidst the allurements to worldliness, vice, and soul-destroying errors by which they are surrounded. I would be glad if the other members of this exploring committee who can wield a pen for the edification and interest of the public, would furnish you a few paragraphs for the "Record" in reference to this field; for surely it ought to be occupied. It is entirely missionary ground. Who is there of all the sons of the prophets, the Lord his God helping him, will rise and build this waste place? Who is desirous of imitating the apostle who desired not to build on any man's foundation? Let such an one "come over and help us." W. M. D.

AN INTERESTING REPORT.

To the Cor. Sec. of the Board of Missions.

Rev. and Dear Sir—Once more it becomes my duty and my privilege to report to the Board my labours for another quarter. I have endeavoured, as God has given me strength, to perform my pastoral duties; and as in former times, and as with all pastors, I have had my discouragements and my encouragements. At times all has seemed dark, and again light has shone on my pathway. At the present time I can "thank God and take courage." We have within the last four weeks administered the sacraments in both our churches. In the H—— church we had a pleasant meeting, but nothing of special interest. In the B——— church we had a refreshing season. We have never experienced more signal manifestations of God's spirit and presence among us. The members of the church were greatly revived, and sinners were brought to feel and to inquire. Three weeks have elapsed, and the interest remains unabated. We are now holding a series of meetings which I trust will result in much good. Four young ladies were received on profession of their faith; other persons are seeking, and perhaps three or four are prepared to seek admittance into the church.

It is with us in this community as it has been elsewhere, and for the last century. Those who are seeking and hope ere long to be within the pale of the visible church, are obliged to listen to the misrepresentations of our doctrines. All the horrible things imaginable, almost, are represented as contained in that dreadful book "The Confession of Faith." When a sinner inquires, "What must I do to be saved?" there are those, making high pretensions to piety, ready to step forward and say to them, "As you value your soul, have nothing to do with the Confession of Faith nor the Presbyterian Church." But in the face of all opposition, God is doing a work "for us, whereof we are glad." Truth is mighty, for it is the power of God and the wisdom of God unto salvation.

Our people feel more encouraged now than they have done for two or three years. In the present aspect of things, I do rejoice, and yet I feel humbled that it should please God to bless one so unworthy. I might add many things, but at present

I forbear, hoping to be able hereafter to speak more definitely in reference to the work of grace now going on among us. W. M. R.

SPECIAL REPORT.

We would again earnestly request our missionaries to make their Special Report up to the first of March, and to return it immediately after date, under an envelope, to the Corresponding Secretary of the Board at Philadelphia. It is very important that we should receive a report from every missionary, and that it should be full and accurate. Punctuality in this matter would also greatly oblige us.

HONORARY MEMBERS.

The sum of Fifty Dollars constitutes a person an Honorary Member of the Board of Missions.

Honorary Members have a right to sit in the meetings of the Board, and engage in their deliberations, but have no right to vote. A copy of the Annual Report is sent to them every year.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST.

To the Trustees of the Board of Missions of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, and to their successors and assigns, I give and bequeath the sum of ——, or I devise a certain messuage, and tract of land, &c., to be held by the said Trustees, and their successors for ever, to and for the uses, and under the direction of the said Board of Missions of the said General Assembly, according to the provisions of their charter.

☞ Persons making bequests to the Board of Missions are requested to be careful in adopting the above form.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

PASTORAL LETTER.

In accordance with the practice of past years, a pastoral letter is issued this month to candidates for the ministry. The letter has been drawn up, in the midst of many engagements, for the special purpose of endeavouring to promote the edification of our young brethren in Christ. May the blessing of God attend this humble effort in their behalf!

A PASTORAL LETTER

TO CANDIDATES FOR THE GOSPEL MINISTRY.

Issued by the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church.

PRESBYTERIAN EDUCATION ROOMS,
Philadelphia, February, 1854.

Dear Brother—Allow us, in the discharge of official duty, and with the freedom and affection of Christian intercourse, to direct your meditations for a short time, to a subject which might claim a discourse, rather than a letter—CHRIST THE MODEL AND HELP OF THE CANDIDATE FOR THE MINISTRY.

Halyburton, on his dying bed, exclaimed, "Oh! that the ministry of Scotland may be kept from destroying the kirk of Scotland!" The best security of the Church in every age, is to have her candidates and ministers imbued with the spirit, grace, and power of Christ.

I. Christ is the model and help of the candidate, in the primary work of PERSONAL RELIGION. "He was holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners." Perfect holiness, like a divine effulgence, shone through his human nature. Made under the law, he obeyed its requirements, and fulfilled all righteousness. His unspotted life is the practical standard of moral excellence, and a perpetual plea for holiness in all his disciples and ministers. Official rank in the Church, or the prospect of soon possessing it, confers no exemption from self-examination or holy concern; but, on the contrary, urges to it. A man who preaches salvation to others, may be, alas! himself a castaway. Pardon and acceptance are found only in the Mediator between God and man. "Being justified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus." Christ is necessary to the candidate, in securing, in retaining, and in confirming the evidence of a gracious state. For it is "through Him that we have access into this grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God."

Piety begun, will, if genuine, increase in vigour; but only in virtue of a union to Christ. Sanctification is the work of the Spirit, but of the Spirit working within those who receive their title in the Redeemer of God's elect. "Ye are sanctified, ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God." All true religion, since the fall, has been nurtured by faith. It is one of the worst evils of "philosophy falsely so called" to remove Christ from the daily workings of religious experience, and to tempt the soul to rely upon itself, instead of divine power. Christ is the believer's righteousness and sanctification. Each and all, candidates and ministers, should strive to make him their model and their hope in the religious life, exclaiming with Paul, "Christ liveth in me; and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me." Then would salvation be written on the walls of the sanctuary, and praise upon its gates.

II. Christ is the model and help of the candidate in HIS CALL TO THE MINISTRY. Our blessed Lord was commissioned from heaven, in the councils of eternity, to carry on the covenant work of redemption. He came, in accordance with the divine decree, "Lo, I come; in the volume of the book it is written of me, to do thy will, O God." At his public inauguration into office, by the baptism of John, a voice from heaven declared, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." The divinity of his call was the glorious sanction of his work. And all who follow him in proclaiming the gospel, must possess, as their authority, a divine commission. Piety, although an indispensable qualification for the sacred office, is not the only passport to an entrance upon its functions. Accompanying all gifts and graces, there must be the inward conviction that the individual is divinely designated to this particular calling. It not unfrequently happens that the question of personal duty is of no easy solution. Even after it has been once settled with apparent satisfaction, difficulties and temptations occur to reopen its discussion with painful perplexity. To whom can the candidate look, in his doubts and fears, but to his Saviour? "The Lord of the harvest" alone has the right to "send forth labourers into his harvest;" and his sovereign authority over this high subject he will not, any more than his omnipotence, delegate to a mortal. He invites his disciples always to come to him in their difficulties. Prayer must be offered; rational self-examination be instituted; and the indications of Providence and grace reviewed with care. In such an exigency, there is no friend like Christ. "When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts to men;" and he gave apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers. He exercises exclusive control in commissioning ambassadors, as among the prerogatives of the King of Zion. It is of infinite moment to the student to have an assurance of being in the path of duty. "A divine call to the ministry is every thing to the candidate. Let him, therefore, not move a step without it; else he may damage his reputation, involve himself in extreme difficulty, and embitter the whole of life, and above all, sow his dying pillow with thorns! Let your appointment to the Christian ministry be divine, not human, and originate, not from earth, but from heaven. Then 'God will bless you and make you a blessing;' you will walk in the light by which the blessed Redeemer himself surrounds you, and be the highly-favoured instrument of conveying divine light to others."

III. Christ is the model and help of the candidate in HIS PREPARATIONS FOR THE SACRED OFFICE. Our Saviour took time—with reverence be it spoken—in qualifying himself for his great work. He grew in wisdom and in favour, with God and man. His human nature was developed by meditation, self-discipline, prayer and mature preparation. Instead of hasting into the public functions of his office, he abode his time; and can it be doubted that that time was spent in diligent mental and moral advancement, preliminary to the great work of redemption? O, that all students would learn to know the grace, as well as the wisdom of waiting, and that they would look to Christ as the model of mature attainment and thorough preparation!

Christ is the "Prophet" of his people. It is his office-work to teach, to lead the mind into truth, to communicate right moral discernment and to fortify against error. Doddridge used to affirm that he never studied to such advantage, as when refreshed by communion with Christ. Is not this the experience of every pious student in our colleges and seminaries? There is no aid in the acquisition of true knowledge like that afforded by the Spirit of God. The right temper of mind in conducting investigations, especially theological, is derived from intercourse with Him, who was "the way, the truth and the life." The great end of learning is most effectually retained in the soul by thoughts of the Redeemer. Clearness of intellectual vision is secured, in reference to the knowledge of the Bible. "Did not our hearts burn within us, while he talked with us by the way, and while he opened to us the Scriptures?" Diligence in pursuing our studies, and in "redeeming the time," is inculcated by the precepts of the religion of Christ. In short, if there be any occupation which needs the sympathy and aid of the Master, it is that of the student preparing for the work of the ministry.

Literary pursuits are snares to piety, and the heart must keep a watch over them. The errors and heresies in the Church have been the offspring of unsanctified learning. And no period, since the Reformation, requires more vigilance than the present, in order to prevent the contamination of students by the teachings of crafty philosophers and open errorists. To look to Christ as your model, and to rely upon him for conforming to it, will be your best security, dear brother, for the sanctification of your attainments, and the consecration of your intellect to the glory of Him, who hath called you.

IV. Christ is necessary to the candidate IN REGULATING HIS INTERCOURSE WITH OTHERS. The character of Christ illustrates every grace. Meek, patient, condescending, sociable, kind, instructive, loving, the complete circle of virtues irradiated his presence, and the majesty of his mission flashed forth from the centre-glory for them all.

Many eyes are directed towards the young student on account of the prominence of his profession, and the censoriousness natural to corrupt human nature. How important for him to study Christ as a perfect model of social intercourse. To say nothing of intercourse with the world, the example of a candidate for the ministry among his fellow-students and companions needs the careful regulation of Christian principle. A College, or a Theological Seminary, affords severe tests of character. Temptations exist everywhere. Young men, in the glow of ingenuous years, are often liable to injury—all unconsciously—from the influences of unguarded social intercourse. Without entering into particulars, we will only say, that the best protection from all such dangers is to live near to Christ. He is our great exemplar. In following Him, we shall not only avoid injuring others and being injured ourselves, but our whole intercourse may be precious and edifying in its influence.

V. Christ is the help of the candidate IN TRIALS AND SORROWS. Whilst preparation for the ministry opens many sources of true delight, it does not reverse the decree of Providence, that man's inheritance is "full of trouble." Inward grief and outward trials are the allotment of our earthly condition. Most candidates have to endure hardships, even in securing the means of subsistence during their preparation for the ministerial office. But how less severe than those of Christ himself, in his mission of love! "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head;"—distinctly intimating that his mode of life was precarious, and far from possessing the comforts or the certainties of a regular maintenance. "The women" who followed him, "ministered unto him of their substance." Our Lord had all kinds of sorrow, the sorrows of sin excepted, in greater abundance than any of his disciples and servants. The scoffs and jeers of Pharisee and Sadducee; the rejection of his claims as Messiah; the comparative unprofitableness of his ministry; the stupidity and ingratitude of the people in view of his miracles and teachings; the agony and bloody sweat—the trial—the buffetings—the crucifixion! "He was a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief." And every sorrow was sanctified to the perfect discharge of the office of Mediator. "Though he were a son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered." Great moral purposes are likewise secured by the sufferings of every candidate and of every minister. Glory be to the name of Christ, he loves to sympathize with his faithful servants! "In all their afflictions, he is afflicted." He invites them to rest their burden upon his own Almighty arm. He is the sure support and stay of all that put their trust in him. Says Melancthon, "Trouble drives me to Christ, and Christ drives away trouble." The Apostle Peter says, "Casting all your care upon him, for he careth for you." Lord, be thou our model in suffering, and thou our help in enduring!

VI. Christ is necessary to the candidate in INSPIRING HIM WITH COMPASSION FOR THE SOULS OF MEN. One of the pre-eminent traits in a Christian minister is an interest in the eternal welfare of others. The world knows nothing of this spirit. Philosophy cannot teach it, and hypocrisy can but feebly imitate it. It is the "unction from the Holy One," the baptism from on high, that alone can call forth the gracious exercise of spiritual sensibility. Our Lord "came to seek and to save that which was lost." Salvation was the great purpose of his life and death. He preached salvation to all classes, especially to the poor. He was ever intent on the objects of his mission of mercy. He taught and he wrought for the welfare of souls—of immortal souls, So must the Christian minister ever do. He must be "as one that serveth." The master-passion of the heart, in all official work, must be the good of others. He must be ready to exclaim with Paul, "God hath committed unto us the ministry of reconciliation. "Now, then, we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you, in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God." This spirit of compassion for sinners ready to perish, is the product of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and it must be nurtured and invigorated by faith. Communion with, and dependence upon, the Saviour, is the great method of imbibing his love, and of doing his work. A Church must wither away and perish, that encourages any to enter her pulpits with hearts unconcerned for the destiny of immortal souls. Where else but in the life of Christ, and at the foot of his cross, can spiritual zeal repair its wastes, and be continually re-invigorated for holy service?

VII. Christ is the model and the help of the candidate IN LIVING TO GLORIFY GOD. The ruin which sin has made in the world is visible in the exaltation of the creature above the Creator. Grace, in re-establishing God's dominion in the soul, still has to contend with lingering corruption, which tempts and taints all our desires, and aims, and motives. In contrast with this degradation, Christ exhibits human nature aspiring with ceaseless love after the glory of the King of heaven. "Not my will, but thine be done," was the witness of the Saviour's life. Every word spoken, every miracle performed, every prayed offered, every trial and agony endured, bore relation to the glory of his heavenly Father. "I have glorified thee on earth; I have finished the work thou gavest me to do." How important for a candidate and a minister to learn of Christ "the chief end of man," and to strive to glorify God, whether in life or in death! And as Christ is the model of this holy attainment, so is he our help in making it our own. May the Saviour's grace mortify the self-seeking, and the low, sinful ambition of the human heart, and imbue all candidates and ministers with an earnest longing to promote the glory of God in all that they do or suffer!

In concluding this pastoral letter to our young brethren in the Lord, we pray that each, in particular, may duly consider its contents; and exalt Christ as a model and a help in preparing for the office of the gospel ministry.

We are affectionately,

Yours in Christ,

C. VAN RENSSELAER,

WILLIAM CHESTER.

In behalf of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church.

WANT OF CANDIDATES IN CANADA.

The Presbyterian Church in Canada is suffering, in common with different churches in this country, from the unwillingness of her pious young men to enter upon the work of the ministry. The "Ecclesiastical and Missionary Record" takes the following view of the subject:

"Certain it is that, compared with the number of young men who are betaking themselves to mercantile pursuits, or other secular professions, those who are devoting themselves to the work of the ministry are few indeed. To what cause or causes are we to attribute this? Undoubtedly one cause is the growing worldliness of the age, the growing influence of secular things. There is excitement, there is life, there is activity amongst us, but these are taking the direction of the world. Men love the world and the things of the world, and seek first, not the kingdom of God and his righteousness, but the riches and distinction of the world. Old and young are too generally more or less under the influence of this spirit. And hence few of our young men are led to give themselves to the work of the ministry, and, it may be, few parents seek to give this direction to the minds of their sons. But while this may be viewed as partly accounting for the fact to which we have referred, we apprehend other causes may be found, especially the low estimate which congregations in general form of the value of ministerial services. The minister of the gospel has to spend, it may be, eight or ten years in preparing for his work, and when he enters on his work, he has to supply himself with books, he has to exercise hospitality, he may have to support and educate a family, he has to maintain a respectable style of living, on perhaps the slender pittance of a hundred pounds, and sometimes less. Now, we do not believe that mercenary motives should be presented to the minds of our young men; neither do we desire to see ministers with more than a competency; but still, ministers are but men; they cannot live without a share of worldly substance, however elevated their piety may be, and however spiritually minded they may be. And here, we doubt not, is one cause, which has in all churches in the present day thinned the ranks of candidates for the ministry. We recommend the subject to the deep and earnest and prayerful consideration of Christians, both ministers and people. It is well worthy of such consideration. In the meantime, we conclude, with the earnest prayer, that God would pour out his Spirit upon his professing people, that they may be led to consider themselves as a living sacrifice, and that many may be constrained to offer themselves to the Lord, saying, "LORD, I AM THINE;" "HERE AM I, SEND ME."

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION
IN SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

CARROLL COLLEGE, WISCONSIN.

Dr. Savage, President of Carroll College, has been prosecuting, in New York and vicinity, for a few weeks past, an agency in behalf of the endowment of the institution. We are pleased to learn that very gratifying success has attended his labours, and that there is every reason to believe that, with the blessing of God, the endowment of at least one professorship will be accomplished.

From the Presbyterian Herald.

WAVELAND PRESBYTERIAL ACADEMY.

The prospects of this institution are flattering; so much so that we feel justified to call the attention of the public to the facilities which it affords, for educating both male and female.

Some four years ago, the friends of Education in Crawfordsville Presbytery, feeling the need of a good school to prepare young men for college, established this institution at Waveland, intending to make it a first-class classical Academy, nor have they been disappointed. Since its commencement it has passed into the hands of various teachers, whose connection with the Academy, owing to circumstances, was transient. Yet the reputation of the school gradually increased. The present Board of Instructors are Henry S. Kritz and John M. Coyner, graduates of Hanover College; who have been connected with the Academy over a year, and who intend becoming permanent teachers. As to their ability in imparting instruction, and in government, the prosperity of the school since their connection with it is abundant evidence.

Much might be said of the facilities here afforded for the education of the young, but we will notice a few facts which are worthy of special notice. It is a lamentable fact, that many of our institutions of learning are situated where there are many temptations and allurements to draw the student's attention not only from study, but to lead him into vice of almost every description; but at Waveland we find, comparatively speaking, none of these. In the language of another, writing of this place, "there is not a doggery in the place, and I did not see a loafer while I was there." Seldom is a profane word heard, and travellers often remark, "What a quiet village!—what enterprise and thrift!" The government of the Institution is parental in its nature. Parents putting their children under the special care of the instructors, may feel that a strict care will be kept over their habits, moral, intellectual and physical. Special care is taken to improve the heart as well as the mind, and to this end our Bible is made the text book. Let our youth be educated in its divine precepts, and we need not fear any power—either the Pope or the devil—taking that precious book from our children.

Students are boarded in private families, where the family relations are still thrown around them, at $1,50 per week. Tuition varies from $3 to $7 per quarter, of thirteen weeks each.

The last term closed with a course of lectures by

E. W. Fish, of Terre Haute, on Physical Geography, which were very instructive, and well calculated to lead the inquiring mind into the vast regions of thought, which are connected with this branch of science.

On the evening of the ——, the Union Literary Society was addressed, by the same gentleman, in a very able manner, upon the subject of Reform, Christianity being its true element.

We would not close without referring to the fine Literary Society connected with the Academy, and also good philosophical apparatus, maps, library, &c., which afford unusual facilities for the student.

M.

YORKVILLE FEMALE ACADEMY.

The Presbytery of Bethel, South Carolina, have established a female college at Yorkville, South Carolina, and have elected the Rev. J. Munroe Anderson Principal. We understand that the institution opened with 59 pupils. Thus Providence favours it from the beginning. The following is an extract from a letter received from the Rev. P. E. Bishop:

"Believing that you take much interest in all things relating to education, and especially in all the efforts of the Presbyterian Church to secure sound religious instruction in our seminaries of learning, I send you the circular announcing the opening of the Presbyterial Female College at Yorkville, S. C. This institution has been before the minds of the members of Bethel Presbytery more than twelve months. It has received a good degree of serious thought, effort, and, we hope, of believing prayer also. Yorkville is a beautiful and very thriving village, at the terminus of the King's Mountain Railroad, about half a day's ride from the famous battle-ground of that name. It has a high and healthy location; and is in the midst of an intelligent, thriving, moral and religious population; a large portion of which is Presbyterian. We fondly hope there is a bright future before this young Presbyterial Institution."

AUSTIN COLLEGE, TEXAS.

Austin College, Texas, is now in full and successful operation.

FACULTY.

Rev. D. Baker, D. D., President and Professor of Mental and Moral Science.

Rev. A. E. Thom, Professor of Mathematics and Natural Sciences.

Rev. N. A. Penland, A. M., Professor of Ancient and Modern Languages.

Rev. W. C. Somerville, A. M., Adjunct Professor of Languages.

The new edifice is now finished. The College has a fine Philosophical and Chemical Apparatus, quite a good Library for a beginning, a collection of Geological and Mineralogical specimens, and a small Museum of curiosities, &c. Regular college classes are organized, and there will be some graduates next June.

The present session opened with an encouraging increase of students. The College has the favour of the community, and, with the blessing of God, we confidently expect its success.

A SCHOOL IN ILLINOIS.

"The session of our Church are happy to report, that the Parochial School under our care has been prospered far beyond our expectations. Our first term commenced July 18th. It was opened with more than forty scholars, and closed with upwards of sixty. The second term was opened with fifty-three, and closed with one hundred and two. The present term commenced January 16, and now at the end of two weeks our number is sixty-nine, and will probably increase to near one hundred. About one-third are from twelve to twenty-five years of age, and a number are preparing themselves to be teachers. The school is patronized by all religious sects. The last term, five ministers, of as many different orders, sent children, amounting to fourteen in all.

The Catechism and Scripture lessons are recited by the larger portion of the school, and there is no special objection made to the course pursued. A number of communicants of different religious orders have been and still are members of the school.

During the last three months, a number of the pupils of another denomination have professed hope in Christ. We cannot say that their religious impressions were first received in the schoolroom, but their sober manners produced a good effect upon the school.

A good portion of the school have learned the Assembly's Catechism. Thirteen have learned to recite at one recitation the Sermon on the Mount, and about the same number are now learning it. Some are on the Epistle of James, and one is learning Fisher's Catechism. Therefore, we thank God and take courage, confidently hoping that our labour will not be in vain.

SCHOLARSHIPS.

The sum of Seventy-five dollars forms a scholarship to assist a student in the collegiate course, and the sum of One Hundred dollars in the theological course.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,
No. 23 Centre Street, New York.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

Mission House, February 13, 1854.

India.—Letters have been received from Allahabad, November 13th, 14th, and 15th; from Furrukhabad, November 4th; from Agra, November 7th and 19th, and December 7th; Futtehgurh, December 3d; Lahor, November 15th; Lodiana, November 19th, 21st, and December 6th.

Mr. Owen, in a letter from Allahabad, gives an account of the opening of a Christian school, under the direction of the mission, at Banda, by two native converts, by the names of Paul and Jacobus. The opening of this school had occasioned some opposition on the part of the native population of the place, but it was not expected to be serious, or of long continuance. The first day of the school, there were 26 pupils in attendance, and two days after, the number had increased to 50.

Banda is the centre of a large and populous district, in which missionary operations had hitherto been almost entirely unknown. The European population show a decided interest in the school, and contribute 80 or 90 rupees per month towards its support. The Nawab of Banda has added 25 rupees more for its current expenses, and 100 rupees as a donation for general purposes. These, with other contributions which are expected, will aid materially in support of the school. Rev. Gopee Nath Nundy, native preacher, is spoken of as doing a good and great work at Futthepore.

Our letters from Agra speak of the good health of the members of the mission, and mention the departure of Rev. Joseph Warren and his family from that place for Calcutta, on their way to this country. Mr. Seeley and his children, partly on account of his enfeebled health, and partly with the view of getting a home for his motherless children, are also on their way to this country.—Mr. Jamieson mentions the admission to the church at Ambala of a Hindu young man, who, it was hoped, will walk worthy of his Christian profession.

China.—Letters from the Canton mission are dated November 25th; Ningpo, November 5th; and Shanghai, November 19th.

Rev. A. P. Happer mentions, that the house intended for the female scholars, to be under the care of his wife, had been completed, and a few girls would be received in the course of three or four days. In all previous efforts to establish female schools at this place, the main difficulty has been to get the requisite number of girls, but in this instance, the number of applicants for admission was more than could be received, so that the more promising only would be selected as scholars.

Hostilities were still continued at Shanghai, and our missionary brethren have been compelled to withdraw from their former abodes in the city, in consequence of the exposed situation of their houses. Their chapel in the city had also been closed, on account of the difficulty of ingress and egress in the presence of the besieging army. It is not thought, however, that the present state of things will continue long. Those of the brethren who are engaged in translating, carry on their work without interruption.

We are happy to learn that Mr. Wight, whose health was not good when we heard last, is in the enjoyment of better health.

Our letters from Ningpo mention that most of the missionaries, as also all the foreign population, had suffered more or less from chills and fevers, which it was thought had been occasioned by the excessive summer rains. There was a general improvement in health at the time our letters were written.

Mr. Rankin mentions the peaceful death of a Christian convert by the name of Ajing, from an attack of cholera. He mentions also, that several youths in the school were serious, and inquiring what they must do to be saved.

Africa.—Our letters from the Liberia Mission are dated from Sinou, December 12th, and from Monrovia, December 8th. The latest from the Corisco Mission are October 4th. The members of both missions, at the date of their respective letters, were in the enjoyment of their usual health, and were prosecuting their labours without interruption.

Those of our readers who contributed, a short time since, to effect the emancipation of a coloured member of our church in the Choctaw country, by the name of Simon Harrison, with the view of his going to Liberia as a missionary, will be pleased to hear a good account of this man in his new home. Rev. David A. Wilson, in a letter from Monrovia, December 8th, says: "I had quite an encouraging letter from Uncle Simon Harrison a few days since. He tells me that four men had united with him as Presbyterians; and that they have been holding services on the Sabbath, and have had a weekly prayer-meeting, which has been well attended; besides which they have organized a Sabbath-school with nearly forty scholars, and they have some forty or fifty dollars promised towards building a church. The old man is full of zeal and hope, and thinks he has had manifest tokens of the divine blessing upon his labours."

Mr. Mackey, of the Corisco Mission, had just returned from a long tour in the interior, an account of which is given in the present number of the Record. Mr. McQueen, of the same station, had been employed in the meantime in the study of the language, and with his duties in the school.

Indian Tribes.—Letters have been received from the Choctaw Mission, January 6th; Creek Mission, January 3d; Chickasaw, December 28th, and January 5th; Otoe and Omaha, January 10th; Iowa and Sac, December 28th; and from the Chippewa Mission, January 5th, 15th, and 23d.

Mr. Templeton, of the Kowetah station, Creek Mission, speaks of having been sorely tried the last year, from the want of suitable assistants in the missionary work; but adds, "The year has also had its scenes of delight. Three of our dear scholars have been received into the church, and others are giving signs of seriousness; and one who was received to the church some time since, has commenced the study of the Latin, with the ministry in view."

Mr. Hamilton, of the Otoe and Omaha Mission, speaking of the labours of the female members of that station, especially in preparing clothing for the children of the boarding-school, casually makes a remark, which we think it not out of place to quote: "If the young ladies of our churches knew how some of their companions on heathen ground had to stitch, stitch, stitch, from morning till ten and eleven o'clock at night, till their fingers were sore from day to day, they would cheerfully do a little more to help forward this good work."

Mr. Dougherty, of the Chippewa Mission, writes, that the boarding-school at the new station now embraces thirty-four pupils, of whom twenty-three are males, and eleven females, varying from seven to sixteen years of age. He states that there are besides many applicants for admission to the school, and he makes an earnest appeal to the Executive Committee for the means of increasing the number, which, we are glad to say, has been granted.

The day-schools at Little Traverse and at Middle Village are also reported as being in a prosperous condition, embracing each between thirty and forty pupils.

The Papal missionaries, in the same region, are doing a great deal to prejudice the minds of the Indians against our missionary brethren there, but thus far, we are happy to say, without doing them any very serious injury.

European Missions.—Letters have been received from Rev. Dr. J. P. Revel, of the Waldensian Church, January 2, and from the Rev. Dr. J. H. Grandpierre, of Paris, of the 12th and 18th January, both of whom gratefully acknowledge the pecuniary aid which they have received from the Executive Committee for carrying on their work. Dr. Revel mentions the public dedication of the new church at Turin, on the 15th December, and says that it is favourably regarded by the people of Turin, by the town council, and by the Government, for which he testifies his ardent gratitude to God.

Dr. Grandpierre also gives some interesting facts in relation to the progress of evangelical religion in France, but adds, that they are most bitterly opposed by the Roman Catholic party; and he calls upon Christians in this country to pray for the blessing of God to rest upon their efforts to protect the cause of truth and evangelical religion.

Death of a Missionary.—We are under the painful necessity of announcing the death of Rev. Joseph Porter, of the Lodiana Mission. This sad event took place on the 21st of November, during the annual meeting of the members of that Mission. Mr. Porter himself attended the deliberations of the meeting on Friday and Saturday, and on the Monday following, his brethren, all of whom, with a single exception were present, were assembled around his dying couch, to witness the final struggle. He had been in ill health for many months, and this painful result though not entirely unexpected, is severely felt not only by his bereaved companion, but by all his associates in the missionary work. In view of this severe affliction, the brethren of that Mission ask earnestly who is to take the place vacated by this dear brother?

WESTERN AFRICA: CORISCO MISSION.

JOURNAL OF A TOUR IN WESTERN AFRICA, BY REV. JAMES L. MACKEY.

The following journal will be perused, we have no doubt, by a large class of our readers with very lively interest. It gives an account of a region of country never before explored by civilized man. It brings to our knowledge four African tribes, two of whom were entirely unknown to the Christian world, and two others of whom comparatively little was known; and has laid open to the Christian Church a field of missionary operation of almost indefinite extent.

The island of Corisco is situated about the centre of a large bay of the same name, forty miles in length and about twenty in depth, and is about one degree north latitude. Two rivers, the Muni and the Monda, empty themselves into this bay, the former at the North-east corner, and the latter at the South-east; and both take their rise in the chain of mountains which form the Eastern boundary of the Southern half of Western Africa, separating it from the unexplored regions of Central Southern Africa, and formerly known as the "Sierra del Crystal." Mr. Mackey's most direct, and much the easiest route, would have been up one of these rivers; but the jealousy of the natives living along their banks prevented him, and he had to take up his line of march from a point midway between these two rivers. Having succeeded in this, and having showed the people that commercial speculation was no part of his object in visiting the country, the missionaries will probably be permitted hereafter to pass and repass without further molestation. In this way, their journeys will be much less fatiguing; they will pass through a country still more populous, and will have a mountain air always within their reach, which we may hope will be of great advantage to them in enfeebled health.

Reasons for undertaking this Journey.

During the past dry season, I have made three exploring tours. The main object I had in view, besides preaching to the people I should meet, was to see the mountainous country in which the Muni rises, and become acquainted with the people found there, with the view of extending our missionary operations. Several times before, we had ascended the Muni and its branches to the base of the mountains, but we had made no attempt before the present to pass the mountains, or to explore the country in which it rises. The answers we got to our inquiries regarding the country beyond where we had been, were vague, and found in the end to be nearly, if not altogether false.

First attempt unsuccessful.

Early in June, brother Preston of the Gaboon mission visited us at Corisco. We set out in company to make the first attempt by white men to cross the mountains. Our trip was rapid and pleasant until we left the river. Leaving our boat at a Boha town in care of two Corisco men, we engaged a couple of canoes and some men to carry us up a small creek, which we were told was the nearest way to reach the hills. After leaving the canoes, we walked forward four or five miles to a cluster of towns in a beautiful location on the first spur of the mountain. Here we concluded to remain until the next day, as the people who accompanied us from the river informed us that there was no town nearer than a day and a half's journey in the mountains. It was then but a little past the middle of the day. During the course of the afternoon, one of the men who accompanied us from the river was taken prisoner, for an alleged offence committed some time previous. The others from the same place would not consent to go forward unless he was released. We succeeded the next morning in getting him released from the stocks, where he had been confined during the night, and we thought we were about to set forward, when other obstructions were laid in our way. These we endeavoured patiently to remove; but finally, a large number of the people from the neighbouring towns having collected together, they positively forbade us going further. We were forced quietly to yield, but not without warmly protesting against it, and to turn homeward. What we could see of the country ahead of us only increased our desire to see more of it, and I turned back with the intention of making another effort before the dry season would pass, to cross these mountains.

Renewed attempt to penetrate the country—The Mbiko and Bondemo tribes—Preaching.

After our return to Corisco, I made inquiries of people whom I saw from various places and various tribes on the main land, about the practicability of traversing the mountains. I need not mention the wonderful stories told about the interior by the coast tribes—the terrible nature of the country, and the savage cannibals by which it is inhabited. I was led to the conclusion, from what I had seen, and from what I heard, that the surest way, and at present, perhaps, the only practicable way, would be to go, not by way of the river, but to walk over land from the sea-shore. Thus the river people, who are so extremely jealous about their trade, would be avoided. I felt satisfied also, that if by any means I could once get back as I wished, and the people knew the object I had in view, their objections would be overcome, and perhaps no obstructions laid in our way hereafter in going by the river.

The Mbikos, who occupy the country between the Muni and the Monda, are accustomed to go to the mountain country for ebony and ivory. I soon had an opportunity of seeing some of them, and they thought I could get back some distance with them, and then still further with people of the next tribe, the Bondémo, with whom they were acquainted. I lost no time in making ready to try this way. The same men whom I had consulted about the country accompanied me, besides five or six Corisco men. We left the sea-shore on the 11th of August, about midway between the Muni and Monda. The prospect for our making an extensive journey was fair, and we had made preparations for being absent at least ten days. We went forward quite briskly the first day, our whole company numbering twenty persons. In the evening we halted at a large Bondemo town called Yongu. We were received in a very friendly and hospitable manner. After dark, at my request, a large number of the people came together to hear preaching, and after the religious services, they seemed interested in making inquiries about these things, which were quite new and strange to them.

The way hedged up by wars—The party compelled to return.

Before we retired, however, the head-man of the town told us that their country was disturbed by war, and that there had been a battle that very day, in which two people of the next town had been killed. The people of his town joined him, and they represented the whole country ahead of us to be in a very disturbed condition. These reports operated so upon the fears of those who were with me, that when the next morning came, not one man was willing to accompany me further. I was satisfied that the reports made to us were without foundation in truth, but the people were too much frightened to go further, and I was forced reluctantly to turn homeward, without having accomplished anything in the way of exploration. But I did not consider my time lost, as I had several opportunities of preaching to those who had never seen a missionary before, nor heard the words of eternal life.

Plans for renewing the exploration.

After I returned to the sea-shore, but before setting out to Corisco, I was visited by some Mbiko men from a town further north. They were accompanied by a Pangwe, who they told me had come down from a long distance interior to see the ocean, and to see white men. Eight others had accompanied him, but had set out a few days before on their return. This one had delayed so as to see me; and as he had learned I wished to visit their country, he was desirous to have me set out the next day with him. I did not just then feel inclined to put myself in the way of meeting another disappointment, and preferred a little delay. He offered to await any time I might be ready to go, and appeared really anxious to have me accompany him.

Description of a Pangwe man—His dress and war implements.

This was the first Pangwe of influence I had seen. He was introduced to me as a brother of the king. He had something of savage royalty in his manner and dress. He was tall, and dignified in his appearance; his front teeth filed sharp, which gave him quite a savage look. His hair was plaited in several long plaits reaching down to his waist, and he wore on the top of his head a tuft of the fine filaments of bamboo leaf. He wore no cloth but a very narrow strip of bark made pliable by hammering. This was fastened to a girdle of leopard skin. He carried a bow and case of poisoned arrows, and a large bag, in which were numerous fetishes. In some conversation I had with him, he said they acknowledged one God who made all things. He did not deny that they are cannibals, but he said they did not eat men except they were condemned to death as criminals. My means of communicating with him were so imperfect that I could learn but little of his religious belief, and could not communicate to him much of the true knowledge of God. Soon after my return to Corisco, I learned that the company of Pangwes mentioned above, who had started on their return to their own country, heard on their way that I had made an attempt to go back to see their tribe, and they came back and joined the one who had stayed behind. I went over to the main land to see them all together, and the prospect of making a successful tour with them seemed so favourable, that I concluded to go.

Plan for a third tour—Travelling party—The mode of communication with the different tribes on the journey—The Mbiko and Bondemo people.

The Mbiko town at which they were staying is about eight miles south of the mouth of the Muni. Our plan was to set out from there as soon as I could get ready, and make all the journey on foot. I engaged a company of six Mbiko men, who professed to have some knowledge of the country, to accompany me. I could not take Corisco men, on account of enmity existing between them and the Bondemo people, through whom we were to pass. We also added to our party two Bondemos from the first settlement of this tribe through which we passed. The Mbiko and Bondemo people speak the same language, but the Pangwe is quite different; but one of our Bondemo men could speak the Pangwe, and one of the Pangwes could speak Mbiko. The Mbikos could speak Benga, and in this way I could communicate with them. But this round about way of communicating our thoughts in languages native to none of us, was necessarily imperfect; and during the whole journey I felt sad that I was able to communicate so little religious instruction, and even this little so liable to be misinterpreted and misunderstood. One great obstacle to the rapid spread of the gospel in this part of Africa, will be found in the numerous tribes into which the people are divided, and the numerous languages in use among them.

Party set out—Joined by a trading party—A hospitable African—Annoyance in African travel.

We started from Corisco on this last tour the 29th of August, and I was absent seventeen days. The distance which I reached from Corisco was not less than 145 miles in a due East course. Our company at first consisted of ten persons, besides the Pangwes, but we were joined by a trading company on the third day, which was going the same way that we were; the whole number of us then who travelled together was about fifty. The trading company was led by a head-man of some influence, whose town is near the Pangwe's. He is a Bondemo, named Mbeni. I had met him once before on the Muni. On the ground of the acquaintance then formed, he took us to his town, and entertained us with great hospitality. He also disposed of his own business as quickly as possible when he reached his town, so as to accompany us to the Pangwes. He entertained us again on our return with true African hospitality. The whole of this journey was made on foot, except about ten miles each way, when we travelled by canoe on the Noyé, a branch of the Utimbâni. I need not detail the troubles and annoyances to which I had to submit, from the stupidity, and dishonesty, and falsehood, and extreme meanness of those who accompanied me, especially the Mbikos. I tried to remember that they were heathen; but even the heathen are not all alike bad. Passing by these matters, I will give you some more particular account of the country through which we passed, and the condition of the people by whom it is inhabited.

The face of the country — Character of the soil—Abundance of wild animals.

The first thirty-five miles we travelled, or until we struck the Noye, we passed through a high lying and heavily timbered country, apparently rich in agricultural resources. It is intersected by numerous brooks of beautiful clear water; not one acre in a hundred, I suppose, has ever been subjected to cultivation. Nearly all seems to be covered with the primitive forest. After we crossed the Noye, we entered on a flat muddy region, some of which, I suppose, is covered with water in the rainy season. Our course in this part of our journey was nearly parallel with the Utembâni, which I judge was about twenty miles to the northward of us. We crossed several small streams, in some of which the tide rose, and I understand that these flowed into the Utembâni. This low country, which extended about thirty miles, is thinly covered with wood, in some places densely set with vegetable productions, which I do not know how to characterize, looking something like canes, but more like gigantic weeds. This region, as well as the mountains on which we next entered, is destitute of human inhabitants. While passing through and re-passing, we were obliged to camp out five nights. Wild beasts, such as elephants, deer, hogs, monkeys of many species, and others which I cannot name, are numerous. Many of these were disturbed, and some of them we attempted to chase, but we were not successful in making any captures.

Enter the mountain regions—The height of the mountains—Water-falls—Temperature of the air.

We entered on the first rising ground of the mountains about sixty-five miles in a direct line from the sea-shore. I expected from what the people had told me before, that in a little over one day's walk, we would pass the mountains, and enter an open country; but this expectation was not realized. The first hills we passed were quite precipitous, and composed almost entirely of granite. They are but a few hundred feet high, but we soon reached a second range, much higher, perhaps two thousand feet. These are visible from the Corisco bay in clear weather. We then passed through a broken, hilly country, continually ascending, but crossing no mountains of any great height for nearly one day's journey. We then struck a higher range of mountains than the first, three or four thousand feet above the sea. What was most surprising to me was the great descent or fall in the streams which we passed. We crossed among the mountains at least three of the head branches of the Muni. In these we saw a number of falls of from ten to twenty feet perpendicular, and in one case a perpendicular fall of fifty feet. But what is most worthy of notice is the continual succession of these falls, and of rapids extending to a great distance. The Noyé, where it flows along on ground nearly level, is seventy or eighty yards wide. A large part of this stream rises, I suppose, two thousand feet above tide-water, perhaps much more. At one place, for a distance of half a mile, it roars over its granite bed, descending at an angle of about thirty degrees. This great fall in the streams running towards the coast indicates a high country where they rise. I regretted much I had not a barometer to indicate the height of the mountains which we crossed. After we passed the first mountains, we found the weather cool at night, and not oppressively hot during the day; and I thought the atmosphere more exhilarating than on the sea-coast. The thermometer indicated at night 66°, and from that to 75° in the day. And, it should be remembered, we were but a few miles north of the equator, early in September, when the sun was nearly vertical.

Arrive at the Pangwe towns—Their description of the country further interior.

When we reached the Pangwe towns, which was the extent of our journey, we had still not passed all the mountains, and had found no open level country. I could still see at a distance north-east mountains, which appeared higher than any we had passed; but I could get no satisfactory account of the country beyond. The Pangwes told me of one great mountain which was higher than all the others, to the top of which no one had ever ventured; and, they added, if any one should go to the top of it, the sun would burn his head so that he would die.

Notices of the people—The extent of their population —Their dress, character and habits.

The Mbikoo are very much scattered; they occupy a belt of country from the Muni southward to the Gaboon. Some of their towns are on the sea-shore; but they are, for the most part, in the bush, and hence are generally called Bushmen. They are much behind the Pongwes and Bengas in civilization. They are said to have been formerly a very numerous tribe, but are now much reduced, principally, it is supposed, through the slave trade. Their language is quite different from the Benga, but there is so much intercourse between the tribes in the way of trade, and by intermarriage, that many of each tribe speak both languages. It is very difficult to make any correct estimate of the number of people in a tribe so scattered, but it is probable the whole number of persons in this tribe does not exceed eight or ten thousand,

The tribe next behind the Mbiko is the Bondemos. They speak the same language as the Mbiko, and in point of civilization are about on an equality with them. My experience among them did not lead me to think that they are quite such adepts in lying and thieving. Before the present season, I had never seen an individual of this tribe. They are not on the sea-coast, nor on any branch of the Muni which I had visited before. I found a large settlement of them on the Noyé in a beautiful location, and at a place which could be reached from Corisco by boat in a day a half's sail. It would be impossible at present to make any correct estimate of the number of the Bondémo people. I saw perhaps twenty towns on our route through their country, but I suppose they are not much more numerous than the Mbiko. I saw also one town of the Bakéli tribe, very near the Pangwe. This tribe is more divided and scattered than any other of which I have any knowledge. The missionaries of the American Board in Gaboon have a station among them, and have reduced their language to writing. The Bakélis are pretty numerous on the branches of the Gaboon river. I have also seen some of them who live thirty or forty miles north of Cape St. John, and but a little distance from the sea-coast. I could hear of no other town besides the one we visited in the country through which we passed, so that there appears to be quite a separation between the north and south parts of the tribe.

In regard to dress, the tribes mentioned above are about on an equality. The men and women dress very much alike. Their principal garment is a cotton cloth about two yards square, made generally from English or American printed goods. The men who can procure it wear a shirt, and some of them hats of their own manufacture; but many of the men and all the women go without any head-dress at all.

The Pangwe People.

The Pangwes are more savage than any other tribe I have seen, but they received me very kindly when I visited them. They made a great deal of noise when we entered the town, and all the time I stayed I was an object of great curiosity. At night they offered to exhibit themselves in their country dance for my entertainment, but I declined seeing or hearing it, and told them I would much prefer quietness. They seemed to have a superstitious dread of white men, and they told me they formerly thought if a white man would come into their town, all who saw him would die. Their dread of me, which was quite apparent at first, soon vanished, and I was entertained very well during the day and night that I remained. The head-man of the town wished me to remain longer, at least four days, until he could send out into the country round to inform the people of the other towns, for he said they would never believe it if he told them a white man had visited his town. They would tell him to his face that he lied; but if they could come and see me themselves, then they would be convinced. I could not accede to his request, at which he and his people expressed some dissatisfaction.

Very little of the trade goods sold on the coast reach the Pangwes. They use no cotton cloth, but are very scantily clothed in bark and skins. I saw a few plates in their houses, and some articles of brass which had come from England or America, but nearly all the implements they use are of their own manufacture. I saw no guns among them. They use in hunting, the bow and poisoned arrows. They greatly excel the other tribes which are coastward of them in the neatness of their houses, and in the skilfulness with which they work both wood and iron. They manufacture iron from the ore, and work it into a variety of instruments.

These tribes ready to receive the gospel.

This tribe is supposed to be very numerous, much more so than any other in this part of Africa. There is no doubt but missionaries would be well received among them. Indeed, all the native tribes in this part of Africa with whom I have had any intercourse, are desirous to have missionaries live among them. There is, perhaps, no other part of the heathen world where there is so little external opposition to the preaching of the gospel. The people, however, expect temporal advantages from having white men live among them; and though there are but few of them who have any knowledge of the importance of Christianity, still they are willing, and in some cases anxious to hear it preached, for they expect the white man's religion to be better than their own.

INDIA: AGRA MISSION.

JOURNAL OF REV. JOSEPH WARREN.

Lahor and Amritsar.

During my journey towards Lahor, I merely spent the day at Amritsar, going forward in the night again. As the last stage is not long, I remained till after tea. We had a pleasant evening. A young man from Lahor was with us, who had been spending some days at the mission, in a negotiation relative to becoming the master of their city school. He was that night to return to Lahor till the question could be settled, and we went together. I may as well say here, that I afterwards heard that he had been engaged. This circumstance, together with the fact that we easily engaged a teacher for our East Indian school at Agra, and that the Church Mission College at this place has a young man of promising character in its employment, points to the fact that such assistance is now much more easily obtained in this country than formerly. This arises from the circumstance that Government employment is not so easily found; and that the education of the Europeans and East Indians of the country is better than it used to be. I have no doubt but that these circumstances will be favourable to the cause of missions; but this will not, at least for many years, save missionaries from the necessity of superintending always, and often teaching, the schools in their connection.

Arrival at Lahor.

I arrived at Lahor early in the morning, and put up with brother Morrison. I found him living in one of the houses that had been built for the English officers of the force left by Lord Harding at Lahor, to assist the Sikh chiefs to set up a government. They had been built by the Sikhs, and as cheaply as possible, and, as a consequence, they were quite as much like barns as houses. They were large enough, but ill-contrived, ugly, plastered with mud, showing crooked and deformed roof timbers, which were not concealed by any ceiling, nor by the whitewashed cloth apology for a ceiling, which we commonly use in this country. A part of the verandah was broken, and the roof hung down in a kind of festoon, more romantic in description than covenient for use. The government were renting these houses cheaply, and did not intend finally to keep them up; and therefore they would make no repairs. The Morrisons were occupying this house only temporarily, till one which they were building in a more healthy place could be completed.

During my short stay in Lahor, I was as busy as the blazing hot weather would permit. The first day I did little but see friends. Amongst others, I called on an old Allahabad acquaintance, now one of the chief men of the Panjab government, who offered me an elephant to carry me through the city the next morning.

Description of the city.

Early in the morning got up, and found the elephant waiting. Mr. and Mrs. Morrison went with me, and we traversed the city from end to end. It is somewhat different from more eastern towns; but in its main features it is like them. They all have narrow streets, with the backs of the houses to the road, or with entrances so contrived as to conceal all the apartments. There are, however, exceptions to this rule—many of the houses have narrow overhanging balconies at the second stories—and these are usually public enough, being occupied by the bad women, who seem to swarm here in unusual abundance. The greatest peculiarity consisted of a kind of lattice made of clay, and burnt like bricks. This is pierced full of holes, forming a pattern or figure. It is a coarse, but cheap and convenient substitute for the stone and marble lattices of Agra. It is mainly applied to form screens around the flat roofs of the houses, in order that native ladies may there enjoy the air, and peep down upon the busy world of the streets, without being exposed to the gaze of strangers.

We visited the palace and tomb of Runjeet Singh. At the former, we could only gain access to the lower apartments. We were told the upper rooms were locked up, on account of the furniture and property contained in them. The portion of the palace which we saw was not very splendid; nor was the building, or rather buildings, so large and grand as I had expected. The tomb is near the palace. It is built of marble, which was taken, as one of the attendants told me, from old Musalman buildings in the vicinity. It is a handsome, airy structure, though nothing extraordinary. The old lion's ashes, after the burning, were gathered, together with those of a number of his widows, (I believe eleven,) and buried in the centre of this building. The raised work over the grave has a large protuberance in the centre, to represent the Maharajah, and smaller ones around it, one for each of the widows who burnt themselves with him. One of his unfortunate sons, who succeeded him, and was allowed to live but a short time, has his ashes, and those of four of his wives who were burned with him, buried in the same building, on one side, and with the same signs to commemorate the tragedy of his burial. When we remember that the burning of widows was thus allowed in the Panjab, we can but rejoice in the extinction of its independence. This morning we also visited the school, but had not time to look into it particularly.

Account of the School at Lahor—Preaching—Prayer-meeting.

The next morning was given to the school. It is near the centre of the city, in an old native house, which has been purchased from the government for this purpose. The plan is one of the very best that could have been selected. The house was large, and would most likely be considered very convenient by a native family; but its narrow rooms, and blind corners, and intricate passages, were very ill suited to the purposes of a school, with large classes of fifty or sixty pupils. Mr. Forman had cut some holes through thet hick walls for ventilation, and had thus made temporary arrangements for his classes. On one side of the court, in a long, narrow room, was a vernacular reading class, filling the room absolutely full. Next to this, around the corner of the court, was a class in geography, taught by Mr. Morrison. Many of his pupils were men, with full and uncut beards. The room was brim full. In the apartment next to this was a native teacher. On the third side of the court was Mr. Forman's room, where he had his classes in mathematics, &c. Going up a flight of steps, I found a Pandit's apartment, for Hindí, Sanscrit, &c. In the midst of all this, there were many work-people, men, women, and children, tearing down part of the building, and building anew; the object being to throw two rooms into one here, to introduce light there, and to widen an apartment in another place. When Mr. Forman's plans are carried out, he will have a commodious school-house; but in the mean time he has to submit to very great inconveniences. I was particularly pleased with this school. All the instructions were conveyed with a tincture of Christianity; the pupils showed, in a variety of ways, that they felt the influence of this course. Some confessed that they were convinced of the truth of the Bible; some were making many inquiries; and the opposition of some was excited. Messrs. Forman and Morrison seemed much interested in their work, and to have every prospect of success, though they may still have to labour long for it.

Besides their labour in the school, our brethren are in the habit of preaching in the streets almost daily. I was not able to go with them, on account of our other engagements; but I was told that they always succeed in getting an audience without difficulty. Lahor is a place in which it is important to keep up this kind of effort constantly. It being the seat of the Panjab government, thousands of men from all parts of that country visit it; and many strangers will hear the gospel in its streets, to whose houses it may be many years in coming in any other way.

One evening we had a prayer-meeting at Mr. Morrison's house. It was attended by eighteen persons, outside of our own families, English and East Indian. We have then the nucleus of an English congregation—one of our ruling elders had just been removed to Lahor, and is ready to aid us in our work. I had much pleasure in conducting the services of this little company.

On another evening, we visited Mr. Forman. He lives quite alone, in two rooms that have been finished off in an old mosque, which was given to our mission by the government. This house is surrounded with a wilderness of bricks—the ruins of demolished houses. Mr. Forman was busily engaged in enlarging this house, so as to accommodate the Morrisons, and in clearing his ground of the bricks that gave it so very desolate an appearance. They hoped soon to have this completed. There is something interesting in a mosque's being turned into a dwelling for a missionary family; but it will be much more interesting when we are able to transform other mosques into churches.

Prospects of the Mission—Reinforcement needed.

I was particularly pleased with the prospects of this station. Our missionaries are in high honour with all classes of people around them, both English and native; their school is full; their preaching is effective; they have some inquirers; one English gentleman sends them one hundred rupees a month regularly to aid their work; and the region beyond them is in "no small stir about this way." I have recently learned that Mr. Morrison was gone to Rawal Pindi, to see and instruct sixty-one Hindus, who had rejected their own religion, and were inquiring for the truth. But, alas! I must say the same thing about this place, which has been so often said in my former letters—more men are wanted. Mr. Morrison is not strong; Mr. Forman is being worn out by an obstinate intermittent fever. The most promising prospects may at any time be clouded; the fairest structure may any day be dashed to the ground.

Visit to the Episcopal Mission at this place.

On my return from Lahor, I again spent the hours of daylight with the Episcopal missionaries at Amritsar, and went with them to their schools. They had not yet had time to have any scholars far advanced, and their school is not numerous. The most gratifying part of it is the Panjabi school. The teacher is well acquainted with the facts and doctrines of Christianity, and does not hesitate to teach them to the boys; and they answered very satisfactorily. But both teachers and scholars went over these solemn truths with a flippancy that was really distressing; not the least sign of feeling was exhibited. But we must hope that sooner or later some of them will acquire something more than a mere intellectual perception of the truth.

The Government School.

I went with one of the missionaries to visit the Government School, which is intended mostly for the native languages and Persian. The teacher is a Hindu, formerly a resident of Delhi. He has written, and with ability and success too, against Mohammedanism and in favour of Christianity; two of his friends, who aided him in that controversy, have made a profession of Christianity, and he himself professes to believe and receive it. But he will not leave his caste, and therefore cannot profess Christianity in any proper manner. When I talked with him about it, he made use of essentially Quaker arguments against the necessity of sacraments, drawing his arguments with a perverse ingenuity from the Scriptures. I hope the truth will so operate on him that he will not long be able to maintain his present position.

An interesting Convert from one of our own Schools.

The mission at Amritsar is indebted to our mission at Jalundar for its most promising candidate. A young man had become convinced of the truth of Christianity while attending Golok Nath's school. His parents were dead, and he lived with an uncle and aunt. When he refused to join them in their idolatrous ceremonies, and even expressed a wish to become a Christian, they commenced a series of alternate entreaties and persecutions, which he found it hard to bear. After consulting Golok Nath, and being advised to come out at once, and bear what must be borne, he decided that it would be better to go and make his profession of Christianity at some other place, and accordingly went to Amritsar. He had not been baptized when I was there, but was giving much satisfaction, and probably soon would be. Since that time, another lad has followed him for similar reasons.

Return from Amritsar to Lodiana.

I came from Amritsar to Lodiana in two nights, spending another day at Jalundar, as I have noticed before. During each of these nights I encountered one of the dust storms common at that season in this country. During the second of these, the men were obliged to put down my dooly (a kind of cheap light palankeen) and cower down behind it, and it would have been blown fairly away, had I not been in it. It was dismal enough to be shut up inside of it, choking with dust, and listening to the roar of the wind and the rattling of the gravel-stones on the dooly, as they were taken up and sent hurling along by the wind.

I will not close these notices of the Panjab without a word about it generally. I passed through it in the night, and cannot pretend to have seen much; but one cannot but be struck with the number of large towns in it. It is a fine country for itinerating operations. With camels, instead of carts, one may disregard the roads, and always find enough to do. I encouraged our Lodiana Mission to enter the Panjab as soon as it was open; and I am glad that I did so, now that I have seen it. Our Church ought to go in and possess it in earnest. How glad should I be if I could transfer to the great body of our people at home some of the impressions resulting from sight and examination here.

MISCELLANEOUS.

GENEVA EVANGELICAL SOCIETY.

Station of G———.

Our readers will be interested in the following account of the labours of two evangelists under the direction of the Geneva Evangelical Society, but supported by funds which have been appropriated by our Board for this purpose. The account was prepared by the Society which employs these labourers. We suppress, as usual, the names of persons and places. We regret that it has not been in our power to publish it before.

It is with gratitude to Him who preserves so good a labourer as our dear brother, Mr. C——, to our Society, that we now offer our American friends some particulars of the labours continued by him in the environs of G———. He is so devoted to his missionary labours that it is only when weighed down by illness that he consents to interrupt them. We have, in our last report, spoken of the sad state of his health which had been sensibly impaired by incessant fatigue. Thanks to the Lord, it has greatly improved during these last months, but he still frequently suffers, and would require that care of himself which he feels but little inclined to take. His continual excursions over the rugged, and most part of the year, snow-capped mountains of Dauphiné expose him to be seized with cold and damp. Mr. T—— lately wrote to us on that subject: "One may say of our brother C—— that the zeal of his Father's house eats him up. Consequently, of how many holy indiscretions is he not guilty! Scarcely recovered from illness, he has, in spite of my advice, recommenced his labours, wishing, said he, to avail himself of the winter to evangelize. Having made several excursions successively across the mountains in rainy and snowy weather, he fell ill and suffered much. The cause of his disease is an irritation or inflammation, which, in this instance, had principally affected his eye, which had to be burned with lunar caustic. If he were provided with the means of spending a few months in a cold bath-establishment, that health which is so valuable would be restored, etc."

The letters in which our brother C—— speaks of the trial dispensed to him by the Lord with regard to his health, are always edifying. We perceive in them the desire of being entirely submissive to whatever the Lord may judge proper to send him; and at the same time a holy impatience to resume his labours and bring fresh souls to the knowledge of Christ. He wrote to us in February—"It is painful to me to inform you that during my last excursion, I was seized with the intensity of the cold which caused me a few days of suffering and confinement, for though I am surrounded by my family, I feel indeed, I assure you, in prison when I am obliged to remain at home; and I suffer much more, knowing that I am expected to preach, and that I cannot move, but when the doctor applies the caustic to my eye, I will confess, to my shame, that I am sometimes tempted to murmur, and I feel the need of crying to Him who has drawn me out of the mire, and who is gracious in bearing with me in spite of all my wretchedness. Oh! how much I need being purified anew, to be always in that holy disposition required by the Lord, in order that in evil days (if there can be any such for the Christian) I may find that the will of my God is not only good and perfect, but acceptable also."

He further wrote in March: "May the Lord be pleased to render me fit to bring a great number of souls to the feet of his dear Son, and to restore to me the health I have received from him, and which I have not yet recovered as I should wish, to resume my occupations actively. Twice have I now attempted, and twice have I been compelled to discontinue. I behold the work suffering through my absence, my conscience calls to me aloud to go forward, and at the first step I make, I meet with obstacles, and am forced to acknowledge that the Lord wishes to subdue me, and that he will not have me recommence my labours so long as the winter is severe and the snow so deep, etc."

Yet in spite of these days of forced repose, we can say that during the last half year the work has not been stopped, and has continued to advance with some success. Mr. C——'s correspondence shows how much activity he has been enabled still to display in his missionary excursions.

The obstacles thrown in the way of evangelical labours in other places by government agents have not been felt in T——. Every thing therefore invites us to labour without weariness while it is day, in that field, where the Lord, either by our evangelists, or by the faithful ministers of the national church, placed by himself, is accomplishing a work not very brilliant to human eyes, but increasing, solid, and precious in his sight. In our preceding reports we have more than once spoken of a very aged man, whom Mr. C—— often visited, and whose firm and humble faith always edified him. This respectable brother has terminated his long career in great peace. On the morning of his decease his granddaughter went as usual before daybreak to bring him his small cup of coffee which he drank with pleasure, saying he had passed the whole night without pain, soon expecting his almighty Saviour. As it was scarcely day his granddaughter asked him whether he wished her to leave the candle? "No," replied he, "I need not that light, I feel that my Saviour will not delay his coming to fetch me, he is himself the true and good light." Shortly after, his daughter came up again and found him breathing his last, falling asleep in Jesus, in whom he had believed for seventy years. This blessed brother was within a little of a hundred years old. Two days before his end, he said to me, "I have seen many things, and have forgotten a great part of them, but I have always remembered what was said to me seventy years ago by a kind Englishman, 'God loves those who love him, and they who seek him early will find him.'"

We have said also that G—— being a fortified town, containing a pretty numerous garrison, our brother C—— had an opportunity of seeing some soldiers, particularly those who are in the hospitals, and of announcing the gospel to them. There are some of them who gladden his heart by their steadfastness in the love and fear of God, and by their conduct, which honours the gospel. After their comrades are gone to bed, and when they can enjoy a few moments of tranquillity, one may see them take up their New Testament and read it with joy. But a military life is beset with difficulties and temptations, and some of those who, while in hospital had appeared to take delight in the reading of God's word and of tracts, have afterwards allowed themselves to be allured to the world and to sin. C—— earnestly requests that prayers be put up for those dear soldiers.

A—— is always the cherished spot to which our brother C—— directs his labours; he regularly repairs thither to preach, to feed the souls he has already awakened, to visit the sick, and he feels all the duties which his office of evangelist imposes on him, and of which he endeavours to neglect none. Thus, should a brother, respectable in every other respect, appear to him to deserve some fraternal reprehensions, he administers them, not without a struggle, but with fidelity, however painful it may be to grieve him momentarily; and by these means, he preserves the flock from an influence that might become pernicious.

In one of his excursions to A—— our brother had the pleasure of seeing the mother of one of the oldest converts in that place, till then an excessive bigot, express a desire to hear the gospel, and even to listen to it anxiously. I was happy to have been enabled to enter that house which hitherto had been closed against me. This woman, who was ill, received me in the most affectionate manner, and gives me hope that she then believed in Jesus and his gospel. When I had prayed by her bedside, she knew not how to express the happiness she had just experienced; she could not let go my hands, nor cease to thank me. Sometime afterwards I returned to see her; and learned, with gratitude to the Lord, that she had not been molested by her curé; she received me kindly, and I was enabled to discourse to her of heavenly things, and of our wretched hearts; after I had prayed by her bedside she thanked me, and made me promise to pray for her."

The sermons continue to be well attended at A——. C—— repaired thither about Christmas, with the Rev. T—— of G——; there were several meetings; the room was full, and those days appeared to him real festivals.

But the opposition between darkness and light is deeply felt in the field which our brother evangelizes; and numerous instances of ignorance and superstition often present themselves, to astonish and grieve his heart. It is thus that the pretended miracle of Salette, of which we have already spoken, continues to be successfully taken advantage of by the clergy, in order to obtain money from the poor souls imposed on by these means. "It is painful to us," writes C—— on this subject, "to see great numbers of poor benighted persons wend their way towards Salette, with their purses well filled, and return home begging. The other day, a man already old, asked alms of one of our co-religionists, who was surprised at seeing him very well clad and yet begging. 'It is because I am returning from Salette,' said he, 'where I made a vow; I had a neuvaine said, and the curé gave me a hundred medals, and indulgences for five years, all that for the moderate sum of fifty-five francs; and he assured me that the good people would not allow me to suffer hunger during my journey.' We can hardly believe that in one of the most enlightened Departments of France such things happen. I have myself heard a priest, showing an image representing Jesus, Mary, and Joseph, say that it was the holy Trinity upon earth, etc."

Unfortunately, where superstition is not, we sometimes find indifference arising from incredulity. It is thus that a Protestant of Grenoble, whom our evangelist met with, and who called himself a good Protestant, did not even know where the church stood, though he had dwelt in that town fifty-two years. Thanks, however, be given to the Lord, our labourer's heart is often gladdened by the visible fruits of his labours, and by the eagerness with which the glad tidings of Christ are received by simple and honest souls.

C—— wrote to us in February: "Some time has now elapsed since I met a stone-cutter on the road, with whose pleasing countenance I was struck, and felt myself inclined to approach him; taking a seat on his heap of loose stones, to announce to him the glad tidings, which he immediately received, inquiring where he might see me again, to hear once more the words that had found their way directly to his heart. Since then he and his wife have regularly attended our meetings. Well, this honest old man fell ill a month ago, and is now occupied in his bed with nothing but his approaching departure and the love of his Saviour. It seems the Lord had just given him the time to enter at the eleventh hour among the labourers. He feels his end drawing near, and wishes us to be constantly around him. His neighbours are struck with admiration at seeing him almost constantly raising his clasped hands, and his eyes fixed toward heaven, whither he hopes soon to go; not one word of murmuring escapes his lips; it is a good sermon for those who see him. They like coming to hear the exhortations and prayers I present at our sick man's bedside, and it may happen that some of the seeds thus thrown into the ground will one day produce their fruit.

"The woman S——, formerly a papist, has also been ill for some time. She now appreciates the great favour the Lord showed her when I visited her for the first time. She listened to me, received a New Testament, and studied it seriously. She had never felt the strength of the Saviour's promises so deeply as since she is suffering. Her husband, children, and neighbours, said to me, 'We cannot comprehend how she can, with so much suffering, always be content.'

These are some of the subjects of encouragement which it has pleased the Lord to give me lately, and for which I feel extremely grateful. To Him alone be all the glory for ever!"

We have been happy, but not surprised, to hear from various parts, and from the mouths of persons who are strangers to the labours of our Society, the most satisfactory testimony borne to the zeal of our brother C——, and the general esteem which his Christian character inspires.

Station of V——.

At V——, our brother H——, teacher and evangelist, pursues his labours in a satisfactory manner. The school appears to him to be the fittest means of spreading the knowledge of the gospel. A pretty good number of children attend it, whose parents have been already attracted to the gospel, and others, whose parents being still Catholics, may thus be brought to the light. Some grown-up persons attend also. Mrs. H—— assists her husband, and makes herself very useful to the young girls in teaching them either needle-work, or whatever relates to the management of a household. Preaching and the work of evangelization, properly so called, are not neglected at V——, and they are equally pursued in the neighbouring localities. We shall now give a few extracts from the correspondence of our evangelist. He writes thus about the school:

"The school has sensibly increased since my last report; but it has already had its trials to bear. Five additional children have taken their places in it; but having been at confession, the priest forbade them to return. This was an occasion of pain to me, but the Lord soon sent me fresh ones. I have now twenty. You can form no idea of their ignorance. The Roman clergy have made fresh efforts to draw some away from me, but without success. . . . I now have twenty-three children; and what particularly rejoices me is, that they develope themselves. About two-thirds of them do not belong to our religion. I perceive, with lively thanksgiving, that the Lord continues to make use of this school to attract fresh parents to hear the gospel."

April.—I meet in the school with numerous causes for joy at the docility of the children, and the rapid progress they all make. I spend very delightful moments in conversing with them. I believe that God is operating in these young hearts. I have already seen several moved to tears. The mother of one of these children said to my wife, "Since our Joseph attends your school, he is much in prayer; he induces me to come with his father and himself to the meetings, telling me that the gospel is truth; he knows that by observing it, his father and himself will be saved, and he wishes me to attend them also."

My wife is of great assistance to me at V——, either in visiting or occupying herself with the young girls attending the school, and generally with the women of the flock, who more willingly open their hearts to her than to me. During the lessons of needle-work and ironing which she gives the children, she avails herself of those moments to converse with them. After the lesson is over, she makes them pray, one after the other.

The work of the evangelization in the town continues to advance in a satisfactory manner. Meetings are regularly held on Sundays and Thursdays. At each of these meetings, our evangelist is rejoiced at the sight of fresh attendants. He has frequent conversations with them, and many appear desirous of knowing the truth. There are some in this town who, like Nicodemus, make their appearance but at night. Others have by degrees taken courage, and usually attend the meetings. The small chapel is sometimes completely full. Some persons hitherto indifferent, and who came perhaps but from curiosity, have been more than once salutarily impressed. Thus one of the rich Protestants of V——, who had attended a meeting, said to his servant, "Yes, my dear Joseph, a man is rich in vain if he is not happy; it is only by thinking of God, by drawing near to him, that he finds peace and felicity."

He makes excursions in the neighbouring villages, and even at a pretty great distance from V——. It is thus that, having set out to see two families of this town that were settled at V——, between G—— and V——, a score and a half of persons having heard of his arrival, met together to hear him; he spoke to them during an hour, in the midst of deep silence, conversed afterwards with some of them, and promised to return. He did so sometime after, and held fresh meetings, which appear to have proved a blessing to many souls.

The following fragment of a letter from our friend, will make both his activity and the manner in which he distributes his time known:—"On Sunday at ten o'clock a meditation, at one o'clock a fraternal meeting, attended only by converts, or such as are on the way of becoming so. Those who at first kept silence at this meeting, begin to speak of their Christian experience, and to pray. At two o'clock a meeting for the young people and children, but frequented by the members of the flock, and by many from without, who feel interested in the questions I put to them, and the explanation I give them of words, phrases, and doctrines. At seven o'clock in the evening, a fresh meditation. From Monday to Friday, I am principally occupied with the school. I devote the Saturday particularly to visits, to correspondence, and to prepare for Sunday. On Monday evening there is a meeting for singing, as well as on Saturday, and on Thursday evening a meditation."

Upon the whole, the work at V——, without offering any very prominent facts, and without indicating a decided revival, is advancing under the blessing of God; and the souls that have been brought to the knowledge of the gospel by means of our labourers generally, testify by their gratitude, their joy, and the sanctity of their lives, that their hearts have been really touched, and that their conversion is sincere.

MISSION AT BASSA COVE.

Of a new mission station at Bassa Cove, Bishop Payne thus writes:—"Of the beauty and importance of this new settlement, you have often heard, but I must say, that after careful examination yesterday, I do not think even its most sanguine friends have formed an exaggerated estimate." And then, after speaking in detail of its excellencies, he adds, "If it does not become the commercial emporium of Liberia, there must indeed be an amazing contrast between the works of the creature and a bountiful Creator." Missionaries have already gone out to occupy that post; and, ere long, the light of the gospel will shed its rays all over the Bassa country, along the banks of the beautiful St. John's, on the fertile slopes of the Djr mountains, and over the crest of these, into the tribes of the interior.

TO MINISTERS AND CHURCHES.

The following circular to the Sessions of our churches has just been issued under direction of the Board. Owing to change of post-office address, and irregularities of the mail, some copies may fail to reach their destination. We therefore publish it here, and trust it will procure a hearty and material response from our brethren everywhere.

Office of the Board of Publication,
265 Chestnut Street,
Philadelphia, February 4, 1854.

Dear Brethren—The inadequate supply of ministers for our rapidly-increasing population, the neglect of the sanctuary, in which many within reach of its doors indulge, and the deplorable religious ignorance of others, together with the wide-spread diffusion of an unsound or pernicious literature, urge us to employ the Press, as an available and judicious means for disseminating the wholesome truths of the gospel.

Of the value of our publications, both for inculcating the teachings of a common Christianity, and for the defence and exposition of our peculiar doctrines and order, there is a growing conviction throughout our Church.

By the direction of the General Assembly, and encouraged by our Synods and Presbyteries, we have adopted and prosecuted, with pleasing evidences of happy results, the system of colportage, in order more widely to extend the benefits of a sound religious literature. The colporteur with our books, accompanied by his prayers and religious conversation, cannot be a substitute for the minister of the gospel, but he is a substitute for nothing to the destitute, and a valuable aid to the ministry elsewhere. During former years, the means provided have generally met our wants, and we have readily paid the very moderate wages and expenses of our colporteurs. But, under pressing and increasing demands for this kind of missionary service, we have continued during this year to employ all suitable candidates, till our liabilities exceed our means by six thousand dollars. This deficiency must be largely increased, during the next two months, unless our Treasury be promptly replenished.

You are aware, that to facilitate the circulation of our books, the Assembly wisely requires their prices to be fixed as low as is consistent with the support of the institution, and such enlargement of its business as the wants of the Church and country may require. While we ask no aid in our publication department, we cannot derive any from its resources to sustain this colporteur enterprise. This is purely missionary in its nature, and we are entirely dependent on the contributions of the benevolent for its support. Nearly six-sevenths of our churches contributed nothing to this object last year.

We therefore earnestly desire, that if you have made no effort on our behalf this year, you may find it convenient, at once, to secure a contribution to our colporteur fund, and remit it to the Treasurer, Dr. A. W. Mitchell, so as to reach him before March 31st, the close of our ecclesiastical and fiscal year.

By order of the Board of Publication.

Yours, truly,

B. M. Smith, Cor. Sec'y.

A CHEAP WAY TO BE USEFUL—LOCAL COLPORTAGE.

Ministers and others often find opportunities of selling our books, in places not visited by colporteurs. Indeed the labours of the most diligent colporteur must be necessarily temporary. In many cases people buy books more freely after the colporteur's visit and sales, than previously. To supply the demand of such cases, various plans have been proposed. Some are very urgent to have books furnished on commission. But a little reflection will lead any right-minded person to the conclusion, that such a plan, if extensively practised, would result disastrously. With no imputations on the zeal or integrity of any person, it is easily seen that we might soon have hundreds and thousands of volumes distributed in packages all over the country, from many of which we might fail to receive any proceeds. It would be easy to distribute a large part of our stock in this way, by acceding to the proposals of all who might wish to enter on the business. And if it is done for the judicious, careful, and persevering, the privilege must be extended to all applicants, as discrimination would be invidious.

But we think the object designed can be very readily attained, by adopting a plan which, we learn, has already been very successfully prosecuted by the Committee of the Virginia Synod. Let a minister raise, by contributions among his people, an amount to be used as a capital, and expend it in books, selected with special reference to the wants of his congregation. When sold, the proceeds can be again used in the same way. The discount allowed according to terms of sale, will pay all expenses, and allow something for the service, or for gratuities and losses. Even should the fund gradually diminish by losses on bad debts and unsalable books, several years must first elapse, and then the plan can be renewed. Several clergymen and others have availed themselves of this cheap plan of doing good, and it is commended to the favourable notice of those especially who have had colporteurs visiting in their congregations.

It may be further suggested that such a plan will succeed better by selecting a few popular works at first, and procuring such a supply as the probable demand will require. One minister circulated, last summer, several dozen of the "Great Supper" and "African Preacher," in his missionary field, at no expense to himself, and greatly to the profit of the community.

Since writing the foregoing, a copy of the Seventh Annual Report of the Board of Colportage of the Synod of Pittsburgh has reached us. The statements of this report fully confirm the propriety and practicability of the foregoing suggestions.

It appears that of 27,734 volumes circulated by that Board, 6108 have been circulated by the means of voluntary effort. In this effort 135 persons, mostly elders, participated. They supplied their own neighbourhoods, embracing 33 congregations. The Board most truly say, "The system of voluntary colportage is admirably adapted to bring our ecclesiastical organization to bear to almost an indefinite extent for good upon the heart of the community. To these labours no reasonable objection can be made: they also furnish ample opportunities for those who desire them, to labour for the salvation of those around them; and many of those who have engaged in these labours of love, have been highly gratified upon finding their success exceeding their own expectations. No other plan of colportage can be made so thoroughly to reach every family and individual, poor as well as rich, in a community; and no other that is attainable can so judiciously adapt its distributions to the peculiar wants and circumstances and religious state of all." "A day or two spent by a few judicious individuals, would entirely supply the bounds of each congregation in a short time, and may sow good seed, the fruits of which may gladden their hearts for ever."

As the season for active service is now approaching, will not many, in the intervals of pressing secular business, engage in this pious work?

NEED OF LIGHT AND TRUTH.

Communications of the tenor of the following are constantly reaching us. The religious wants of our country increase faster than the supply. The day passes. Time will soon end to thousands who are in want of the bread of life, as well as to the hundreds who may impart it. Reader, what will God have you to do? Do it quickly!

Rev. iii. 2: "Strengthen the things which remain that are ready to die."

It is very difficult, without having been an actual eye-witness, to estimate the moral destitution of some parts of this country. Having travelled across the northern part of Alabama within the past year, I was most painfully impressed with this truth. The —— and —— have occasional services; but these have been thus far comparatively ineffectual. For the most part, impiety rules the multitude. Presbyterianism has had but little opportunity for the exercise of its benignant influence. Our churches are "few and far between," and several of these unsupplied with ministers. One of our colporteurs has visited, with great acceptance and success, several districts of that region, and the better part of the communities he visited are anxiously asking for his return.

It is the uniform testimony of the brethren, that no auxiliary is so important to them in building up their churches, and recovering these moral wastes, as the publications of our Board. And in regions where there are no ministers of our order, whilst some do not appreciate, only because they do not know them, many are lamenting their want. Happening to spend the night in Marion county, I took occasion to inquire into the religious condition of the people. A gentleman of some intelligence told me that he had made a great many inquiries for books exhibiting our doctrines and polity, and he assured me he could not hear of any, except two, brought by himself, several years before, from North Carolina—Green's Lectures, and Miller on Ruling Elders. My host and his wife, who were also Presbyterians, had not heard a Presbyterian preach for many years; and they named a number of church-members in the neighbourhood, who had removed from the older States, that were in the same situation.

If we cannot send them ministers, are there none of our pious laymen that will go and scatter the seed of divine truth over this destitute part of the vineyard?

I was told some time since of a man who, when coming to die, longed to live, mainly that he might engage as a colporteur.

If these lines shall meet the eye of one so minded, let him buckle on the harness, and take as his field Marion, Walker, Blount and Fayette counties, in northern Alabama. Viator.

DEPOSITORY AT NEW ORLEANS.

On the subject of the establishment of a depository of Presbyterian publications at New Orleans the following report of a committee was adopted.

The sum of about $40,000 will be needed to meet the engagement of the Board. Of this sum, we have the assurance, in the report of the Board, that the churches of New Orleans can be depended upon for $12,000, thus leaving the amount of $28,000, to be raised from the remaining portion of the Synod. Though apparently an impracticable sum, your committee think the churches will find but little difficulty in securing it, if it be appropriated among the several Presbyteries according to their ability, and, instead of being obtained at one time, be raised in equal proportions during the three years in which the Synodical Board expect to remove the debt upon the property. Your committee therefore propose that this sum ($28,000) be divided among the several Presbyteries in the following proportions, viz:

The Presbytery of Red River,	$500 00
Louisiana Presbytery out of New Orleans,	5,500 00
Presbytery of Tombeckbee,	7,000 00
Presbytery of Mississippi,	15,000 00
	$28,000 00

"And that each of the Presbyteries be required to assess at its next meeting, the churches within its bounds, for these amounts, which are to be collected in equal annual sums until the spring meeting of the Presbytery in 1856, and paid over each year to the Treasurer of the Board. Or, if any other method of obtaining these amounts seem advisable to the Presbyteries, they are at liberty to adopt it, provided that the whole sum be raised by the time of their spring meetings in 1856."

The following persons were elected members of "The Board of Trustees for Presbyterian Publications in New Orleans," viz:—W. A. Scott, D. D., Jerome Twitchell, I. J. Henderson, N. G. North, ministers, and J. A. Maybin, J. W. Stanton, David Hadden, and Heman Packard, elders.

PRESBYTERY OF NEW BRUNSWICK AND OUR COLPORTEUR ENTERPRISE.

At a meeting of this venerable Presbytery, held on the 7th and 8th of February, a very decided expression of confidence in the Board of Publication was cordially adopted. In response to a brief address of the Secretary, who was present, and most courteously received, the Presbytery further recommended to all the churches under its care, who had not made contributions for the current ecclesiastical year, to do so on the first Sabbath in March, or some other convenient day prior to the first of April. From the kind spirit evinced, and the cordiality with which the Presbytery adopted the resolutions referred to, we expect to receive liberal aid from the churches at the present crisis; and we trust this will be the beginning of regular annual contributions to this important enterprise of our Church.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE CONFESSION OF FAITH

Has just issued from our press in a new and handsome form, corrected after the standard European editions, and with several typographical improvements.

"WHY WILL YE DIE," is the title of a most excellent address to the impenitent, by Rev. W. J. McCord. It is in three parts. The first gives the title to the book. The second is an exhortation to "turn and live," and the third sets forth Christ as the "Sinner's Friend."

Mr. McCord holds the pen of "a ready writer," guided by a warm, affectionate heart. Our readers will find this just the book to hand to impenitent friends. We cannot commend it better than by a few brief extracts.

PREFACE.

"Into whose hands shall this book fall? In God's good providence, reader, it has fallen into yours. Will you give it a candid perusal, and see whether it may not contain a message for you?

You may feel no concern about your soul; then you are in the way to death, and why will you die? In this little book the great God, Jehovah, your Maker speaks to you, and says, Turn and live!

It may be, you are asking what you must do to be saved. Here you may get an answer to that question; for while Jehovah expostulates, and asks, Why will ye die? He also says, Turn and live! And in this book Jesus Christ is presented to you as the Friend of sinners. Let me beseech you, then, to read, and to ponder well the message which is here brought to you. For it is not a vain thing for you; because it is your life. Deut. xxxiv. 47."

ETERNAL DEATH.

"Eternal death is eternal misery. Not only will all hope and happiness be fled—not only will conscience reprove and torment—not only will there be remorse and despair—not only will the lost increase each other's woe and be tormented by evil spirits; but there will also be, as a manifestation of the divine displeasure against sin, the direct infliction of misery. What that misery will be, it is not needful to inquire. It will be proportioned to their crimes, and greater than we can form any conception of. All the senses will be avenues of pain, and all the powers of the soul will serve to augment the wretchedness of the miserable. No tongue can tell their anguish? And after suffering ten thousand ages, there will still be an eternity of woe to be endured! After being in the agonies of death for myriads of centuries, there still is eternal dying to torture and agonize the soul! Eternal death is eternal dying—eternal anguish—remorse and despair commingled with the fierceness of the wrath of Almighty God! This is eternal death!"

MAN'S DUTY.

"Men are dependent upon the Spirit of God for every good thing, for they cannot of themselves even think a good thought. Still, they have duties to perform, and as free moral agents they are to be urged to perform them; and every necessary provision is made for their weakness, helplessness, and dependence. No duty is enjoined but there is also grace promised for its performance: and to enforce the duty is but to present the privilege of seeking that grace. No plea of inability, therefore, can avail. Men must do their duty, or they must die! It is heaven's decree; and it is irrevocable. The duty here enjoined is turning to the Lord; and it must be done, or the sinner must perish! Wherefore turn and live!

THE GREAT ALTERNATIVE.

Look at this alternative—turn or die:—

It is a perfect alternative. It presents two opposite courses of conduct, with their results; and you cannot think of a third. It is, turn or die; and one of the two must be done. There is no escape. If you turn, you shall not die, but live; if you turn not, die you must. Can you think of a middle course? Can you think of a middle destiny—a state which is neither life nor death? Here, then, is the alternative. Bring it right before you; look it full in the face; and decide now, in the presence and fear of God, whether you will turn or die!"

NEW TRACTS.

The Board have just issued the following tracts:

No. 162. "The Cross," by Rev. J. C. Ryle, B. A. pp. 24.

The writer's fervid and pointed style of address, imbued as he seems to be with deep-toned piety, has given his contributions to the practical Christian literature of the day great power. We are glad to know that this tract has also been republished in this country by our Episcopal friends. It will be found eminently adapted to correct certain tendencies already mournfully strong in some quarters. At the same time the weighty evangelical truths here brought forward will suit every class. Let it be widely circulated. We give as specimens an extract or so.

"Who is there among the readers of this tract, that trusts in any goodness of his own? Who is there that is resting on his own amendments, his own morality, his own performances of any kind whatever? Who is there that is leaning the weight of his soul on anything whatever of his own in the smallest possible degree? Learn, I say, that you are very unlike the apostle Paul. Learn that your religion is not apostolical religion.

"Who is there among the readers of this tract that is valuing himself on his baptism, or his attendance at the Lord's table—his church going on Sundays, or his daily services during the week—and saying to himself, what lack I yet? Learn, I say, this day, that you are very unlike Paul. Your Christianity is not the Christianity of the New Testament. Paul would not glory in anything but the cross. Neither ought you.

"Oh! reader, beware of self-righteousness. Open sin kills its thousands of souls. Self-righteousness kills its tens of thousands. Go and study humility with the great apostle of the Gentiles. Go and sit with Paul at the foot of the cross. Give up your secret pride. Cast away your vain ideas of your own goodness. Be thankful if you have grace, but never glory in it for a moment. Work for God and Christ with heart, and soul, and mind, and strength, but never dream for a second of placing confidence in any work of your own.

No. 166. "Is your Pastor supported?" pp. 16. This tract embodies the "address of a Committee of the Synod of Philadelphia" on the subject of ministerial support, which was prepared last fall by order of that Synod. The subject is now eliciting much attention everywhere. We suggest that elders and other persons, wishing to do good, might effect much by ordinary purchases of this tract to be used for supplying all the families in their congregation. We give an extract.

"In periods of great commercial depression, it may occasionally happen that a feeble congregation will find some difficulty in managing its financial affairs. But the present is no such period. Every branch of industry is thriving. Farmers are getting the largest prices for their produce. Miners and manufacturers are growing rich. Commerce never yielded more generous profits. Labour is at a high premium. All secular avocations are productive and flourishing. But the remarkable fact is that (as matters stand) the more the country prospers, the worse for the ministry. For the natural effect of this unprecedented prosperity has been to enhance prices—fuel, house-rent, provisions—whatever (clothing excepted) enters into the support of a family. The present salaries of pastors, with some exceptions, were fixed when these unavoidable expenses were from one-third to one-half less than they are now, so that the appreciation of prices is equivalent to an absolute reduction of their salaries to this extent. The result, therefore, is, that the very causes which are making their congregations richer, are virtually making the pastors poorer."

Varieties.

Bible Distribution in Brazil.—The American Bible Society published the entire Bible in Portuguese many years since, partly for use in Brazil, and partly for Portuguese sailors, from Portugal and the Western Islands, extensively employed in American whale ships.

At a late meeting of the Board, orders were given for publishing a Portuguese New Testament, an improved translation. This is called for not only by those above referred to, but by the Protestant emigrants from Madeira settled in our Western States.

In connection with Bible distribution in Brazil, we publish the following from a letter to the Christian Union, which shows the happy fruits of one copy sent to that American empire:

"We had just left the flowery woods, and were passing the first houses which stretch up from the city. In the door of a rather large sized cottage, I observed a neatly dressed girl of fifteen, seated upon the sill, deeply engaged in reading a leather covered volume. She could not have been there, thus engaged, to attract the attention of the passers by, for it was too early. But what was she reading? In England or the United States, one might have supposed that it was the Bible. Such a book, methought, cannot be in the hand of a Brazilian young lady, whose mind is generally engaged with balls, theatres, fashions, and translations of French novels. We drew nearer; I could see that there were double columns in the book, and it looked as if it were divided into chapters and verses. One step more of my mule brought me so close that I saw plainly the description of book from which she now, for the first time, lifted her eyes. There was no mistake about it; it was the Bible. I then ascertained from the American Minister that this was the house of a Brazilian physician, a man of botanical science unsurpassed in the country, and that he was considered deranged by many, because he had from his youth opposed the slave trade, and denounced it as piracy; because he gave medical advice to the poor gratis; and because he declaimed emphatically against the corruption of the priests, and talked much in public and private about religion.

"If I had emerged suddenly from the ice crags of Greenland, and had entered all at once the blooming spot through which I had just passed, the surprise could not have been more startling than to see the word of God read in this place, where These lines had been my song hitherto, but that bright morning my heart was gladdened by the sight of that Bible reader, and my joy was increased when, a few miles further on, we overtook the venerable physician on his way to the city. He informed us that the Bible was taught regularly in his family, and that the book in question, which we had seen in the hands of his granddaughter, was one which he had obtained from the Rev. Dr. Kidder, when he was a missionary in Rio. The sentiments of the hale old man were truly Christian, and it was easy to perceive that his insanity was about the same as my own, and that he was willing to be esteemed a fool 'for Christ's sake.' A few days afterwards, I had the pleasure of furnishing him with Bibles and Tracts for his family, and for distribution among his neighbours."

'—— every prospect pleases,
And only man is vile.'

Maine Law in Vermont.—Ex-Governor Eaton of Vermont, gives his opinion as to the operation of the law in that State, very much to the same purport with that of Bishop Burgess, of Maine. He says:—

"That the law has exerted an immense influence, and accomplished great good, is as plain to him whose eyes are not resolutely closed to the light of truth, as is the light of the sun to him who opens, at mid-day, eyes that have not been deadened and darkened by paralysis, or veiled by cataract. Yet, on the other hand, I would not overstate the amount of what the law has actually accomplished. Enacted as it was, and executed as it has been, in defiance of the strong and bitter opposition of a portion of the community, no one would suppose that in the short space of a few months it could have exerted in full its beneficent influence. And besides, so vast is the magnitude and extent of the evil to be removed, no reasonable man could expect to see the whole work accomplished in a single year even under the most favourable auspices."

Toleration.—In Sweden and Norway there is considerable agitation on various points: the conventicles-question is of these the most important. This is whether the various sects of Protestants who have lately entered those countries and organized themselves, should have their worship legalized. At present the holding of their meetings is punishable by imprisonment and fine. Among these persons the Baptists are the most prominent.

GETHSEMANE AND CALVARY.

Alpha, Omega of my hope,
Where Jesus drank the dreadful cup,
The central spot where sinners meet
To gaze on scenes so sad, so sweet:
Oh! does it not seem passing strange
That 'midst creation's boundless range,
No scene should so attractive be
As darksome, lone Gethsemane?

And yet I know that scenes abound
On this fair earth with beauty crowned;
I know that there are flow'rets gay
Upspringing all around our way;
But oh! this gloomy garden-shade
The birth-place of our hopes is made;
What were the fairest world to me,
Without thy scenes, Gethsemane!

If there my Saviour had not trod
The wine-press of the wrath of God,
Endured the smitings of his sword,
When my desert was on Him poured;
If agonies like these had not
Been witnessed in this sacred spot,
A long farewell to hope for me,
Without thy scenes, Gethsemane!

His sacred knees there pressed the ground,
While thickest midnight gathered round;
Stand still and wonder, O my soul,
While mighty billows o'er Him roll!
No scene so strange beneath the skies
Has ever drawn these wondering eyes,
As where my Saviour bends the knee,
In gloomy, sad Gethsemane!

And thence to Calvary I go,
That penitential tears may flow,
While all my debts—a mountain load—
My surety cancels with his blood.
The flames consume the Sacrifice,
My Saviour bows his head and dies!
The penal vengeance due to me,
I learn upon Mount Calvary!

I bathe me 'neath the crimson tide
The fountain opened in his side;
Earth has no other central spot,
Where all my anguish is forgot.
Sure nowhere else my heart has felt
Love, which its adamant can melt,
As where the Man of griefs I see
Expiring thus on Calvary!

Oh! tell me not of scenes more fair!
Permit my heart to linger here,
Without a Saviour lifted high,
A hopeless, ruined wretch were I;
Foundation, Head-Stone, First and Last!
Here be my sweetest moments passed;
Till in his glory I shall see
The Man who died on Calvary!

Either exercise your graces, or Satan will exercise your corruptions; as one bucket descends, another rises.

WHEN WE ARE DEAD.

1. There will be some honest sorrow. A few will be really sad, as we are robed for the grave. Fewer, probably, than we now suppose. We are vain enough to think our departure will produce considerable sensation. But we over-estimate it. Out of a small circle, how soon we shall be forgotten! A single leaf in a boundless forest has fallen! That is all.

> The gay will laugh,
> When thou art gone, the solemn brood of care
> Plod on, and each one as before will share
> His favourite phantom.

2. The world will go on without us. We may have thought a very important wheel in the great machinery will be ungeared when we are gone. But the world goes clattering on as if nothing had happened. If we filled important stations in society; if we have wondered what would, or could be done, if we were removed; yet how soon others will fill our stations! The world can be a bustling, active world without us. It was so before we entered it. It will be when we are gone.

3. When we are dead, affection may erect a monument. But the hand that sets it up will soon be as powerless as ours, and for the same cause. How soon they that wept over us will follow us! The monument itself will crumble, and its dust will fall on the dust that covers us. If the marble or the granite long endures, yet the eyes of affection will not endure to read the graven letters. Men will give a hasty glance at the name of one they never knew, and pass on, with not a thought of the slumberer below.

> On my grassy grave
> The men of future time will careless tread,
> And read my name upon the sculptured stone;
> Nor will the sound, familiar to their ears,
> Recall my vanished memory.

4. When we are dead, our influence will not be dead also. We leave epitaphs upon indestructible materials. Our manner of life has been writing them. We have stirred up thought, and awakened emotion. The wonderful machinery of mind has felt our presence. We have pressed the stamp of our character into the warm wax of our moral sensibilities around us. Footsteps toward immortality have been well guided or misdirected by us. Our places of business, our social resort, may know us no more; but living, accountable beings, feel the influence that survives our personal departure.

5. When we are dead, the kingdom of God will not die. It did not depend on us for existence. And onward will it go, when we have ceased to live. Happy, indeed, if it had been the honour and joy of our labours to have promoted it. Blessed is it to be remembered as having loved Zion, as taking pleasure in her stones, and favouring the dust thereof.

Sacred, consoling thought! The kingdom of Christ moves on, when we drop our earthly relations to it. Other servants of God will rise to fill our places. A brighter star may rise for the one that has fallen. Stronger hands than ours may come into the ranks.

6. When we are dead, some will think of us. Perhaps not a large circle. And what will they think? Our present course of life is furnishing them with themes of thought. Coldness and indifference to the kingdom and glory of God—of that will our survivors think, if it marked our characters. And in sadness will those that truly love us ponder it. And thoughts, how many, and how comforting, will rise amid the pangs of real sorrow over our departure, if we had shown forth the praises of him who called us to glory and virtue. O reader, think, into which of these channels am I likely to turn the thoughts of men?—Puritan Recorder.

BURIED TALENTS.

Can any one doubt that there lies at this moment hidden in the bosom of religious society, and dormant for want of a fitting scope for exercise, an immense amount and variety of talent, which might have been elicited and trained under happier auspices, and triumphantly employed in the prosecution of Christian objects? Amongst the myriads of men and women whose hearts have been opened to welcome the message of God's love, that marvellously expansive principle both for the intellect and the will, ought there not to be, in conformity with all the known laws of our nature, an assortment of mental and moral power in the germ, capable, when unfolded and matured, of effecting, under God's blessing, the most stupendous results? Just imagine a mass of political organization of equal extent, set in motion, too, with unfailing regularity every week, one entire day of which was especially consecrated to its action, working on to an ultimate purpose from generation to generation, and calculate, if you can, the number and variety of modes of action it would by this time have systematized, the agencies it would have established, the instruments it would have called out and trained, the latent capabilities it would have evoked, the efficient workmen of different pretensions it would have had at its command.

That the main purpose of the churches is spiritual, offers no explanation of the lack of a similar result amongst them. Instead of solving the mystery, this fact rather increases it. Think, for a moment, of the strong emotions which the first exercise of spiritual faith in the gospel usually awakens, the fresh instincts it quickens into life, the mental activity it excites, the gushing streams of warm benevolence it causes to flow, the wishes for others it inspires, and the abiding principle of well-doing it implants. To what heroic enterprises might not these elements of power be led forth, and disciplined and invigorated! What materials are here for moral machinery, were they but properly appreciated and sedulously put together! Neglected, they soon shrivel up, and become unavailing, like every other talent for usefulness which is buried, instead of being employed for the Master's use.—Miall's British Churches.

RECEIPTS.

We are gratified in being able to state that the receipts of the Board of Missions, at the office in Philadelphia, from the 1st of February to the 14th day of March, amount to ten thousand two hundred and eighty-four dollars and eighty cents ($10,284.80.) What amounts, during this period, have been received at the office in Louisville, and the other local treasuries, we are, at present, unable to say; but if they have been proportionately liberal, the aggregate must be considerable. Such results are highly encouraging to all the friends of missions, and especially to our devoted and laborious missionaries. Let us all give thanks to Almighty God for his continued goodness, and go forward with constantly increasing zeal in our Master's service.

SPECIAL REPORTS.

If any of our missionaries have not, as yet, forwarded their "special report," we would earnestly request them to do so without delay. A large number have already reported, but there are many from whom we have not yet heard. We are particularly desirous of having a report from every one, in order that our statistical tables may be as perfect as possible.

CONDITIONS ON WHICH APPROPRIATIONS ARE MADE TOWARDS THE ERECTION OF CHURCHES.

As it was found, in some few cases, after an appropriation had been made and paid, that the house of worship could not be completed, free of debt, the Church Extension Committee have adopted the following, as the conditions on which all future appropriations will be made by the Committee, viz:

"That the money subscribed towards the erection of a house of worship shall be actually collected and expended in the purchase of the lot and the building of the house; and a certificate furnished by the Trustees that the money has been thus actually collected and expended, and that the appropriation of the Church Extension Committee will complete the building, and leave the whole property free of debt."

CHURCH EXTENSION.

We are gratified to find that the proposition to enter as a Church vigorously upon the work of Church Extension, meets with the most cordial approbation. From almost every portion of our widely-extended country we are receiving letters approving of the work. There appears to be but one opinion on this subject; and so cordial and universal is it, that we very much doubt whether any of the great objects of our Church when first presented, received the same measure of warm commendation. The only wonder of many is, that we have not long ago given this work the place and the prominence its importance demands. Let the next General Assembly give this measure its sanction, and present it to our churches in the form its wisdom may direct, and we shall very soon see a work progressing which will tell for good in the great increase of our Church, and the prosperity of our country. Our missionaries know well the importance of this work, and are waiting with much anxiety for the time to come when our Church will adopt and carry out some efficient plan to aid them in the prosecution of the great work in which they are engaged. We give below a few extracts from letters which we have recently received on the subject. They show how this work is regarded by these worthy brethren. The first two are from brethren in Wisconsin.

"We must build churches as fast as possible if we succeed in our missionary operations; and until these be built, the churches will never become self-sustaining. The plan proposing to raise $100,000 is of vast importance, and I hope the Board will press it on the next General Assembly as one of the most likely means of strengthening and extending our beloved Zion." M. A. F.

"We hope a successful plan will be formed by the next General Assembly for aiding in the erection of church edifices, and that it will be carried into vigorous and successful execution. If V——, G——, S——, and L—— V—— could be aided by it, we should see flourishing churches built up in these localities in a very few years. Without such aid, the work would be long, doubtful, tedious, discouraging, and very expensive to the Board of Missions." H. B. G.

The following is from a missionary who laboured hard, but successfully, in getting up a house of worship. Our Church Extension Committee afforded a little aid, as will be seen.

"Our annual meeting at H——, which occurred the first of this month, was very encouraging. I could write you a long letter on the great advantage already gained by having a house of worship. The Board did a great favour when they gave the $150 to encourage us. But for this house, I very much doubt if we would now have an existence. For the sake of aiding them, I lived for one year on the $125 given me by the Board; and now I greatly rejoice in the sacrifice. Already I have been more than rewarded." A. C.

From a missionary in Illinois:

"Our growth has at no time been rapid here, but it is slowly and steadily increasing; and the general prospects are such as to give us good hope of ultimate success. We began with a dozen members, near three years ago, now we number near thirty. A small school-house ordinarily held us then, and a large one is too small now. My out-stations then were anything else than encouraging, and now I am greatly encouraged in regard to them. If we had a house of worship built—and we are struggling to have one—we would gain a most important point in our advancement, and would soon give assurance of the fact to the Board, by becoming self-sustaining. Is there no benevolent individual in all the bounds of our beloved Zion that will give us assistance in this enterprise? Here is a little band of brethren, intermingled with a populous community, on these vast prairies, where there is not a Presbyterian church within forty miles of us, limited in their means to build, yet urged by the necessity of the case to attempt it. I am fully persuaded that did some of our brethren, to whom God has given wealth, see us in our need, or rather see the need in which the cause of Christ stands of their helping hands, they would not let that cause suffer for the want of money to build a church. J. F."

A GLORIOUS REVIVAL.

The following extracts from the report of our excellent brother, will be read with thrilling interest by all our Christian readers. It is highly gratifying to state, that from various sections of our country our beloved missionaries are making encouraging reports of the revival of religion and the conversion of souls. Let us thank God for his unmerited goodness, and be encouraged to further effort and prayer.

Chambersburg, Feb. 24th, 1854.

Rev. and Dear Sir—Series of meetings have been held in ten of the churches visited, two of which were conference meetings. These meetings have been attended with signal marks of the special presence of the Holy Spirit. As yet no special notice has been published of the work of God, for the reason that in none of the churches is the work at its crisis. It is still on the increase. It has been my privilege to witness many precious seasons of the outpouring of the Spirit in times gone by; but this one, for the numbers awakened, the character of its subjects, the depth and intensity of their exercises, and the general characteristics of it as a work of God, surpasses in interest any work I have ever seen. In brother Hamill's charge, the number in attendance at the inquiry meetings is over 200. Of this number, 135 profess to have found hope in Christ. In brother Sterrett's charge, the number of inquirers is over 140, about 70 of whom are cherishing hope. In brother Thompson's charge, over 100 are cherishing hope, and some 40 or 50 still inquiring. In brother Lawrence's charge, Perryville, the work has recently commenced with power. The meeting there is still in progress, and the number of inquirers daily increasing. Special seriousness obtains in the churches of Bloomfield, Millerstown, and Waynesburg, Presbytery of Carlisle, and some very interesting cases of conversion have occurred in each of these churches.

The work has taken fast hold of the faith and affections of God's dear people, ruling elders, parents, and young professors. The people, as in the days of Nehemiah, "had a mind for the work." It was very manifest God's Spirit was specially present with these churches and the pastors, before the series of meetings commenced. Their pure minds had been stirred up by faithful pastoral visitation, and pulpit labour. Little groups had met for special prayer for many nights in some of the churches, and many parents, like Jacob at Jabbok, had been wrestling with the angel of the covenant for their perilled households and friends. The revival has been marked by the deathlike stillness that attended the meetings, varied, now and then, by the sobs which full hearts could not suppress. The cases of awakening and conversion, embrace all classes, sexes, and ages. The aged of near threescore and ten, with the young of eleven and twelve, heads of families with their children, husbands and wives, young men and maidens, were seated side by side, night after night, in the inquiry meeting. Amongst the number who profess a hope in Christ, are three physicians, three teachers in male and female academies—two of whom are graduates, one of Jefferson, the other of Marshall College—and young men of great promise. One very delightful feature of this revival is its connection with large and flourishing academies, both male and female. It was remarked by one of the teachers of the large academy in Tuscarora, that nearly all the students—numbering day-scholars and boarders, nearly 100—were in attendance at the inquiry meetings. At Potter's Mills, 26 of the pupils, with their teachers, were amongst the inquirers, and the hope was strongly cherished that all the beloved youth would yield to the claims of the Saviour.

The means which God's Spirit has owned and blessed, in this awakening of saints and sinners, may be briefly stated. No new measures were resorted to. No new modes of preaching or speaking were adopted; no new doctrines were promulgated, and no special efforts were made to awaken feeling and produce excitement. There were times when the house of God was a Bochim, and tears flowed freely; and why should there not be weeping—household weeping, and congregational weeping—when souls, like the Marys of old, bow down at the feet of Jesus to sue for pardon and peace? Amongst the means specially blessed in the progress of this work, it is proper to notice, as of special importance, the plain preaching of the word of God, the utter ruin of the sinner in his sins, and his only hope in Christ, the way, the truth, and the life. The doctrine of the dependence of saint and sinner on the aid of God's Spirit for conviction, light, and help, was prominently and frequently unfolded and enforced. Meetings for prayer were frequent, both before and after sermon, and one or more such meeting was held in families during the interval of worship in the afternoon. Two fast-days were held in each of four of the churches where the seriousness was most marked; one at the commencement of the meeting, and one near the close of it.

The series of services in each church continued two weeks, the pastor being aided by two or three of his brethren in conducting the services. Mutual pastoral co-operation has been delightfully exhibited in this work of God, and most signally blessed in its promotion. The elders of the churches, and heads of families, and young people, of both sexes, nobly "came to the help of the Lord against the mighty," and they and their families have shared largely in the fruits of the gracious dispensation. This plain narrative has been given without consultation with the beloved brethren whose pastoral charges are the scene of this glorious display of the Spirit's power, and is furnished for the encouragement of the friends of Zion. I have mentioned no names of the brethren whose labours God has so specially blessed, except the pastors. I would gladly suppress my own. To God in Christ, by the Spirit, is all the praise due. Yours sincerely,

D. McKinley.

A NEW PRESBYTERY ORGANIZED.

We are highly gratified to hear of the organization of the Red River Presbytery, under such promising circumstances, and would earnestly second their appeal for the prayers and material aid of the pious and benevolent.

Minden, La., February 16th, 1854.

Dear Brother—I promised in my last to write to you as soon as our Presbytery should be organized. I am glad to inform you that the Presbytery of Red River has been duly constituted, according to the action of the Synod of Mississippi. On Friday, the 10th of February, the ministers appointed for this purpose met in Minden, in the Presbyterian church, and after a sermon by the Rev. J. F. Ford, Presbytery was constituted by prayer. The Rev. J. F. Ford was chosen Moderator, and Dr. Frierson, elder from Good Hope church, Temporary Clerk. Rev. B. F. Peters was received by letter from the Presbytery of Louisiana, and during the meeting W. M. Hall, a licentiate from the Presbytery of Louisville, was received under our care. Also Joseph T. Davidson, a licentiate from the Flint River Presbytery. These two brethren had been labouring for years in this country, and had never been able to meet the Presbytery of Louisiana. After a careful examination on all the book requires, they were both ordained to the holy work of the ministry; after which they took their seats in Presbytery. The meeting of Presbytery was attended with much interest, and large congregations assembled daily to hear the gospel preached.

Our Presbytery now embraces six ordained ministers, and ten churches. We have two neat and commodious houses of worship nearly completed, at a cost of about ten thousand dollars. We have nearly money enough subscribed to build two others in the country. These are to be good frame buildings, large enough to seat five hundred persons. Five other churches must be built as soon as the means can be raised. We intend building a church in Minden as soon as we can; this is an important point in our Presbytery, being a town of fifteen hundred people, surrounded by a thickly-settled and growing country. We wish to raise twenty-five hundred dollars for this purpose at present, and complete the church when we grow stronger. Can the Board do any thing for us? Will any benevolent lover of Presbyterianism assist us? Our infant Presbytery needs encouragement. We ask first for the prayers of our brethren, and then for material aid. Who will help us to build a church where the sound of the gospel has never been heard? I rejoice that we have been able to do so much in this country, where two years ago we had not even a name.

A PRECIOUS REVIVAL.

We have read with special interest the following letter from one of our esteemed missionaries, and have no doubt that it will deeply interest our pious readers. We commend our beloved brother, in the difficult and responsible position he occupies, to the sympathy and prayers of all God's people.

Rev. and Dear Brother—In the midst of much to do, I sit down to sketch my report. The last quarter has been one of much solicitude, earnest prayer, and divine blessing. We record our gratitude that God has at last visited us with the special influences of his Holy Spirit. Our feeble Zion, oppressed and afflicted in the wilderness, has been refreshed, and some few, we trust, have been converted to Christ, and are now, with a new song, rejoicing in their Saviour.

As you are aware, this has been emphatically "a hard place." The first settlers came here in a body, from the south part of the State, an organized infidel club. Their influence has been long felt, and down to the present hour is very disastrous. As every brother has said, who has any knowledge of the ground, this is "a difficult field of labour."

Some three or four months since, a most earnest solicitude began to be manifested on the part of a few, that God would, in his infinite compassion, come this way in his special work of mercy. Having received encouragement from a beloved brother of Cleveland, Ohio, that he would aid me a few weeks, and having presented to my people the urgent necessity of awaking, and of returning to the Lord—of "seeking him until he should come," &c.—I invited all of every name, who professed love to Christ, and desired that God should revive his work, and any, also, who did not regard themselves as Christians, but who yet desired a revival, to meet, on a certain day, at my house. We had an unusual number present, and a very solemn, prayerful conference. Some three or four who were not Christians, met with God's people, and said they desired a revival. From that time, our prayer-meetings were more fully attended, and became increasingly solemn.

About the middle of December we commenced a series of meetings, which were continued three weeks. At the beginning, all were led to see that they had been in a backslidden state—cold, formal, and neglectful. There was on the part of nearly all who could attend, deep humiliation, and a "breaking up of the fallow ground." Prayer in the closet began to abound and to prevail; family altars that had been thrown down were erected anew; and an anxious solicitude began to be felt among some of the impenitent. One old man, who had been a professing Christian for more than a quarter of a century, abandoned his hope, and, as a poor sinner, fled to the cross of Christ for refuge. He now prays in the family of his son-in-law, and pours out his heart in our prayer and conference meetings, duties which he never performed before. He seems now like a little child, though sixty years old.

Christians have been greatly revived, and are, we trust, walking by a higher standard, resolved to glorify God by a more humble, faithful, and holy life. This is truly a revival of God's work.

Another result has been the conversion of some few among us. We had hoped for more. We believe there will be others still. There is joy among the angels over one. We will rejoice that our Lord has saved any. The session have examined and received nine, who are expecting to enter into public covenant with God's people, and to sit down with them, for the first time, next Sabbath, to commemorate the dying love of their Redeemer. Some four or five others are professedly believing in Christ; a part of whom will probably be received by us at another time, while the remainder will, we suppose, unite with our Methodist brethren. Some others still are more or less anxious, and inquiring what they shall do.

From the first, we have had exhibited the most bitter opposition. Wicked and slanderous things were said by the enemy, strong prejudices were excited, and very many placed themselves in a position that the truth could not reach them. They despised "the gospel of the Son of God," and if they repent not, must reap an awful reward. May the Lord, in his infinite mercy, prevent their eternal ruin. For these, and the thousands over the country—some of them lost sheep upon the mountains—we shall continue to labour and pray, God helping us, until we are called to our rest.

Feeling that we need your prayers and your sympathies, and believing that we have them, in common with others, yet may I ask you, dear brother, after you have read this, to spend a few moments in special prayer for this county seat, and for me, the Lord's missionary, that I may have boldness, and "be delivered from wicked and unreasonable men."

MINISTERS WANTED IN ILLINOIS.

A correspondent of the Home and Foreign Record in Grenville, Putnam county, Illinois, says: "We are all Old-school Presbyterians, and need two ministers very much in this section of country. The nearest to us is twenty-five miles distant. There was a church formed at Cedar Point last spring, now without a pastor. Two miles north of it is La Salle, the terminus of the Illinois Canal, and a flourishing town of four thousand inhabitants. One mile from it is Peru, also containing about four thousand inhabitants. The Chicago and Rock Island Railroad intersects the Central Railroad at this point, affording good communication in all directions. In all of these places there are churches without pastors. Ministers going West are earnestly invited to give us a call."

THE INEBRIATE REFORMED.

The following account, by one of our missionaries, of the conversion of an intemperate husband and father, is very interesting. How blessed are the fruits of the gospel! How useful the labours of our missionaries! What encouragement does such an instance of the power and mercy of God afford to pray and labour for the conversion and salvation of the chief of sinners!

On last Sabbath week I administered the ordinance of baptism to two adults, one of whom is a husband, and the father of five children. This is an interesting family. Three years ago this man was a hard drinker; from this practice, however, he has abstained for perhaps about two years and a half. Three years ago you might have gone into that man's house, and you might have seen a drunken husband and father, a heart-broken wife, half-starved and half-naked children. Go to that man's house now, and you find there a sober, Christian man, a kind, provident husband and father, an affectionate, cheerful, and pious wife and mother, and five neatly clad and joyous children. Morning and evening you might see them cluster around the family altar. What a change! And this is not fiction; it is unpainted, unvarnished fact. About fifteen months ago this man was brought very low with typhoid fever. I visited him often—talked and prayed with him. As soon as he was raised and able, he became a regular attendant on my ministry, and was evidently interested in the subject of religion. I sought opportunities of conversing with him, and furnished him suitable books to read. During our meetings he and his wife both evinced a great interest, and expressed a deep concern for themselves, and eventually a hope of a change of heart. They were in due time received on profession of their faith.

TO THE POOR THE GOSPEL IS PREACHED.

The following is an extract from the Report of one of our missionaries.

Last Sabbath was a day of unusual interest with us. We enjoyed a feast at the table of our common Lord, and among the communicants was one who had long been a hardened sinner. He is a poor man, and a cripple, and more than forty years of age. During the last quarter, he has become a hopeful subject of divine grace. His wife is a descendant of the Stockbridge Indians, (half-blood.) Last Saturday evening, I walked without elder to their residence, and entered their cold cabin. We found them gathered around their table, taking their frugal supper. As they had no chairs, and no seat to spare, we insisted on standing till they had finished their last meal for the year 1853. As soon as the three eldest children were satisfied, they took a Bible, and gathered around the stove hearth, and commenced reading and repeating verses to each other; thus, from the light reflected from the stove, they were cheerfully engaged in getting their lessons for the Sabbath-school. The neighbours had furnished a little additional clothing, shoes, &c., and provided them with shawls, and on Sabbath morning the whole family repaired to the place of divine worship. Many tears were shed by the parents during the exercises. The mother wept profusely. The father first gave himself to the Lord in the sacrament of baptism, and then consecrated his four children to God, in the same precious sacrament. The solemnity on the part of all was unusual. The children wept. May God have mercy on their precious souls. This is the second family received into this little church who need charitable aid. This, brethren, is the way we are building up the Church of Christ, through the blessing of God, by gathering in the halt and lame. Surely, to the poor the gospel is preached. Though the work of grace here is but the beginning of what we greatly need and desire, yet in viewing it, we thank God, and would take courage.

You cannot be surprised that I desire to labour with this people another year; and that we wish for increased aid, that we may be free from pressing care. Could the friends of missions see all the families in this great western world to whose comfort and happiness they have contributed, by assisting in furnishing them with the means of grace, they would ask the Lord to accept larger donations for the spread of truth and salvation. N.

GOOD SINGING.

One thing which has added lately very much to the interest of our church is a singing class, which is taught here by Mr. Mason Kindell, on every Saturday evening, and he himself remains here, and spends the Sabbath with us, and thus our singing, which before was very indifferent indeed, has become quite attractive, and a great many are induced to attend the services on that account, so that sometimes of afternoons we have the church quite full. I think it would be a good idea for all weak churches similarly situated with ours, to try to improve their psalmody, as no doubt it would be one of the most influential means that could be used to increase and interest our congregations. Psalmody is sadly neglected here in the country, and, as a matter of course, is of a very inferior character. It is well and necessary to sing with the heart, but I think it is very important too, that we should sing with the understanding also. I think if this matter were urged upon many of the churches under your care, it might be one great help to have them soon off your hands, and self-sustaining; and I have no doubt—I can now see it plain—that if we had the kind of singing we have now two years ago, our congregation would be more than double what it is at present. FREE CHURCH CANDIDATES.

It is certainly remarkable, that a decline in the number of candidates for the ministry should prevail so extensively in Evangelical Churches both at home and abroad. Not only have the Episcopal, Baptist, Methodist, Congregational, Old and New-school Presbyterian, and other Churches in the United States, suffered a loss of candidates, but the churches in Canada and in Scotland seem to be in the same afflicted condition. The Free Church of Scotland, as appears from the proceedings of their Assembly in 1853, reported 216 theological students for the last year, against 240 of the preceding year. Here was a loss of twenty-four—greater than that which prevailed in our own Church.

For the Home and Foreign Record.

A CALL FROM GOD TO THE WORK OF THE GOSPEL MINISTRY.

An inspired apostle has said, "No man taketh this honour unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron." Many have been troubled to know wherein that call consists.

It will be admitted as a right of a sovereign ruler, by his own appointment, directly or indirectly made, to fill the various offices of state. This right belongs to the Presidential Chair of the United States. Each successive President appoints his own cabinet.

It would be expected that a ruler of extensive knowledge and great wisdom, would select the most judicious men for the several departments.

God is the Sovereign of all worlds—the great Monarch of the skies; and his knowledge, and wisdom, and other perfections, are acknowledged to be infinite. God has established his throne in the heavens, and his kingdom ruleth over all. By his efficacious, or permissive providence, he is ruling in the kingdom of nature, of providence, and of grace. The hearts of all men are in his hand, and he can change them as streams of water are changed—he can mould them according to his own pleasure. The history of the past shows that he has actually raised up men properly qualified for the sphere in which he intended them to act, or the office which he intended them to fill. In evidence of this, we mention the names of Moses, and David, and Solomon, and Isaiah, and Daniel, and Cyrus the Persian, of old; and the names of Zwingle, and Luther, and Melancthon, and Calvin, and our Washington, of more modern times.

As there were false prophets in days of old, who cried, saying, Thus saith the Lord, when the Lord had not spoken, nor sent them; so it may be even now with men in the gospel ministry. Possibly some run without being sent—and others decline whom God has called. The young men of the Church should inquire into the subject, so as to know what duty is. A call from God to the sacred office consists in two things—1. A desire for the office; 2. And the proper qualifications. So the inspired Paul has decided: "If a man desire the office of a bishop, he desireth a good work." 1 Tim. iii. 1. Immediately then he specifies the proper qualifications. Unto such men Paul directs Timothy to commit the gospel ministry.

Of the qualifications, the man called, mostly in youth, may not be the best judge; but the desire for the office is a matter of consciousness, of which the man carries the witness within himself. It is by no means uncommon that the man possessing the desire, like Moses of old, may wish to be excused. To overcome this reluctance, God may give intensity to the desire, and bring the man to feel like Paul, when he said, "Necessity is laid upon me; yea, wo is unto me, if I preach not the gospel!"

The qualifications which accompany the desire, are, piety, good natural talents, mental cultivation, or an opportunity of acquiring the same, an aptitude to teach, prudence, zeal, and fidelity. The possession of these, in connection with Paul's ruling desire for the office, may make the matter of duty clear and plain.

The question, Am I called of God to the work of the ministry? is to be settled by a calm, deliberate, and prayerful investigation. A resort to voices, or dreams, or visions of the night, would discover a strong tendency to fanaticism or delusion. This brief view of the subject is supported by the Scriptures, and the experience of wise and good men.

WHERE ARE THE REAPERS?

The following, we think, are happy and timely suggestions to Christian parents, upon the obligations resting on them, under God, to the early dedication of their sons to the gospel ministry. The fields now all over the world are "white unto the harvest," but where are the reapers? The extract we take from the late proceedings of Transylvania Presbytery, Kentucky, as found in the Presbyterian Herald.

"But, brethren, the great call which is made upon you, is not so much for your silver and your gold, and worldly substance, as for your children. You are called upon to dedicate them to God, and to train them for his service. In the Scottish Church, the supply of ministers has been kept up by parents devoting the chosen son of the family to God, and training him so far as they can for it, and rarely does God fail to accept the gift, and bestow those qualifications of heart which come alone from him. Christian parents cannot, without great sin, train their sons for the world, and leave it to miracle, or to unforeseen circumstances, whether their thoughts are ever turned to the work of the ministry. God has various ways of calling men into the minsitry; but one of the most honoured, and most general, is through the earnest efforts of parents to train them and qualify them by education for the work, and by humble prayer, seeking for the gifts of his grace, which shall qualify them, in the only true sense, for preaching his gospel. Children are a high and solemn trust from God, to be received and held ever as from him, and trained for his service, in whatever department of that service they are qualified to act. And parents are the earthly agents for the bestowing of the great part of these qualifications. When they, like Hannah of old, dedicate their children to him in infancy, ond train them like her in his Church, and give them all the means of education, for his work, within their reach, the general truth is, he accepts the offering at their hands. So parents may confidently hope, whilst they earnestly pray, that the son, whom they give back to God, and educate and train with a view to the ministry, will, in God's own good time, be endued with his own spirit, and called, and qualified, and sent into the great harvest of the world. And to the same extent that churches and church officers are bound to take care for the religious training of all the church, are they bound to provide for the training of such as appear to promise well for the sacred office and work of preaching the gospel. Let these things sink deep into your minds, so that when our brethren come among you, it shall be only to gather your consecrated gifts to God, of your children, and your substance, and to claim and receive your hearty prayers."

CANDIDATES AND THE COLLEGE COURSE.

Theological Seminary,
Columbia, S. C., Feb. 27, 1854.

Mr. Editor—I know it is presumption in me to send you this piece for publication; but it is on a subject on which I am much interested. I spent two years in * * * * College, which, though not noted for its wickedness, was an irreligious college. The last year was spent at Hanover College, Indiana, which, although of only twenty years continuance, has given more than a hundred ministers to the Church. A strong religious influence prevails there. Had it not been for this change, I am confident I would not have been here, preparing for the ministry, to which I trust I have been called. Experience, more than reason or observation, has shown me the importance of religious influence in colleges. Yours in gospel bonds, * * *

For the Home and Foreign Record.

SCARCITY OF CANDIDATES.

Various causes are sometimes assigned to account for the alarming scarcity of those who are to break the bread of life to the Church. It is true, parental training, and dedication to God, are all-important in increasing the number of the ministry. Early piety is very desirable. The prospect of independence, and a competence of worldly comforts, may have some influence. But while our hearts are bleeding over the desolations of Zion, and we almost despairingly cry out, "Who will come up to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty?" we may consider as one reason for the scarcity of candidates, the want of active, deep-toned piety in our colleges.

Pious students sometimes go to college, where many restraints are removed, and where they are assailed by the peculiar temptations which students only know. The new excitements and pleasures engross their minds and thoughts. Love insensibly grows cold, piety wanes, ambition fills the soul, a thirst for fame and honourable distinction becomes a strong, if not predominant, passion. Most students perhaps go to college without having any specific design in view. Their "acquirements," and, perhaps, "the voice of Providence," are to suggest their profession. When the collegiate course is ended, the profession is chosen, and the decision is generally made by the moral influences that have borne upon the mind, instead of the intellectual attainments. Would you have him decide to preach "Christ and him crucified?" Then let the college be a Bethel. If religion is not revered, and in lively exercise, if he does not find the sympathy of fellow-students leaning to the cross, (for students are bound together by a strong cord of sympathy,) then, despite his good resolutions, he goes with the multitude. "He hopes to be useful, but cannot see his call to the ministry." But let his attainments, his social intercourse, and every influence be sanctified. Let his fellow-students generally unite with him in the performance of religious duties. They can thus promote one another's growth in grace, and religion becomes a source of constant delight. And now, "What can I do for him who has bought me with his blood?" is eagerly asked. The difficulties and trials of ministerial life vanish before his ardent soul. With a heart glowing with love to God, he would even account it all joy to suffer for Christ. The college course almost invariably gives the last, the sealing stamp to character. Men of learning are men of influence. They give character and tone to society, and their character is determined by their education, understanding that term in its broadest sense.

Christian parent, would you have your offspring to live happy, honourable, and useful lives? Then look well to the character of the institution they attend, and let your prayers unceasingly go up in their behalf.

Teacher, immense responsibilities are yours, and momentous consequences will be the result of your labours.

Pious student, your example, your zeal for Christ, or indifference in his service, will tell mightily upon others.

Christian, would you see Jerusalem builded, and multitudes of labourers going forth to gather the harvest? O, cease not to pray that God would pour out his Spirit upon our schools and colleges; that he would make them "fountains whence shall issue streams to make glad the city of our God."

AMERICAN EDUCATION SOCIETY.

We noticed with regret that the American Education Society were obliged, from the want of funds, to pay their last quarterly appropriations to students only in part. This is a great calamity; and one which God has hitherto averted from the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church. An infinitely greater calamity, however, is common to Congregational and Presbyterian Churches, viz., a deficiency of candidates for the ministry. We trust that both of these branches of the Church of Christ, as well as others, will find, through divine grace, some improvement during the present and coming years.

DEFICIENCY OF MINISTERS.

It is often profitable to exchange views with other denominations of Christians, and to compare our own opinions with theirs. The Puritan Recorder, of Boston, thus introduces an article from the Episcopal Recorder:

"This subject has been presented so often, and dwelt upon so long, that we fear our readers are weary of it. Yet it cannot be passed by. The interests at stake are altogether too important, to be overlooked by any who have at heart the welfare of Christ's kingdom in the world. The matter must be examined, and considered, and prayed over, until an adequate remedy is provided. One great step towards the attainment of this end, is a proper knowledge of the causes of the evil. It cannot be a mere casual incident, that the supply both of ministers and of candidates for the ministry has fallen off so much in all denominations of Christians. There must be reasons. Some of these reasons have been well set forth in the columns of a contemporary, the Episcopal Recorder, from which we abridge the statement:

1. The inadequate support which the majority of ministers receive. This has been of late largely set forth by the religious, and even the secular press, and to some extent an improvement has been effected. But still much, very much, remains to be done.

2. Christian parents are not desirous to have their sons become ambassadors for Christ. They dread for them such a life of poverty and toil, and therefore forbear to use a proper and legitimate influence to direct their views to this end. In fact, what influence they do exert is rather in an opposite direction.

3. The many wide avenues to ambition, and the love of money, now open on every hand. Never were these so numerous and inviting as now. Young men feel the attractive influence, and fly from the long and laborious preparation the ministry requires, in order to plunge at once into the great battle of life, and seize its brilliant guerdons.

4. A lack of direct effort to enlist young men in this work. Armies must be recruited; ministers must be called. Means must be used to bring the claims of the ministry before the pious youth of the land. The subject at least should be so presented as to secure a candid consideration before making a final decision. But this has been neglected, and we see the consequences.

5. A supply is not sufficiently sought from the Lord. There is a specific injunction to make this a matter of intercession: "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest that he would send forth labourers into his harvest." Doubtless we receive not because we ask not. Supplication has been intermitted, reliance has been placed on subordinate means, and the Lord has frowned. A convincing proof of failure here is furnished by the fact that there is only one season in the year appointed for united prayer for this specific object—namely, the Annual Concert in February for Colleges—and that occasion is usually marked with less interest, and less generally attended, than any other.

6. A last cause, and the most important and fundamental of all, lies in the low state of religion. "The ministerial spirit is only the Christian spirit, under a peculiar form and with a peculiar direction." Consequently, the want of more religion in the Church lies at the root of the want of more ministers. Only let there be an outpouring of the Spirit, a general revival of God's work, and the ranks of young converts will pour a steady stream of candidates for the ministry into our Colleges and Theological Seminaries.

Such is the sad detail of causes producing the great evil under which the Church now groans. When shall the remedy be applied?"—Episcopal Recorder.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

PRINCETON AND LAFAYETTE COLLEGES.

Princeton College has long enjoyed the favour and patronage of Presbyterians. It is an ancient and honoured Institution. With a history of fame and usefulness dating back beyond a century, and with a long line of distinguished Presidents, Professors, and Alumni, it has claims upon the affections and prayers of the Church which few institutions can hope to equal. Its prospects of usefulness were never so great as at the present time. Its endowment scheme of $100,000 is in a successful train; and the additional endowment of $50,000 for a Professorship for Joseph Henry, LL.D., is certain, under the smiles of Providence, provided the distinguished Professor will accept the appointment, which there is good reason to believe.

Lafayette College was founded only about a quarter of a century ago. After a variety of struggles and alternations of prosperity and adversity, it seemed almost ready to expire. About three years ago, the Synod of Philadelphia interposed its powerful and protective influence, and took the Institution under its ecclesiastical supervision. Since that time, the career of the College has received a new and gratifying impulse. Its efficient President, Dr. D. V. McLean, has visited a large number of the churches of the Synod, enlisted a new educational interest within its bounds, and has been the instrument, under God, of securing an endowment of $100,000, with the prospect of increasing it to $150,000.

Lafayette College, although rather near to Princeton, and not near enough to the centre of the Synod of Philadelphia, has a location which, by railroad communication, has become important in itself, and quite convenient to the churches of Pennsylvania. Lafayette College has been commonly regarded as a sister, rather than a rival, to the College of New Jersey. The late Dr. Alexander, a Trustee of the latter College, was, nevertheless, a strong friend of the former. Nor is there any reason why both Institutions should not enjoy the best wishes and the hearty good will of all lovers of sound education.

Of late, however, some of the brethren at Princeton College seem to be alarmed at the effects of Church superintendence. Under Synodical supervision, the students of Lafayette College have increased from twenty-five to eighty in number; and with its system of Scholarships and its able Faculty, this number will undoubtedly reach two hundred before many years. Dr. John McLean, President elect of Princeton College, wrote an able and temperate letter last summer, one of the objects of which was to show that Colleges under the care of private corporations were equally worthy of favour as Colleges under ecclesiastical supervision. The Synods of the Church, however, generally prefer Synodical Colleges. Professor Hope also wrote a letter in opposition to cheap endowments by scholarships, at a time when the endowment of Lafayette was in a critical condition, and when its President was labouring hard to complete it. The friends of Lafayette did not feel willing to enter into any controversy with the Princeton brethren, and neither of these publications was answered.*

Since the time just referred to, some of the Princeton Professors have determined to agitate still further the whole subject of ecclesiastical supervision in education. We are by no means disposed to shrink from the discussion thus forced upon us; nor can we be driven from our position of cordial good will towards the institutions who may differ from us. The Church has the deepest interest in sustaining the colleges of New Jersey, Jefferson, Hampden Sidney, and Washington, Virginia—colleges which are upon the plan of supervision by private, self-perpetuating corporations. These institutions are entitled to the warmest support; and whilst under Presbyterian management, no effort should be made to interfere, in any way, with their condition; unless their own friends prefer to change it. At the same time, if the Church thinks that her new colleges had better be more directly under her own care, the fact of this preference is not a proclamation of hostility to institutions on a different foundation. Entire unanimity on educational matters is out of the question. But it is asking a good deal of the Church to change her present collegiate policy, simply in view of the growing prosperity of new colleges under ecclesiastical care.

Princeton, too, is the last college in the land that need feel apprehensive. It was never in a condition when prosperity was more certain to crown exertions in its behalf. Nor are its friends generally alarmed about its prosperity. It so happens that the three persons, whose writings in favour of denominational education have had perhaps the greatest circulation in the Church, are trustees of Princeton College, viz., Dr. James W. Alexander, who was the author of the Report on Parochial Schools in 1846; Dr. Hodge, whose educational address before the Assembly of 1847 was instrumental in securing the unanimity of that body; and the present Corresponding Secretary of the Board of Education. In fact, the matter has never come before the Board of Trustees of Princeton College, in any form or shape.

We doubt whether Princeton College gains anything by attacking the collegiate policy which prevails in the large majority of the Synods of our Church. If one, or more, or all of the Professors choose to agitate the subject on their own responsibility, they will of course expect the friends of Synodical supervision, ourselves among the number, to follow in reply.

* An able writer in the Watchman and Observer, and a friend of Hampden Sidney College, in Virginia, replied to Professor Hope, especially in relation to the argument of the latter, that the scholarship plan implied something wrong in principle.

There are other topics, mixed up with the principle of ecclesiastical supervision, which we may notice at another time.

May the Lord inspire us all with the love of the truth, for his name's sake!

REVIVALS IN SCHOOLS AND ACADEMIES.

We give below a brief account of three recent revivals of religion in institutions under the care of the Church. God honours his truth, when inculcated by religious teachers upon the minds of the young. The results in these institutions alone, warrant the hope of happy results from the present educational movements in our Church.

GENESEO ACADEMY, NEW YORK.

Geneseo Academy experienced last year a copious outpouring of the Holy Spirit. About fifty young persons were hopefully converted to God. An extract from a letter received about four weeks ago, gives the following interesting statements of a renewed interest in religion.

Dear Sir—You will be pleased to learn that God is visiting our academy again with the convicting and converting influences of his Holy Spirit. Our prayer-meetings and Bible-classes have, for some weeks past, been attended with increased interest, and at times deep solemnity and tenderness of feeling have been manifested. Many are now thoughtful, some are inquiring what they must do to be saved, and about ten hope that they have become reconciled unto God through Jesus Christ. It is with us teachers a time of much anxiety, and we are praying for the spirit of wisdom and faithfulness. Very truly yours, * *

WAVELAND ACADEMY, INDIANA.

The Waveland Academy has experienced a revival of religion, such as is rarely witnessed in the most favoured institutions. May the Giver of all grace grant wisdom to his servants to superintend so glorious a work!

I write to let you know that God is doing great things for us. This day is set apart for prayer and fasting, for colleges and literary institutions; but with us it is already a day of rejoicing, as well as of prayer. There has been a revival going on here for the last two weeks, which has wrought a wonderful change in our academy; and we hope, from the character of many of the young men, the Church will feel the benefits of it in a powerful degree hereafter. We have had some 75 students this term, and nearly two hundred during the winter. From the fact that many of our leading young men were out teaching, we had but few comparatively who were professors of religion, that is, ten days since; but now, through the grace of God, there are between 40 and 50 in the institution who are hopefully converted. The work was somewhat peculiar, and there was very little animal excitement, considering that there were so many young persons—yet deep and powerful.

I have not time to give you the particulars, but suffice to say that near sixty have been received in our church, and forty in the Methodist church. About forty of our students, in the last two weeks, have made a profession. What a responsibility rests on us to cherish these lambs. Would not the Board of Publication donate to the academy a list of their works. We want something of the kind to ground the young converts in doctrine. We have some of the Board's works which are very serviceable, but we would like to have more. If you please, let me know in this respect. I think you will hear from us in the way of many ministerial students ere long. Yours in Christ, * * *

JERSEY SHORE ACADEMY, PENNSYLVANIA.

The Jersey Shore Academy is under the supervision of the church at that place. This institution has from the beginning been remarkably favoured. A revival of religion has recently brought a number of its pupils into the church.

Rev. and Dear Sir—We have just passed through a most refreshing and gracious revival in our church and in our school. God's Spirit has been working mightily in our midst. About twenty have been added to our church by profession of their faith—almost all pupils of the Seminary. Some three or four young men have been brought in, who will probably study for the ministry. They are young men of genius, and of noble nature, and I look forward with hope and joy to the day when their Master shall recognize them as labourers in his vineyard.

Our school numbers 112 students. It has succeeded beyond our most sanguine expectations.

HONORARY MEMBERS.

The sum of Fifty Dollars constitutes a person an Honorary Member of the Board of Education. A copy of the Annual Report is sent to all the Honorary members every year.

SCHOLARSHIPS.

The sum of Seventy-five dollars forms a scholarship to assist a student in the collegiate course, and the sum of One Hundred dollars in the theological course.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST.

All that the Board deem it important to furnish is their CORPORATE NAME, viz.

"The Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

Any person disposed to leave a legacy to the Board of Education, is requested to insert the right CORPORATE NAME. The State laws differ so much that no one Form will answer in all the States.

The following form may be used in Pennsylvania.

I give and devise to the Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, the sum of ——— dollars, to and for the uses of the said Board of Education, and under its direction.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,

No. 23 Centre Street, New York.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE BOARD.

The Annual Meeting of the Board of Foreign Missions will be held at the Mission House, New York, on Monday, May 8th, at 4 o'clock, P. M.

The Annual Sermon before the General Assembly will be preached by the Rev. John C. Backus, D. D. The Rev. J. L. Kirkpatrick, D. D., is the alternate preacher.

A Sermon for the Board will also be preached in New York, previous to the annual meeting, by the Rev. Alexander Duff, D. D., of the Scotch Free Church Mission at Calcutta, who is at present on a visit to this country. The Rev. Stuart Robinson is the alternate preacher.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

Mission House, March 13, 1854.

India.—Our latest dates are from Allahabad, January 2d; Agra, January 7th; and from Lodiana, January 5th.

The brethren at Lodiana express much sympathy for Mrs. Porter, who has been so severely afflicted in the death of her husband. She is wonderfully sustained, however, and not only continues to have the charge of the Female Orphan Asylum, but renders important aid in correcting the proof-sheets of the Panjabi Dictionary, a work upon which her husband was engaged at the time of his death. Mrs. Janvier's health had not been good for some time, but it was hoped that she would soon be restored to her usual health. The examination of the schools at Agra took place on the 17th December, and the prizes were distributed by a gentleman of the civil service, who expressed much satisfaction at the great work which our missions are accomplishing in Northern India. Letters have also been received from Messrs. Seeley and Warren, dated Calcutta, December 27th, and January 2d, on their way to this country. They were in usual health, and were expecting to avail themselves of the first favourable opportunity to sail for this country.

China.—Letters have been received from Ningpo Mission as late as December 3d; from Canton, December 9th and 24th; from Shanghai, December 16th.

Shanghai is still in a state of warfare. The Imperialists had made repeated attacks upon the city, with the view of expelling the Insurgents and retaking it, but without success. That part of the suburbs lying between the city and the river has been burnt, and will occasion much suffering among the people, but has not prevented the introduction of supplies into the city, which it was intended to do.

Mr. Wight was on a visit at Ningpo, and his health has not improved as it was hoped would be the case. Mr. Culbertson, though prevented from going into the city to preach, was carrying on his translations without interruption. He had completed the Pentateuch, and was about to commence the translation of the New Testament. The general health of the members of the Ningpo Mission had been good, with the exception of occasional chills and fevers, from which some of them had suffered. There had been quite a panic among the people in consequence of rumoured conspiracy against the city. Upwards of twenty persons had been beheaded on suspicion, and three of those were executed in sight of the mission premises.

At Canton the missionaries and their families were well, and engaged in their usual labours.

The female school had been opened the early part of December, and with prospect of as many pupils as it would be convenient to receive.

Africa.—Letters have been received from Monrovia as late as the 18th January. Nothing of importance had occurred in the affairs of the mission, that deserves special notice. Mr. Wilson is expected to return to this country in the spring, partly with the view of recruiting his health, and partly with the view of accompanying his wife, who has been in this country since spring, on her return to her labours in Africa. No intelligence has been received from the mission at Corisco, later than the 24th November. At that time they were well, and were engaged in their labours as usual.

A letter from Rev. Edwin T. Williams, one of the brethren who left here in September last to join the Corisco Mission, dated Fernando Po, December 16th, has been received. The party were all well at that time, and were within one day's sail of Corisco.

Indian Missions.—Letters have been received from the Choctaw Mission as late as the 1st February; from the Seminole Mission, February 9th; from the Iowa and Sac Mission, February 8th; from the Otoe and Omaha Mission, February 7th; and from the Chippewa Mission, January 27th. At all of these missions, the brethren were generally in the enjoyment of good health, and were prosecuting their various labours as usual. At Talahassee there had been some sickness, but none of serious consequence.

The boarding-school at the New Mission among the Chippewas had been opened under circumstances of promise. Only a small portion of the applicants for admission could be received, and it is earnestly asked that increased means should be provided for the enlargement of the school.

Mission to South America.—Rev. Thomas H'Ombral, a member of the New York Presbytery, has recently been appointed by the Committee as a missionary to Buenos Ayres, and sailed from this port on the 11th inst. for that field. The Committee have contemplated a mission to South America for some time past, and were glad to find a man who desired and seemed qualified to engage in this work. And although this first measure is somewhat of an experiment, it is hoped, nevertheless, that it will lead to great and important results to the cause of Christ in that part of the world. Mr. H'Ombral's attention at the outset, will be directed more particularly to the French population of that place, though he will labour among all classes as the way may be open to him.

ONLY TWENTY-FIVE CENTS TO REMIT FOR THE MONTH OF FEBRUARY.

The following letter, from one of our receiving agents, in one of the most highly favoured portions of our country, to the Treasurer of the Board, deserves to be seriously pondered by every friend of the Lord Jesus.

I did not write you at the close of the last month, in hopes at the close of this month to have received funds to report; but you will observe from my memorandum above, that twenty-five cents is the amount, all that I have received for Foreign Missions, since I last wrote you on the 22d December, 1853. I have had some solemn reflections; such an occurrence has not happened since I have acted as agent for the Board, which is now more than fifteen years. There must be something greatly out of joint in our Zion. Surely our people are joined to their idols, (silver and gold.) The husbandman has not been so amply remunerated for his labour, in the returns of the products of his lands, for a half century past, as in the past year; and, as you are aware, when the agriculturist prospers, all trades and tradesmen are prosperous. The merchant, the mechanic, the lawyer, the physician, as well as the labourer; and notwithstanding all this temporal prosperity, the treasury of the Lord is empty, and our Boards are calling upon our churches to do what—to make sacrifices? O no, but to give of the abundance they possess, to enable them to disseminate the gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ to the perishing millions who are dead in trespasses and sins—and the Church says, No. How dwelleth the love of God in us as a Church. There must be a load of guilt resting upon the Church at this time, and unless there is a change, our Zion will languish and die. Therefore, all who love our Lord Jesus Christ should examine themselves whether they are in the faith or not. For by their works ye shall know them. I did not intend to say as much when I commenced writing, and I close these desultory remarks with the prayer that the Church may be aroused to a sense of her duty, to pray the Lord of the vineyard to send forth labourers into his vineyard, and to give of their abundance to support the labourers in the field. Yours in Christian bonds.

MISSION TO THE CHINESE IN CALIFORNIA.

REPORT OF THE REV. W. SPEER: DECEMBER 31, 1853.

The close of the year has seemed to me the most convenient season for annually making the report of this mission. The present narrative has, therefore, been detained a few weeks longer than the anniversary of our arrival in this field of labour.

On landing from the steamer, on November 6th, 1852, our first duty was, in accordance with the instructions of the Executive Committee, an examination of the general field, and decision of the point most favourable to the commencement of a mission among the Chinese population of this State. San Francisco having been fixed upon, and the station approved by the Committee, it became my chief object to commence as speedily as possible preaching in Chinese.

Preaching in Chinese.

Our first public service was held on February 13, the first Sabbath of the Chinese year, in the Presbyterian church of which the Rev. A. Williams is pastor, and was an occasion of much interest to the friends of missions in this country. A sermon was preached from Acts xvii. 22d, &c. The Rev. Dr. Bridgman, then on his way to Shanghai, was providentially present, and assisted in the exercises, which were repeated in English, and left a deep impression upon many hearts. From that time till the close of September, preaching was maintained on Sabbath evenings, since at that time of the day a much better audience can be obtained than in the morning; and Sabbath-school and Bible-class was held usually at two o'clock in the afternoon. The attendance at these exercises was very unequal. About a dozen were tolerably regular and interested hearers. Besides these, on some occasions the chapel would be quite full. When news was received from China in relation to the revolution, numbers would come to make inquiries as to its character and progress. On one evening in June, notice having been given that some letters from China would be read at the close of the exercises, crowds came that could not find admittance. Public preaching has now been suspended until we can get the new brick mission chapel completed. The number attending the Sabbath-school was rarely over twenty-five, often but a few, on account of the interference of the hour with the Chinese business, which is but little interrupted here by the Sabbath day. Of those that heard the word through these means, several heard intelligently, seemed much impressed, and received seed which I trust will never perish, but spring up in everlasting life. One young man, once a scholar at a mission-school in Hong-Kong, of whom I had much hope, and who has shed tears when I have spoken to him of his immortal soul, has become lately more lukewarm. He says, however, that he still maintains daily private reading of the Scriptures, and prayer. He has had recently some trying pecuniary reverses. I trust he may yet be brought to the feet of Christ. Another person, an old and almost blind man, for a long time showed much interest in the truth, and searched the Scriptures with assiduity. Of him also I have hopes that he will yet be brought in Christ to see light. Two young men besides the above, who were in the night-school for several months, often made inquiries indicating thoughtfulness on the subject of salvation. No visible conversions, however, have been made. In this respect the year has passed, to the sorrow of your missionary, without the success he had hoped. This is a field where he trusts, in future days, the Spirit of the Lord will be gloriously displayed. Would that it may be in our time.

Social Religious Meeting.

On Wednesday evening we have had frequently social prayer-meetings in the Chinese language, and at present have regular family worship at nine o'clock in the morning. On these occasions the prayers made by the Chinese church members are often spiritual and edifying, indicating a clear comprehension of the Scripture system of redemption and a careful and minute study of the word of God. Our habit is to read an appropriate chapter, and call on some of those present to lead in prayer, accompanying our exercises with singing also, in which two or three are quite proficient, and for which they have some taste. It is doubtful whether the shrill, artificial screeching of the Chinese ever can be adapted to Christian hymns. Our music consists wholly of the well known tunes of our American churches. To hear sounds so foreign and strange, coming from lips so long idolatrous, embodying the worship of the living God, will oft bring tears of thankfulness into the eyes of Christians; and some have expressed great satisfaction from attending services of which they understood only the spirit and object.

Organization of the Church.

One of the most interesting events of the year to the mission was the organization of a Chinese Presbyterian church, the first Christian organization made among that people on this continent, or outside of that of Asia. May it be the precursor of a great multitude. In October, Lai Sam and Lam Chuen, two members of the Presbyterian church of the Rev. Dr. Legge, in Hong Kong, arrived in this city from the mines, where they had been at work for a year or two. It was their purpose to return to China, being discouraged by ill health and want of success, from further attempts at mining. They were both willing to remain here upon provision being made for a moderate support, and the more cheerfully when both were employed in connection with the mission, as one had been for several years a colporteur, and the other a printer in connection with the London Society's mission in Hong Kong. Previous to their coming, there had been two other members of the same church at home, named Ho Cheung and Ho Chiu, cousins, engaged in this city in the employment of merchants. With these four, on Sabbath, November 6, we organized a church. A sermon was preached in Chinese on Matt. x. 32: "Whosoever shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven," which was rendered into English for the sake of the large congregation of our own countrymen who were present. A charge was given to the members by the Rev. Mr. Williams and interpreted to them; after which Lai Sam was ordained to the office of elder, according to the mode prescribed in the Confession of Faith. For this post he is fitted by his steady piety, zealous and fearless spirit, and by his years. We trust he will adorn his calling in the eyes of his own people and churches. The Rev. Mr. Woodbridge of the Stockton Presbytery, was present, and took some part in the exercises of the afternoon. The whole services were solemn and edifying. The infant church made a favourable impression on all beholders. I feel much confidence in the Christian character of the whole four members; all have undergone severe trials and been, so far as I know, faithful. May they be established and strengthened by divine grace, and become a blessing to their fellow-countrymen in this land!

English preaching.

About one sermon on each Sabbath has been preached in the English language in the churches of this city and the neighbouring towns; many of which have been on subjects connected with the missionary enterprise. The results of these for good have been witnessed in increased interest and activity manifested in the prosecution of the work of missions. It is the request of friends here, that when we enter the new mission house, a regular sermon shall be preached on the first Sabbath of each month, for the benefit of the Christian community.

Lectures on China—Mission-House.

During the year past the interest that is felt here on all that pertains to China has led the citizens of San Francisco on several occasions to call on me for public addresses and lectures on various topics connected with the religion, arts, literature, and history of that nation. These I have endeavoured to make subservient to the great end in view. Addresses also have been delivered before the Bible and Tract Societies on missionary subjects. In the months of June and July two courses of lectures were given, embracing a general view of the people of China, and the religious missions to them, which were attended by large numbers of the citizens. At the close of them a subscription was commenced for the purpose of building a mission-house and chapel, from which we have realized thus far over fourteen thousand dollars. The most gratifying feature of this contribution is, that over two thousand dollars of it was subscribed by the Chinese merchants and shopkeepers of the city, seven subscriptions being each of a hundred dollars or over, and fifteen of the sum of fifty dollars each. This money has nearly all been paid in. The fourteen thousand dollars received has now all been expended in the construction of a mission-house, which will be of brick, three stories in height, and contain a chapel, schoolroom, parsonage, and other apartments necessary for carrying on effectively the mission work among the Chinese. This building will require several thousand dollars additional, which but for the extreme depression of business at present, would be promptly subscribed here. The house, with the lot, has been secured solely and for ever to the undisturbed use of the missionaries of the Presbyterian Board, unless the Presbyterian Church shall voluntarily resign the appointment of occupants for it. In connection with the notice of this edifice, it is a duty I owe to this community to express my warm gratitude for the great liberality they have shown to this enterprise, and toward the mission in all its departments. Funds have never been sought for any purpose connected with it without meeting a cordial response, in some cases to amounts beyond what I thought individuals ought, in justice to themselves, to bestow. At present, in compliance with the formal request of a number of gentlemen in the city, I am engaged in giving a course of three lectures on the origin, character, and probable results of the Chinese revolution. We have two objects in view: first to satisfy the public wish on this point, and second, to pave the way thus for an application for the sum still needed for the completion of the mission-house.

School.

A night-school was maintained from February to August. For a short time at first, a small sum was required from the scholars, to pay the rent of the room; but it was soon thrown open to all, as many of the Chinese are scarce able to provide for themselves, and all are absorbed in the pursuit of gain. The attendance was very irregular; on some evenings but a few were present, on others, above thirty. The instructions given were in the simplest rudiments of an English education. Many were taught the "A B C," and the names of the figures. On Saturday nights, it was understood that we would have electrical experiments, or an exhibition with the magic lantern, or a lesson from the globe; and then the room was often crowded, and great wonder and delight were expressed. Besides the useful information conveyed, many a deep superstition was thus uprooted from their minds. At the close, those who were present were usually invited to attend our religious services and Sabbath-school on the day following. In the Mission-House, we wish to have a library of Chinese and English books, a reading-room with newspapers, and a more complete philosophical apparatus. For presents of whatever may aid us in this branch of our work, we shall be under great obligations to our friends in the East.

Hospital Visitation.

There are generally a dozen or more Chinese patients in one of the wards of the Marine Hospital. The diseases for which they are brought there are usually chronic. Many are dropsical, paralytic, or suffering with some abdominal disorder, arising from want of proper food on shipboard, or exposure in the mines. These have been read and prayed with, at such times as I have been able to visit them—not so often as should have been done. Some of the cases have been deeply interesting; one instance was that of a poor young man, upon whom, after his entrance into the hospital, symptoms of leprosy were gradually developed, until he became a figure hideous to behold. One afternoon, about an hour after he had been visited by the colporteur Lai Sam and myself, and a portion of a tract read and explained, and a prayer offered, his whole frame having long seemed to be thoroughly corrupt and diseased, an internal rupture took place, and in great agony he expired. There was no reason to hope for a change of heart, or saving faith in Jesus Christ. Some of these patients after recovery came to visit us, and evinced a gratitude for the kindness shown them, which it may be hoped will prepare the way for the favourable reception of Christian truth.

Opportunity was often afforded during visits to the hospital, to instruct and comfort other patients than the Chinese. An Englishman, who had been deluded by the Mormons, and had left a good patrimony in the city of Norwich, to seek an earthly paradise, came here, on his way back from Salt Lake, ill with chronic dysentery. It pleased God to bring him apparently to an humble and penitent acceptance of Jesus Christ as his Saviour, and he died in comfort, and the hope of an entrance into the kingdom of heaven. A poor, simple-minded negro, who lay many weeks with a painful scrofulous disease of the lower extremities, was also gradually led to a joyful faith in Christ. He suffered great pain. The foot first, and then the leg, was amputated. He bore all with fortitude. His last hours were filled with happiness inexpressible. Angels seemed to comfort him. He died in triumph. Details of these and other cases must be omitted in the present report. During the past winter, my visits to the hospital have been few; yet this is one mode of usefulness I hope to improve as circumstances allow, and upon which we may expect the blessing of the Lord Jesus. We hope to be able to dispense medicines to a small extent at the Mission-House, and will probably make application to you for some for that purpose, as soon as we are prepared to use them.

Tract Distribution.

The number of tracts on hand has not been such as to allow a very free distribution of them. A few hundreds have been taken or sent to the interior of the State to the mining districts. A number of ships returning to China with passengers have been supplied with Testaments and assortments of tracts, for reading on the voyage, and distribution among the homes whence the people have come. The company-houses, or hwui-kwans, where strangers in the city lodge, and the shops generally, have been visited by myself or Lai Sam. Sometimes we have been most joyfully received, particularly on shipboard; yet the hateful old spirit of the Canton people has led a few individuals to treat these messengers of peace to them with contempt, as books containing foreign doctrines. I have tried in vain to get some of the tracts of the revolutionists in China, to show to the people here; and would suggest that suitable selections be made from them by our brethren at Shanghai or Ningpo, and printed for distribution. They would be read with great eagerness by the Chinese here, and be of great benefit to the Christian cause.

Assistants.

In the spring and summer, at different times, two persons were employed as sien-sangs, or teachers; one of them a professed convert, baptized by the Rev. Dr. Gutzlaff, of whom, though a most amiable man, and one much interested in American institutions, yet there is reason to fear that his eyes are not opened to receive the humbling truths of the gospel. Lam Chuen, one of the church members, is now employed in that capacity. He will be of much use to us, if at some future time we should be able to get a fount of Chinese type, and print a newspaper here in that language.

Lai Sam, our elder in the church, is daily labouring as a colporteur, a work, as before mentioned, in which he had several years' experience in China. He is an humble, diligent, fearless, and spiritually-minded man. I have never seen a native convert in China or here, of whose Christian character I have been better satisfied. At another time, I will translate some extracts from the journal which he daily keeps. On the first page of it, he has inscribed two sentences, as follows: "Fear not reviling, nor the hurt nor destruction of the body, but fear lest the soul also be cast into hell;" and another admonition, also taken from the charge to the twelve by our Saviour, "Like sheep in the midst of wolves, they are wise as serpents, and harmless as doves." The salary of Lai Sam will be provided for here.

Visits to the Interior.

Several visits have been made to some of the cities and towns in the interior of the State, partly for the purpose of lecturing, and thus awakening a warmer Christian sympathy in the Chinese, a sympathy of which, alas, they receive too little; and partly for the sake of proclaiming the gospel to them. These visits have in nearly every case been followed by an increased temporary interest in their welfare. It has been my hope that classes would be formed in the Sabbath-schools for their instruction, and that some would be induced to observe the Sabbath and come to our churches. I have preached on some of these visits to Chinese hearers, not, I trust, without some good being done. Such occasional visits will be, when the mission is fully established, regarded as a part of the duty of both myself and assistants.

At Nevada, in the fall, I was summoned as interpreter in a case of the murder of a Chinaman by three Americans. The Chinese of the neighbourhood felt a deep interest in the trial. During it I preached twice to those in the town, the last time by their own request. The Chinese in the interior seem to me more friendly than in San Francisco. Among the mines they are in circumstances to feel more sensibly their weakness, and too often suffer shocking injustice and injuries, more especially from Europeans, foreigners and Mexicans. Even the Digger Indians feel a special license to murder and rob this harmless people.

General Remarks.

In reviewing the operations of the year, I feel that there is cause for gratitude to God for what has been accomplished, especially in the way of preparation for future missionary labour. The field is a promising and delightful one. Though the number of Chinese residing in the city is small, yet there are many influences for good exerted upon them, and we may trust that God will answer the prayers of his people by granting the converting power of his Holy Spirit upon the exhibition of divine truth to them. I think their confidence and respect have been secured for the work; and look forward with hope to the finishing of our mission-house, and the devotion of all my time and strength to direct labour among them.

The Chinese are much stimulated to improvement by their residence in this country. Several have taken out the papers necessary to becoming citizens in due time. Many admire our institutions, and imitate some of our customs. Our own people regard the mission with favour. A deep interest is felt in the prospective commerce with China; when this city and Shanghai shall have been linked together by steam, and this port be the point of connection between the old and new world, and also in that wonderful revolution which is breaking down the ancient barriers of the East, and opening it to civilization and Christianity.

On the other hand, I feel that my labours among the Chinese have not been so abundant, faithful, and prayerful, as they should have been; and how far my own heart has been from realizing their dreadful condition as idolaters and guilty sinners going down to everlasting punishment. In their temporal condition there is much to mourn. They are given to gambling almost universally, and their tables are encouraged by the sanction of a municipal license, (at $50 per month for each table.) Hundreds of the most infamous females are imported hither from the boats upon the Canton river, where they are purchased by the head by Chinese speculators, and brought here to pollute our mining population, and their own people. The men working in the mines have often been treated in the most barbarous manner by the whites of various nations; many having been shot down like brutes, and the offenders allowed to go unpunished by our laws. Their effeminate frames have often sunk under the hardships of mountain toil, miserable food, and insufficient shelter. They enjoy unhindered indulgence in the intoxicating drug, which has poisoned many thousands of their countrymen; and not a few amidst their calamities have used opium to destroy their wretched existence. As a people, the Chinese here are, in many respects, to be deeply pitied. May the sympathies of Christians be drawn out toward them; and to each church, and to each pastor, where this report shall be read in our missionary paper, may we not send from this new and important field, the sincere and anxious request, that in their prayers mention may often be made of the heathen whom God is bringing for instruction and knowledge of salvation to the shores of our own enlightened and Christian land.

INDIA: AGRA MISSION.

JOURNAL OF THE REV. JOSEPH WARREN.

Ambala and Saharunpur.

On my return from Lahor, I spent a night at Lodiana. In travelling in a dooly, an occasional night's quiet rest is very acceptable. I had been moving all night for three nights, and seeing sights, examining schools, preaching, and talking nearly all the day time. One can sleep sometimes in a dooly, but not until nature insists upon it; and when in the midst of the deepest sleep, long unsuccessfully wooed, the traveller is sure to be waked up by the bearers for their present, before he is made over to a new set, or by a ferry. It takes some time to settle to sleep again, and in the mean time, perhaps half of the distance to the next waking place will be passed. Then sometimes there were certain discrepancies among the bearers; one of them, it may be, had the habit of taking longer steps than the others; and when he got out of step the jolting would drive all ability to sleep far away. So I was glad of a night during which I could lie still. From Lodiana I took with me the son of the Deputy Assistant Commissioner, who was going down to enter our school at Agra.

A Runaway Soldier.

We spent the next day at a traveller's bungalow. Shortly after we reached it, and when the sun was becoming very hot, I was called out to speak with an Englishman; and going into the verandah, I found a very dirty and dissipated looking young man on a little ragged native horse, in charge of a native police officer. They could not understand ten words of each other's language, and I was wanted to interpret. I found that the poor young man was from an English corps stationed at Jalandar; that he had become tired of soldiering, and ran away. He had been caught several miles east of this place, and was being taken back. He asked me to explain to the policeman his demand to have English bread to eat; said that the night before they had given him only the unleavened cakes, baked before the fire, which the natives eat. I explained to him that this was the best the natives could do at a distance from a station, and where no regimental baker was within reach. I gave the poor fellow the best advice that I could as to his future conduct, and told him that religion would have saved him from his troubles, which he confessed to be true. This made us sorrowful for a good while.

Arrival at Ambala—An inquirer after the truth.

After another night's march we reached Ambala at half-past six in the morning, and stopped at the house of my old friend, Rev. J. M. Jamieson. Mr. Orbison, his only associate at this station, was still absent on the tour in the hills with Mr. Woodside, which I had left him just commencing at Kasauli; and it was vacation time in the school. I spent the day very pleasantly with the Jamiesons. A good part of the day was passed in long interviews with a Brahmin—a Pandit—who was from the Panjab. He had been attached in some capacity, which I have forgotten, to the establishment of Rajah Gulah Singh of Jamú, whom the English have made Maharajah of Jamú and Cashmere. Afterwards he lived a couple of years at Kangra. He had met with our missionaries at Kangra and at Jawálá Mukhí, and procured and read our books. He appeared to be fully convinced of the falsehood and folly of Hinduism, and generally of the truth of Christianity; though there were some doctrines about which he required further information. He was travelling about, making inquiries of different missionaries, and holding discussions with Pandits. There appeared to be several good points in him—he was living on his own money, and not begging, as many professed inquirers do; he had been offered a situation as a teacher in a Government school, and declined it, saying that he would first spend what money he had while settling for himself the matter of religion, and then he would take such service as would afford him the means of living; and he seemed honest and sincere. The unfavourable points were equally prominent: he seemed very anxious to show that he was a learned man, and would have talked as much about eclipses of the sun and moon as about Christ, if we had not taken great pains to keep him to the more important matter. He said that he had been induced to visit Mr. Jamieson by hearing, amongst the Pandits at Patiálá, that he was learned in astronomy. He appeared to have but little feeling on the subject of sin. This, however, is not to be wondered at. Hindus are more accustomed to look on some mere ceremonial defilement as sin, than on transgressions of the moral law; and it takes a long time to get their conscience to act in a really healthful manner. During the second day, the greater part of which I spent there, we had further conversations with him. He took possession of an empty apartment on Mr. Jamieson's premises, and expressed his intention to remain several days, in order to learn that in which he was not satisfied. Mr. Jamieson has since written to me, that he had gone on to Saharunpur, to converse with our brethren there.

Burial of a child—The new school-house.

We would have gone to the city in the evening to preach, had it not been so very hot, the hot winds being in full blast, that we could not go out early; and we had the funeral of a little child, belonging to one of the native Christian families to attend to. I performed the service, and we committed the body to the ground, in a part of the mission-house garden, which had been set apart for the purpose of forming a burial ground. This child, I believe, was the first to take possession of it. After the funeral, we had only time to visit the school-house, which was being built in the city. It will be a house well adapted to its purpose; and when it shall be opened, I have no doubt, from its situation, that it will prove the means of making the school more useful. I understand the school is now well attended, for a place no larger than Ambala; but a small distance makes a great difference in a place of public resort; and therefore our school-houses should always have carefully chosen sites.

Departure for Saharunpur—Bearers contend for large wages—Preaching.

The next day, about five in the afternoon, we left Ambala on our way to Saharunpur. I had Mr. Orbison's horse and buggy for the first ten miles, partly to save some expense, and partly to get over the ground more quickly; because the stage for this night was very long—indeed, it is usually divided into two. On reaching the place where the doolies had been sent, there was some little delay in collecting bearers, as they undertook to drive a hard bargain with me, and to enforce it by a combination. I began to proclaim that I would take coolies, who are mere bearers of burdens, and work for half the wages of professional bearers, and then the men came to fair terms immediately. While waiting for them to get together, I talked about Christianity for a quarter of an hour to the people around. After these bearers had accomplished their ten miles, they begged that I would keep them for another ten; though when they were trying to extort from me an unusual price, they did not wish to go at all. In the morning after daylight, we crossed the Jumna; and after some more miles of jolting, found Mr. Campbell's horse and buggy, which had been sent out for us, for the same reason that made us borrow one at Ambala. We reached Saharunpur about 9 o'clock.

Arrival at Saharunpur—Labours of the missionary brethren here—Street preaching.

I remained at Saharunpur over the Sabbath, and preached in their very handsome church, in both Hindustani and English. The congregation on both occasions was good. There is here an orphan asylum for boys, and several catechists and teachers; so that there are more materials for a Hindustani congregation than at Ambala, where operations have been commenced more recently. Most of the English residents at Saharunpur attend the one English service of the mission every Sabbath.

The three mission-houses, with the church and burial ground in their midst, are pleasantly situated, and well planned. The school-house is well placed in the border of the city, and I understand that the school is promising, and doing good. Mr. Campbell was delivering a course of lectures on the maps, connecting with his account of any country, informal statements relating to its history, religion, manners, &c. The school was greatly interested in these lectures, and many people from the city were attracted to hear them.

There is at Saharunpur probably a more thoroughly organized plan of street preaching than at any of our other stations. Some of the mission go to the city every evening; and the plans are so laid, that if one be otherwise engaged, or unwell, still the main party goes, and the work is done.

After leaving Saharunpur I hurried home; and I will not ask the readers of the Record to accompany me farther. I have already said almost all I wish to say. I will only add, that this view of the Lodiana mission, and the evident spread of knowledge and missionary influence, from the Ganges to the Jhelum, both delighted and strengthened me.

OBITUARY

OF THE REV. JOSEPH PORTER.

Mr. Porter was born in Derby Plains, in the State of Ohio, January 5th, 1808. His paternal ancestors he traced back to Massachusetts, and his maternal to Ireland, being of Scotch origin. His parents were both pious. His religious training, therefore, began with his earliest childhood. But at the tender age of twenty months, he was bereaved of his father. How soon his first religious impressions began to develope themselves, he was not able to say. He, however, remembered, when, at the age of five or six years, he used, with his sisters, to seek a retired place in the garden for prayer. Shortly after his father's death, his mother, with her children, removed within the limits of the church of which her eldest brother was the pastor. Under his ministrations in the sanctuary, and his mother's instructions at home, Mr. Porter received those first lessons in divine things which in after life were ever his stay and support. When about the age of thirteen, he heard a melting sermon preached from the text, "I have surely heard Ephraim bemoaning himself." He retired, bathed in tears, to the churchyard, where his mother, in passing by, found him, and with deep emotion said to him, "My son, are you a mourning Ephraim?" It was under this sermon that the first definite thoughts of entering the gospel ministry were awakened in his mind; thoughts which were never abandoned, but which were known to no human being for years after. It was in his sixteenth year, while living with his eldest brother, that he humbly trusted his conversion to God took place. It was, however, more than three years after this time, that he was visibly connected with God's people. At the time of Mr. Porter's uniting with the church, he was living with a minister, at a distance from home, and pursuing his studies under his care, for entering the ministry. After remaining with him some fifteen months, he returned home, where, with many interruptions, he continued his studies with his uncle. While thus employed, he established and superintended a Sabbath-school in New Carlisle, which is still in existence, and has been greatly blessed. It was while here that he made a formal surrender of himself to God, to become a foreign missionary. In pursuance of this object, he entered himself a student in the Miami University, where he spent four and a half years, and was graduated in the autumn of 1835.

A short time previous to his leaving the University, he was united in marriage with Miss Harriet Athearn, a young lady of kindred spirit, who accompanied him to India, and shared his joys and sorrows until separated from him by death in 1842.

In conversation with his mother concerning his mission, the inquiry was made, "Mother, have you any objection to my going to India as a missionary?" She replied, "My son, I dedicated you to God in your baptism for the gospel ministry, but I never thought of your going to a foreign field. Still, I have nothing to object." This was another instance of the influence of the faith and prayers of a pious mother, in leading her sons to a covenant-keeping God. She led his wayward feet into the paths of peace, and then departed to her rest. May we not hope that they are now rejoicing together in the presence of their Saviour.

In November, 1835, Mr. and Mrs. Porter, in company with six other missionaries and their wives, sailed from Philadelphia for Calcutta. While on the passage, he and his brethren were instrumental, as they hoped, in bringing the Captain and first mate of the ship, and several of the sailors, to the knowledge of the truth. The writer, who was one of the company, well remembers with what earnestness Mr. Porter prayed that God would give us all that sailed with us, and how affectionately he urged the unconverted to turn to Jesus. On his arrival at his destined field in Northern India, he was appointed to the Lodiana station, and took charge of the High-school, in December, 1836.

In October, 1837, he was ordained to the gospel ministry, by the Lodiana Presbytery. This station, with the exception of two years he was absent on a visit to his native land in 1848 and 1849, was the scene of his labours ever since his arrival. While at home, Mr. Porter was united in marriage to Miss Mary Parvin, daughter of the late Rev. Theophilus Parvin, missionary to South America, and granddaughter of the late Hon. Cæsar Rodney, Minister to the Court of Brazil. She survives to mourn his loss. For several years before his death, Mr. Porter had charge of the Lodiana mission press, and was indefatigable in his labours to make it efficient. He also had charge of all the mission buildings, and seemed to take pleasure in relieving his brethren of the secular affairs of the station. This he did the more cheerfully, as for several years an affection of the throat, which finally undermined his constitution, prevented him from doing much in the way of direct preaching. He was well acquainted with the Hindustani and Panjábi languages, and when his health permitted, was an acceptable and affectionate preacher in these dialects. His last work on earth was correcting the final proof sheets of a Panjábi Dictionary, on which he and two of his brethren had long laboured. This labour he continued until the day before his death, or until his hand refused to perform what his heart desired. In his intercourse with the natives, whether Christian or heathen, our departed brother was ever kind and considerate; but no one felt more deeply when his kindness was repaid with ingratitude. He was ever ready to give advice and aid to those who requested his assistance. He was highly esteemed by his brethren, and all who knew him, for his kindness of heart and work's sake. His mind was more accurate and practical, than brilliant or imaginative. In speaking or writing, his sole aim was to make a true impression, and his sincerity seldom failed to carry conviction to his audience and readers. His memory was remarkably retentive as to facts and dates. His judgment was sound, and his opinions on all subjects within the range of his information, were ever valuable. He did not exercise in things too high for him. Like Paul, he determined to know nothing save Jesus Christ, and him crucified. On this his heart was fixed. One of the most conspicuous traits in his character was perseverance. By this he accomplished much in his missionary career. "For some months before his death (writes his widow,) when alluding to the probable issue of his illness, he remarked that while he felt that as far as regarded himself, it would be better to depart and be with Christ, yet he would like to labour a little more for his Master, and although he was able to commit the dear members of his family to the Lord, yet he deeply felt the separation. On the evening of that day I had a very delightful conversation with him; and had I known that I was then listening to what might be almost called his dying words, they would have been treasured up with more care. Our orphan girls were singing a tune of which he was very fond, in their schoolroom. He caught the sound, and endeavoured to join in their song of praise, and then remarked that he had felt the inability to sing, caused by the affection of his throat, most deeply, so that he had often been ready to weep. 'But,' said he, 'I shall sound nobler strains and strike a golden harp in heaven;' and after enlarging for some time on this theme, he exclaimed with much solemnity and bursting into tears, 'O, the amazing grace that saved a wretch like me!' In speaking of the trials through which we, as a family, had been led, he said, 'We are indeed passing through deep waters; but we have many precious promises on which to lean.' Although he was aware of the critical state of of his health, yet he did not realize how near death was; for, after speaking of his great prostration, he added, 'But I have a strong hope that I shall yet be permitted to praise God in the land of the living.' At my request, he dictated a message for his dear absent children. 'Tell them,' said he, 'that it is my heart's desire and prayer for them, that they should be fitted by natural abilities, training, and, more than all, by grace, for the gospel ministry; and tell them, too, to take care of their mother.' On the day previous to his death, he had the orphan girls called in, and as they gathered around his couch, he spoke to them of the importance of listening to the preached word, remembering that it was from God, and was able to make them wise unto salvation. With deep feeling, he urged upon them the importance of preparation for death, so that when they should be in his situation they would not fear. They wept with him; but whether any lasting impression was made the future must show. The morning of his death his mind wandered much; still, on being asked if Jesus was precious, he replied, ' Aur kuecht nakir'—'There is none beside,' and in his wandering he seemed to mistake the door where the bright morning light was shining, for the entrance into heaven. But soon the last tones of his voice died away on our ears, and he sank like a weary child to rest. Jesus, no doubt, was with him, and the dark valley of the shadow of death was lightened by his smiles. The river of death seemed very narrow, for there was scarce a sigh or a groan to tell when it was passed."

He died on the morning of the 21st of November, 1853, and in the forty-sixth year of his age. Had he been permitted to choose the place, and time, and circumstances of his death, he would, in all probability, have chosen them just as they occurred.

He breathed his last in Lodiana, at the time of the annual meeting of the Mission, and in the presence of eight of his missionary brethren.

At their next session, the following minute was adopted:

Whereas, Since our last Session it has pleased the Lord to remove our dear brother and fellow missionary, the Rev. Joseph Porter, from the labours of earth to the fruition of heaven,

Resolved, That this meeting, humbly acquiescing in the afflictive providence, and deeply sympathizing with the widow and children of our deceased brother, cordially record on our minutes our high sense of his sterling qualities as a man, a husband, and father, and of his humble evangelical piety, and of his faithfulness as a missionary of the cross, who, after seventeen years of devoted labour at this station, has died at his post, respected and lamented by all who knew him. J. M. J.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MINUTES OF THE NINGPO PRESBYTERY, CHINA, AT THEIR MEETING IN NOVEMBER, 1853.

Two years and a half ago, I wrote you a letter giving a general account of the Ningpo Presbytery, from the period of its organization until that time. According to the order prescribed in the book, I will continue to notice our proceedings up to this time.

In November, 1851, the Presbytery was opened with a sermon by Rev. H. V. Rankin, on "The Encouragements of the missionary in his work." Rev. S. N. and W. P. Martin presented their dismissals from the Presbytery of New Albany, and were received into the Ningpo Presbytery.

May 19th, 1852.—Mr. Way in the Chair. Mr. W. P. Martin preached before Presbytery on "Idolatry." Voted, to hold henceforth our regular meetings only once a year, the first Wednesday of November.

November 3d, 1853.—Rev. S. N. Martin in the Chair. Moderator preached on "The Adoption of Children."

November 3d, 1852.—Rev. W. P. Martin in the Chair. Rev. A. W. Loomis was dismissed to join the first Presbytery of New York. It was voted that a Committee of three be appointed to translate into the Ningpo colloquial language portions of the Form of Government, Directory for Worship, and Book of Discipline, together with the Shorter Catechism, to be presented for approval at the next annual meeting. Also to correspond with our brethren in Shanghai and Canton, respecting the translation of the whole or part of the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church in the mother language of China. Rev. W. P. Martin, H. V. Rankin, and R. J. Way, were by ballot elected said Committee.

Rev. Mr. Way preached the sermon before Presbytery, on the doctrine of election.

The Narrative of Religion which was read, presented a favourable picture. Seven natives have been added to the Church, on profession, and have been baptized during the year—all of them educated—five of whom are young men, who, we fondly hope, may yet all of them become evangelists. The total number of native communicants is 13; also 8 members who are either missionaries, or the wives of missionaries. Other Chinese are inquirers. Four children have been baptized. One native church member has died, making the second who has been removed by death belonging to the church. Two of those earliest baptized have denied the faith, and been suspended and excommunicated. The present number of converts all seem to run well. Yet, while we gratefully acknowledge God's merciful dealings with us, we would seek to be very humble, lest these very favourable circumstances lead us to self-gratulation and consequent pride.

The present number of ministers in this Presbytery consists of seven, viz., Rev. Messrs. Way, Quarterman, Rankin, S. N. Martin, all of Ningpo; and Rev. Messrs. Culbertson and Wight, of Shanghai. During the year, Mr. Coulter, a member of the church, and also a candidate, has been removed by death. With Christian regard, I am, Rev. and dear Sir, very truly yours,

H. V. RANKIN,
Stated Clerk of Ningpo Presbytery.

THE CLAIMS OF OLD CALABAR AND ITS VICINITY.

Old Calabar is situated on the western coast of Africa, in the Gulf of Benin, and between the principal outlets of the Niger and the Kamerúns mountain. It was noted in former times for the atrociously cruel habits of its people, and for its immensely large slave trade.

The United Presbyterian Church of Scotland formed a mission there in 1846, and from the influence which the missionaries have already acquired over the minds of the people, and the work of grace that has recently commenced there, it may hereafter become as pre-eminent for the outpouring of God's spirit, as it has heretofore been for its heathenish cruelties. Our readers will be interested in the following description of the place, and its prospects as a missionary station.

In the "Record" for November, a paper, written by the Rev. Mr. Waddell, was given, stating that the time has arrived for extending the mission, describing six places where missionaries might advantageously be located, and proposing that an extra sum of £2000 be raised for the purpose of opening these stations. Since that time Mr. Waddell has been actively engaged in collecting money for this object, and we are happy to state that he has already obtained upwards of £1000. It is obvious, however, that at least £3000 will be needed to defray the expenses connected with founding six new stations, irrespective of what will be requisite for caring them on; and the very gratifying tidings from Calabar, announced in the last and in the present numbers of the "Record," show that the work of conversion has there been begun, that the mission was never in so interesting a state as it is at present, and that it is incumbent upon us to do what we can to sustain and enlarge it. The committee on foreign missions consider this a fit time for laying before the Church the following statements.

1. The Inland Regions of Western Central Africa present a very extensive field for Missionary operations.—The great rivers, the Niger and the Tchadda, the former of which has a course of 2600 and the latter of 1500 miles, drain with their tributaries the richest, the most fertile, and the best peopled portions of Western Africa. The countries which these rivers and their branches irrigate, are said to be inhabited by a population which amounts to more than thirty millions. These vast multitudes are sunk in the deepest ignorance, superstition, and spiritual wretchedness. They have been, and they still are without the gospel. There is not a spot in all these lands, teeming though they are with inhabitants, where the feet of a Christian teacher have ever stood, or where the sound of salvation has ever been heard. Sixty generations have, since the ascension of the Saviour, passed away, embracing probably greatly more than a thousand millions of immortal beings; and yet, though during all that period the words "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," were sounding in the ears of the Church, no messenger of mercy was sent to them, and they were allowed to live without Christ and to die without hope. The inhabitants of these regions are as destitute at this day as their fathers were eighteen centuries ago, and their cry for sympathy and help comes across the broad plains of Africa and the waters of the Atlantic with a thrilling distinctness, enough to move the deepest feelings of the Christian churches.

2. The proper entrance to these wide and populous regions is through Old Calabar.—The Niger and the Tchadda unite their waters about 170 miles inland, flow in a combined stream for nearly 60 miles, and then throw off branches, thus reaching the Atlantic by many mouths. These run through the Delta, an immense alluvial deposit, covered with trees and grass, and inhabited by fierce and savage tribes. The navigation of the Delta is almost impracticable. The streams are winding, full of mud-banks, skirted by rank vegetation, and steaming with malaria; and the consequence is, that the seeds of fever are sown before the ships have threaded their way through the mazes of the Delta, and reached the more healthy lands of the Middle Niger. Even the Ethiope steamer, though guided by the experience and skill of Mr. Becroft, took, in 1845, nearly a week to go through the windings of the Nun branch. It is very unlikely, therefore, that till the Delta be cleared of its forests and drained, and the rivers deepened, intercourse will, to any considerable extent, be carried on with the interior by means of its streams. Savage tribes, rotting vegetation, banks of mud, and deadly malaria, present obstacles which it will need many years to surmount, and which steam vessels alone can encounter. But the Calabar frith, which lies immediately to the east of the Delta, and which runs up into the country for nearly 60 miles, offers a free and safe access to ships of any burden at all seasons of the year. Our missions are planted within a few miles of the top of this frith. And the very important and valuable fact is, that the Cross river, a stream of great size, which flows into the frith, is, where it turns to the east, (some 50 miles inland,) within 40 miles of the Tchadda, the chief tributary of the Niger. Observe, then, the facilities which Old Calabar gives for the spread of the gospel. In the first place, its wide frith affords a safe and easy access to ships at all times, without their requiring to go through the pestilential Delta of the Niger. In the second place, around Calabar, and within a reachable distance, lie the six stations which Mr. Waddell has described, and which are waiting for missionaries. In the third place, the people of Calabar trade with the Eboes, of which they are themselves a colony, a numerous nation, whose territory stretches from the Cross river to the Niger. There is good reason to anticipate that our missionaries located at Ekrikok, one of the six stations, would ere long come into contact with the Eboes, and their friendship would open the way to the Niger above the Delta. In the fourth place, were a canal or railroad made which would connect the Cross river and the Tchadda—an undertaking which, considering the vast commercial resources of Central Africa, which the recently established as well as projected steam communication with the coast is likely to open up, is not beyond the power of modern enterprise—there would be had at nearly all periods ready access to Western Central Africa. What would be the results? Persons could sail down the Tchadda into the Niger, and hold intercourse with all the nations situated on its banks; or they could ascend the Tchadda and communicate with the numerous tribes whose countries its waters drain. The importance of the Tchadda as an inlet to Central Africa is beginning to be acknowledged. Hence Mr. Augustus Petermann, an eminent geographer, says, in the Athenæum for November 27, 1852, "I am inclined to think that the Tchadda will eventually form the natural and most important line from the west for spreading commerce and civilization into the very heart of inner Africa:" and again, "It is to the Kawara (the Niger) and the Tchadda, and more particularly to the latter, that we must look, as the means of ready access into the virgin countries, and the inexhaustible natural wealth of inner Africa." Indeed, recent information goes to show that the kingdoms situated on the Tchadda, and which are directly inland from Calabar, are of great extent and value. Dr. Barth, who is at present travelling in Western Central Africa, and who has perhaps done more than any other person to make it known, visited, not long ago, the town of Yola, built near the junction of the rivers Benue and Faro, the two upland branches of the Tchadda, and he says of the extensive kingdom of Adamawa, of which Yola is the capital, as stated in the Athenæum for November, 1851, "Adamawa is indeed a fine country, with very extensive valley plains of a most fertile soil, and irrigated, as it is, by a rainy season of seven months duration, it is uncommonly rich in pasture grounds, and consequently full of cattle." This kingdom, one of the most important in Western Central Africa, is directly north from Calabar. Our missionaries have but to advance up the Cross river, evangelize the nations which dwell on each side of it, and the tribes who inhabit the Alpine ranges where its waters rise, and they will go down upon the broad and fertile plains of Adamawa, and will, after turning its people to the Lord, find other nations, east, west, and north, waiting for their instruction. These notices unfold wide prospects, as they open up to our view many nations now lying in heathen darkness and in the shadow of death. But all these lands shall yet be visited with the light of salvation, and their multitudinous tribes brought to the knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus; and it is right for us to forecast the future, and to make preparation for the great work which the Church of Christ has there yet to do.

THE PSALMODIST.

Praise ye the Lord, both young men and maidens, old men and children. Let them praise the name of the Lord.—Ps. cxlv. 1, 12, 13.

An elder of a church, connected with another branch of the great Presbyterian family, in the course of a very pleasant interview, a few weeks ago, remarked, "I have felt a great interest in one of your publications—the Psalmodist. I think we have in our Church one of the best collections of Psalms and Hymns that I ever knew; but I have laid aside our book in my family worship, and adopted your Psalmodist. By its use we can conduct family worship in a manner much more to my mind; for we have the words and music both before us; and with the help of the piano, all difficulties about pitching tunes is avoided. I have endeavoured, for similar reasons, to introduce its use into our church."

The remarks of our friend have suggested a few thoughts, which we beg to lay before the readers of the "Record."

1. Singing is a most important and pleasing part of all worship, and of none more than of that of the family. The union of a household in this service, presents a most delightful scene. Together they attend the reading of the same great truths which form the basis of all right religious sentiments and sound morality. Together they feed on the exceeding great and precious promises, which the Spirit has written for the afflicted people of God. Together they offer "prayer and supplication with thanksgiving," to God, seeking all needed individual domestic, social, and public blessings. So ought they, together, to lift up their hearts and voices in the sweet songs of Zion. Let all sing. Let the tremulous tones of feeble age, the halting lispings of tender childhood, the strong, clear notes of man, and the soft and silvery voices of woman, mingle in sweet and solemn praise, morning and evening, around the beloved hearths of Christian homes.

2. The Psalmodist, with all other excellencies and claims to confidence, is eminently adapted to promote the accomplishment of this great purpose. In families where the head cannot set a tune, and where there is seldom, if ever, heard the sound of praise, let the neglected or misused "instrument" be called into requisition. The wife or daughter can thus make a sanctified use of this kind of knowledge, which often "puffeth up," and is too frequently devoted to purposes of mere vanity and ostentation, or of mere worldly pleasure. Thus children would grow up fond of singing, attached to our Church music, our Church Psalmody, and our Church doctrines, which are taught in this manner in a most pleasing form. If, as Dr. Alexander used to say, the reading of hymns was a most useful devotional exercise, how much more their singing.

3. And so there would be infused a more cheerful and exalted Christian sentiment in all our Christian households, those "dwellings of Jacob," which God loves. Better, it is true, that a family unite in reading a portion of Scripture together, than to have no family religious service. Still better to add prayer to the reading of the word, but best of all to enjoy the whole privilege—that "old men and children," "young men and maidens," unitedly praise the Lord, as well as read his word, and seek his favour. "I care not who makes the laws, if I can make the ballads of a nation," was a remark of a wise statesman, who, at once, thus evinced his deep insight of human nature, and his just appreciation of the power of music and poetry in moulding character. Oh! what a nation would this be, were there "light in every dwelling," and from the hearts and voices of thousands of families, morning and evening, the praises of God were uttered!

4. Our congregational music will never be what it ought to be, till we have more family singing. Let children be taught and trained to sing. Let them be encouraged to learn hymns by memory, and sing when alone. Singing hymns often keeps out Satan. The question is often asked, "What can we do to improve our church music?" Some propose organs; some want larger choirs; some hire musicians; we say, sing at home, at work, in the field.

5. Singing is part of heaven's blest employment. Let us learn the blessed art "before we quite forsake our clay." "Let every thing that hath breath praise the Lord."

LOCAL COLPORTAGE AGAIN.

We must cheerfully give place to the following excellent addition to our suggestions on this subject in our last issue. He who speaks from experience, ought to be heard. We regard it as one of the most important features in this enterprise of our Church, that it affords facilities for usefulness so well adapted to the means and opportunities of all. We have known a boy, ten years old, to sell sixty or seventy volumes, amounting to twenty or thirty dollars worth of books, in two or three days. Cannot parents judiciously employ their children in this work, and so train them to doing good, as well as to useful business habits? Here our Church can realize the mighty power of "littles." Let all, as they have opportunity, act on our brother's urgent suggestions. We know of some who have made a beginning, who will follow up this matter. We thank our correspondent for his prompt and forcible seconding.

For the Home and Foreign Record.

"A CHEAP WAY TO BE USEFUL—LOCAL COLPORTAGE."

The suggestions under this head in the March Record are of very great practical value. Not only is such local colportage "a cheap way to be useful," but it is an easy way, and a pleasant way. Let the reader turn to the article, and read it again, and begin at once to act upon it, for the way to do a thing is to do it.

To encourage others to adopt the plan suggested, I will just state my own experience in the matter. Several years ago, a friend let me have fifty dollars without interest, to get books to keep on hand for sale to my own people. I got some of the American Tract Society's publications, some of the American Sunday-school Union's, and all the publications of our own Board; and since then, having returned the fifty dollars in a year or two, I have kept all our publications, filling up the set about twice a year, as some of them are sold out; and every year since I began I have sold and given away from fifty to one hundred dollars worth of books. Of course, I make nothing by the operation; for though the discount may pay the expenses and the interest on the money, yet I give away much more than the amount of the discount. But though I make nothing, I think I am doing some little good—$2000 or $3000 worth of books and tracts must accomplish something. Besides, I am getting our books into circulation, and the people are acquiring a taste for reading, and some vile trash is also excluded—kept out.

Reader, just look again at the March Record, and read again the "Cheap Way to do Good," and begin to do it—do it now! W. J. M.

For the Home and Foreign Record.

"THE MASSES WILL NOT READ THEM—THEY ARE TOO SECTARIAN."

How often is the true-hearted Presbyterian pained to hear this remark. It is especially cutting when pronounced by one who has on his own ecclesiastical livery. "There are cases of this kind," said a specimen of this type to me once, after a long argument to prove the propriety of the doctrine-exchanging system, "they are too sectarian—the masses will not read them." He argued that it was proper enough that we should publish and circulate amongst our own people doctrinal books and tracts, but should leave the gospel to be scattered amongst the multitude by unsectarian associations. "The gospel! And what is gospel," said I, "but an evolving of the holy doctrine or teaching of our Lord and his apostles? Strip the Bible of its doctrines, and what have you left? The letter without the spirit—a carcase without a soul. Of what value, for example, would be a gospel rifled of the doctrine of justification by faith, through the imputed righteousness of the Lord Jesus Christ? Would it not be another gospel than that preached by Paul? And would there not be danger of incurring his displeasure who said, 'If any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book."

But the masses will read them. After a careful observation of several years, without disparaging others, I venture the assertion, that no publications are more generally acceptable to the people. Some, indeed, may purchase them with the view of criticising and objecting; but what of that? if the truth reaches them, it may strike between the joints of the harness. Others will be attracted by their neatness and cheapness. Many more will buy them from a love of the truths which they contain. Only let the churches furnish means to support a sufficient number of faithful colporteurs, who will carry these publications to the homes of the people, explain and recommend them, and the results will more than vindicate the above statement. In illustration of this position, I recollect after crossing from Northern Alabama into Tennessee, to have stopped for the purpose of feeding my horse and taking some refreshment. Whilst I sat on the porch of the tavern, the landlord, who had been absent, returned. After a few moments conversation, and without anything being said that could indicate any special interest on my part in the Board of Publication, "Sir," said he, "can you tell me anything about this Presbyterian Board of Publication?" "Yes," was my reply, "I know something of it." "Well," said he, "I think it is the greatest thing that was ever started in this country." I then asked him what he knew about the Presbyterian Board of Publication. "What do I know about it?" said he. "Why parson A——, (one of our colporteurs,) is along here every now and then, and I buy his books almost every time he comes." And he went into the house, and brought out an armful of your publications. "There," said he, "is a book I gave fifty cents for. You cannot go into a bookstore and buy it for less than a dollar. And there are two volumes, thirty cents apiece; I could not get them from anybody else for twice that. I inquired if there were many of them sold in that neighbourhood. "O yes," said he, "they are scattered in every direction about here. There is a Methodist preacher living below this that keeps them for sale." "A Methodist preacher! Is not that strange?" "Yes," said he, "I thought so, and mentioned it to him one day." "Well, what did he say?" "Why he said they were good books, and the cheapest he knew, and he would sell them." The masses will read them, and they are not too sectarian. Viator.

"CAST THY BREAD UPON THE WATERS."

Not long since, I met with a gratifying instance in which the labours of the Board were blessed in removing the doubts and enlightening the mind of one who had been for several months, as I trust, an humble and sincere seeker after faith. The person is a mechanic in moderate circumstances, who was for many years indifferent to the calls of the gospel, and wavering in speculative views between Arminian and Universalist views. Some months ago, he was awakened, and after a time obtained a hope of having passed from death unto life, and by his conversation and deportment, led many to feel a deep interest in him. The opponents of the doctrines of the sovereign and free grace of God, as taught in the standards of the Presbyterian Church, used argument and entreaty to induce him to unite with their society, until he told them that he would not unite with any Church until he had compared different systems of doctrine with the word of God. After having read several works furnished him by friends, he found that very much of the Arminian scheme was inconsistent with the Scriptures and with his own experience. At this juncture, your colporteur visited him, and as he could only procure a small volume, he chose the "Great Supper," and to use his own language to the writer, "it was just the work he needed." He was delighted with its clear explanation of the doctrines of grace, and exposition of the errors of enemies, and it was truly affecting to hear him tracing the stream to its fountain, in the purpose of God in the counsels of eternal and sovereign wisdom and grace.

This instance of the influence of the leaven of gospel truth, is encouraging, as showing what may be accomplished by disseminating the invaluable publications with which the colporteur goes forth, from house to house, leaving the silent, yet powerful messenger, to plead for the truth.

How many such cases there are, how many of the weak strengthened, inquirers enlightened, of those trusting in their own righteousness, of those in carnal security may be awakened to flee unto "the Lord of our righteousness," neither the officers of the Board, nor the colporteur, nor the contributor to the funds of the Board, who affords the means to place the silent preacher in the habitations of Christ's poor, or the careless sinner, may know here; but there is a record kept on high, and Jesus knows them that are his, and a cup of water shall not be forgotten if given in his name. P.

OBITUARY.

We record with sincere sorrow, the death of Mr. Simeon Bean, a colporteur in our employment, which took place early in the month of March.

Mr. Bean's pastor communicated this melancholy intelligence in a letter, from which we gather a few interesting statements respecting our deceased brother and fellow-labourer. Mr. Bean was brought up a Universalist; but, with some other members of his family, about two years since became the subject of divine grace. He united with the Presbyterian church of Marengo, Illinois, and has sustained a character of unblemished integrity and piety. His mind was one of much power. By the aids of the Spirit attending his diligent efforts to attain the knowledge of truth, he became a most thorough believer in the doctrines of grace, and a theologian of rare attainments for a layman. He loved the work in which he served his Master, and was zealous and efficient in doing good. His death was sudden, but full of peace.

May his mantle rest on some one who will take his place in a region greatly needing such labours!

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE JUSTIFIED BELIEVER. By W. B. Mackenzie, M.A. Incumbent of St. James, Holloway, (Eng.) pp. 150. 18mo.

This is a new book on an old subject. It was evidently written with a design to counteract the wrong teachings of Puseyism in the English Episcopal Church. The author is thoroughly imbued with sound scriptural views on this radically important subject. He treats successively, Justification by Faith, the Romish Doctrine of Justification, Peace with God, Filial Access to God, the Believer in Sorrow, Justification the Security for Holy Living, the Believer's Continuance in the Faith, and the Believer reviewing his Faith and Faithfulness. In these eight chapters, with some variety in degrees of excellence, we have constantly presented the "strong meat" of the gospel scheme; and the author's deep reverence for Scripture, and his thorough acquaintance with its teachings on the topics before him, are everywhere conspicuous in numerous and pertinent quotations, and clear and discriminating comments. The book is not only a complete antidote to the leading Puseyite errors, but a most excellent summary of doctrinal and practical truth on the great subject of Justification by Faith, adapted to all readers.

We append a few extracts as specimens of the style and spirit of the work.

"All that the law of God demands of man is provided by Christ. The incarnation, agonies, bloodshedding, death, and holy obedience of the Son of God, are the true, meritorious ground of justification. 'What the law could not do, God, sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh; that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit.' Rom. viii. 3, 4. This is the grand foundation of merit according to the gospel—'Christ, the end of the law for righteousness.' The Bible knows no other. Believers on earth know no other. Spirits made perfect in glory triumph in no other: He 'was made (accounted, reckoned) sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made (reckoned, accounted) the righteousness of God in him.' 2 Cor. v, 21. This is the gem which glitters with intensest lustre in the believer's crown. We are 'justified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus.' Rom. iii. 24. You are one with him, as guiltless and immortal subjects of that empire of which he is the 'King eternal, immortal, and invisible'—so completely one with him in the transactions of Calvary, that he took your sins, and bore your bitterest curse. One with him in the triumphs of his glorious resurrection, you receive his merits and share his throne. You merited the punishment, but he endured it; He won the crown, you obtain it; you opened the dark pathway from earth to hell, he closed it; 'He opened the kingdom of heaven,' but it is that 'all believers' may enter in and dwell there." * * * *

"There never was any other way of access. Sinners were never pardoned through any other sacrifice than that of 'the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world.' In that 'open fountain,' Abel, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, and the 'goodly company of the prophets,' washed, and were cleansed from all their sins. They looked forward to a Saviour then to come; we look back upon him who 'has finished the work which was given him to do.' But 'the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest,' as it is now. That dispensation taught these gospel mysteries by dark emblems. Truth was veiled. The Church was 'under tutors and governors until the time appointed by the Father.' Believers were treated as children; they were bidden to perform a routine of sacred services, whose meaning many of them did not well understand. But now the twilight is passed. The sun is risen. Prophecy and type are fulfilled in Christ. His death, righteousness, resurrection, advocacy, kingdom, explain the whole. 'The law was given by Moses; but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ.' The way of access was always the same, but not always equally plain. They had the blessings in promises—we in reality; they viewed the figures—we embrace the substance; they were occupied about 'carnal ordinances,' which were indeed 'figures of the true'—we are taught to 'worship God in spirit;' they had the tabernacle, the altar, the ark, the mercy-seat, the slaughtered sacrifice, the sprinkled blood, the glory above the cherubim, which were obscure representations of the presence of God—we have 'boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, which he hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say, his flesh.' Heb. x. 19, 20."

The Presbytery of Rochester having at length decided to appoint Commissioners to the New-school Assembly, by a vote of 20 to 12, Rev. Messrs. McIlvaine, Hickok, Ballantine, Ferguson, and Kittridge, requested letters of dismission to Rochester City Presbytery, which were granted.

The First Presbyterian Church of Rochester, one of the largest and most influential in Western New York, decided recently to withdraw from the care of Rochester Presbytery (New-school), and form a connexion with the Presbytery of Rochester city.

Varieties.

An Interesting Work of Grace has been in progress in Lexington, Virginia, during the past winter. The pastor, in a letter to the Watchman and Observer of February 28th, says:—"In the month of November, evident tokens of the presence of God's Spirit were observed among our people here. A very pleasant work of grace has been enjoyed. Thus far, the results of this work are thirty-seven additions to the Church on examination. . . . No means have been used but the stated ministrations of the gospel on the Sabbath, and the stated prayer-meetings in the week. About one-half of the persons received into the church are young men." The pastor states that the fourth Thursday of February was observed with great interest by the Church, and that the literary institutions of this vicinity—Washington College and the Military Institute—suspended their usual exercises for the day, and gave their pupils an opportunity, of which many availed themselves, to participate in the services of the occasion.

This revival is peculiarly gratifying, both for the importance of the position of the Church in Lexington, and for the evidences afforded of the absence of all factitious causes of religious excitement. May such abundantly multiply!

Prospective Supply of Ministers.—We give, from the Puritan Recorder, the statistics of some of the Eastern Colleges. In the institutions of literature are now congregated those who are shortly to be the preachers of the word.

At Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine, there are 176 students; 44 are professors of religion; the majority of whom will probably study for the ministry. But one is known to be fully decided to be a missionary.

In Waterville College, Maine, there are 90 students. Of this number, 36 are professors of religion, 20 have the gospel ministry in view, and 2 intend to become missionaries to foreign lands.

Dartmouth College, Hanover, New Hampshire, contains 230 students. About 60 are professors of religion, a large part of whom are expecting to enter the ministry. Many are discussing the question of their duty to the heathen, with a willingness to go wherever it may call them.

The number of students in the University of Vermont is 121. Professors of religion, 32; studying for the ministry, 21; intending to become missionaries, 2.

In Middlebury College, Vermont, the number of students is 63. About 30 are professors of religion. The number studying for the ministry is not known.

Amherst College, Amherst, Massachusetts, contains 208 students. Of these, 141 are professors of religion, 87 expecting to enter the ministry, and 21 the field of foreign missions.

Williams College, Williamstown, Massachusetts, numbers 231 students. Of these, 110 are professors of religion, 61 have the ministry in view, and 6 intend to become missionaries.

Brown University, Providence, Rhode Island, contains 270 students. 70 are professors of religion, 30 are studying for the ministry, and 2 propose to become missionaries.

At Trinity College, Hartford, Connecticut, there are 103 students, 27 of whom are studying for the ministry. The professors of religion are 46.

Madison University, at Hamilton, New York, contains 208 students. 175 are professors of religion, 137 have the ministry in view, and 18 the missionary field.

At Hamilton College, Clinton, New York, there are 126 students. 51 are professors of religion, 31 are intending to enter the ministry, and 2 or 3 to become missionaries to foreign lands.

In Rutger's College, New Brunswick, New Jersey, the number of students is 88. Professors of religion, 24; studying for the ministry, 18 or more.

Summary.—Number of Colleges reported, 12; students, 1496; professors of religion, 633; preparing for the ministry, 350; conversions during the year, 43.

Amherst College, February 8, 1854.

The Million Testaments for China.—It may be interesting to our readers to know what steps are being taken to accomplish this noble undertaking. The work is already in progress. The printing-presses in China are busily employed. Letters have been recently received by the Bible Society from their corresponding committee, and plans are matured for printing 250,000 copies in China in eighteen months, dating from the first of January, 1854. The Bishop of Victoria guarantees to furnish from his stations, 85,000; Dr. Medhurst, 115,000; Dr. Legge, 50,000. It is proposed that another quarter of a million should be printed in London in the same period, for which wooden blocks will be sent from China. Thus half a million will be ready in eighteen months, and if similar expedition be employed in the remaining portion of the work, the whole will be completed in three years, a much shorter time than had been anticipated. All English missionaries are working most heartily and lovingly in carrying out this gigantic scheme of Christian liberality. It will no doubt give great satisfaction to the public when they are informed that the committee of the Bible Society, at their sitting on Monday, passed a resolution for the printing of 50,000 copies of the entire Bible in Chinese at as early a period as practicable. The funds for the New Testament have been readily supplied, nor can it be doubted that the Bible Society will receive prompt and generous aid to carry out this new feature of their plan for supplying China with a large instalment of the word of God.

New Specimen of Popery.—One brilliant illustration of Catholic charity has just been witnessed in the Protestant canton of Geneva. In a village where Papists happen to be in the greater number, the "Evangelicals" have been in the habit of worshipping in a cottage, where they received the ministrations of a neighbouring pastor. On Sunday, January 27th, the mob broke in upon them while they were at prayer, made a great noise, smoked cigars, insulted the females, and endeavoured to provoke a quarrel with the men. This failing, the assailants gathered in great force, dragged out the worshippers, assaulted the pastor, wrenched the Bible from his hands and tore it up, and then endeavoured to set the house on fire; but in this they failed. The Council of State, informed of the outrage, directed legal proceedings to be taken, sent a sufficient force, and arrested several of the offenders. We give this as an instance of the insolence of Romanism in spots where it can gather a little majority for itself, although the great majority of the State be Protestant, and affords it the most perfect toleration.

Singular Biblical Manuscript.—In the library of the late Dr. Williams, of London, there is a curious manuscript, containing the whole book of Psalms, and all the New Testament, in fifteen volumes, folio. The whole is written in characters an inch long, with a white composition on black paper, manufactured on purpose. This perfectly unique copy was written in 1745, at the cost of Mr. Harris, a London tradesman, whose sight having decayed with age, so as to prevent his reading the Scriptures, though printed on the largest type, he incurred the expense of this transcription, that he might enjoy those sources of comfort which are "more to be desired than gold—yea, than much fine gold."

THE

OF THE

Presbyterian Church in the United States of America.

VOLUME V. No. 5. | PHILADELPHIA, MAY, 1854. | PRICE PER YEAR, Fifty Cents.

OUR REDUCED TERMS—ADDITIONAL ADVANTAGES.

The readers of the Record will be pleased to learn that our circulation has increased upwards of four thousand since the first of January, which is more than 33 per cent. on the last year's circulation. With a view still further to extend the circulation of this paper, the following amendment of the terms is offered.

"That orders of fifty copies or more to one address, be supplied at the rate of twenty-five cents each; and all orders from churches containing less than fifty families at the same price, provided not less than twenty copies to one address is ordered."

We felt it to be highly desirable so to adjust the reduced terms that the weakest congregations might enjoy the benefit. We think this will be the result. Where there are fewer families than twenty in a congregation, let some benevolent individuals unite in making up the sum of five dollars, and thus secure the circulation of twenty copies in the congregation at the reduced terms, and this we suppose can be readily done.

For the Home and Foreign Record.

WHY I LIKE "THE RECORD."

1. Because it informs me of the efforts that my own chosen branch of the Church is making to honour Christ, and save a sin-ruined world. I love the Presbyterian Church, because I think it, upon the whole, nearest the apostolic model, and what it is doing always interests me. I love to know what my own Church is doing to enlighten and convert the world, by printing and circulating good religious books, by educating in a Christian way the rising generation, and assisting poor and pious young men in their preparation for the ministry, and by preaching the gospel of salvation to the destitute at home and in foreign lands.

2. Because it teaches me the duty of giving, and how to give. When I read of what others are doing for the cause of Christ by their contributions, I think I hear the Master saying, "Go, and do thou likewise!" The acknowledgment of moneys paid into the several treasuries, is to me interesting and instructive. I learn, too, of the wants of our different Boards, and thus, while I am stimulated to give, I can give understandingly.

3. Because from the Record I not only learn how to give, but also how to pray. I can pray, "Thy kingdom come," more earnestly and more understandingly. I am furnished with topics for special prayer in behalf of the Redeemer's kingdom, in its various interests and trials.

4. Because I learn to sympathize with the missionary of the cross, in his arduous labours among the benighted heathen, and among the destitute in our own country.

5. Because I give now cheerfully, regretting that I have not more to give. Before reading the Record, I gave something, partly to save appearances, when called on, but I regarded agents as unpleasant visitors. Now I sympathize in their severe and self-denying labours, and thank them for calling, to afford me the opportunity of giving. I try now to lay by me, and be ready before a collection is called for, and I really think "it is more blessed to give than to receive."

6. Because my children, as well as myself, have their views enlarged, and their benevolence and their enjoyments greatly promoted, by reading the Record. I hope they will understand more, and do more good in the world, than ever I have done. If so, they will be more happy here and hereafter.

7. Because I am enabled, by reading the Record, to understand my minister much better in a great deal that he says, and have something interesting to talk about when in his company. He really seems to me to become more sociable and interesting.

8. Because the practical matter on the first page, and the ecclesiastical changes on the last, are worth more than the subscription.

9. Because I begin to feel that the Boards are mine; that I have a personal interest in them. I want, then, that my agents should inform me of their proceedings.

I don't know why every member of the Presbyterian Church should not read the Record.

QUISQUIS.

WHERE SHALL I SPEND ETERNITY?

A lady had written on a card, and placed on the top of an hour-glass in her garden-house, the following simple verse from one of the poems of John Clare. It was the season when the flowers were in their highest glory:

"To think of summers yet to come,
That I am not to see!
To think a weed is yet to bloom
From dust that I shall be!"

The next morning, she found the following lines, in pencil, on the back of the same card:

"To think when heaven and earth are fled,
And times and seasons o'er;
When all that can die shall be dead,
That I must die no more!
O! where will then my portion be?
Where shall I spend eternity?"

HUMAN LIFE.

Eccl. ix. 10.—Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might: for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest.

Human life sometimes means human existence, the life of the body, "that state of being in which the soul and body are united," as "he entreated me not to take his life." Sometimes the term is applied to the period through which this existence extends—time—the present state of existence; the time from birth to death. "The life of man seldom exceeds seventy years." Again, it combines both these ideas—existence and time. To this complex view I have reference in these remarks; and there are three things which show the importance of human life in this complex sense:

1. It affords much enjoyment. After all the bitterness which the cup of life contains, it has much that is agreeable; and might have much more, did we not mingle with the present good, apprehensions of coming evil. Happiness consists much in anticipation; and many of our troubles, or at least many of our perplexities, are but apprehensions of what may come upon us. There is a wonderful elasticity in the human mind, especially when sanctified by divine grace, which enables it to bear up under present ills, but the forebodings of future calamities crush the spirits. We can better bear the troubles which are present, than those which we anticipate. Even now our sorrows have their pleasures; our tears are not without satisfaction. Hence the wise man says, "It is better to go to the house of mourning than to the house of feasting." Eccl. vii. 2, 3. Happiness is not the end of existence; but it is one thing which gives importance to life, for doubtless God delights in the happiness of his creatures; and the chief end of man is "to glorify God, and to enjoy him for ever." We glorify God when we enjoy him and are happy.

2. Usefulness. Human life is important, because it affords opportunity of glorifying God by our efforts to bless and save others. We live in a world where much needs to be done, and we should place a high estimate on existence, and on every moment, as these enable us to do something to alleviate or remove the sufferings of men, and acquaint them with the plan of salvation through Jesus Christ. And the facilities of usefulness are many, as well as the opportunities. Every one may do good. Bibles and religious books, and tracts, are waiting to be distributed; missionaries are to be sent out and supported; young men are to be educated for the ministry; Sabbath-schools are to be taught—much, much is to be done; the way is open for all to do something; the world is waiting for the gospel.

3. Preparation for another world. It is its relation to the eternal world that gives its chief value to this life. This is the only preparatory state for eternity. The way of salvation is made known to us; life and death are placed before us; and our course here decides our eternal destiny. Who can calculate the vast consequences dependent upon the few fleeting moments of this mortal state? How much propriety and force in the exhortation, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest!"—Eccl. ix. 10.

Hence we infer the sin of wasting life. The prevalent recklessness of life is a crying evil. So is the waste of time. Let us be thankful for life, and improve it to God's glory. Let us make the most of life, and live not to ourselves, but to God; not for this world, but for the next; not for time, but for eternity; and let us do with our might what our hands find to do.

BOARD OF DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

Business Officers of the Board.

Corresponding Secretary—Rev. G. W. Musgrave, D. D.
Assistant Secretary—Rev. R. Happersett.
Treasurer—Samuel D. Powel.
Address, Mission Rooms, 265 Chestnut st. Philadelphia.
Letters relating to Missionary appointments, and other operations of the Board, including Church Extension, should be addressed to the Corresponding Secretary.
Donations and Subscriptions should be sent to the Treasurer; or, if more convenient, to the following persons:
J. D. Williams, Pittsburgh, Pa.
Andrew Davidson, Louisville, Ky.
William Rankin, Jr. Mission House, 23 Centre street, New York.

MEETING OF THE BOARD.

The stated monthly meeting of the Board was held in the Mission Rooms, on Monday, the 10th of April, 1854. The President, the Rev. Jacob J. Janeway, D. D., in the chair; the Rev. Henry Steele Clarke, Secretary, pro tem. The meeting was, as usual, well attended, and all appeared to be deeply interested in the great work committed to their care. The Corresponding Secretary read the Annual Report, which was unanimously and cordially approved, and ordered to be presented to the next General Assembly. The Report is encouraging, and shows that the cause of missions is advancing. The subject of Church Extension forms a prominent topic in the Report; and while various important suggestions are offered for the consideration of the Assembly, the whole matter is respectfully but earnestly referred to the wisdom of the Supreme Judicatory of the Church. We trust that the suggestions of the Board will receive due attention, and that something effectual will be devised and recommended by the General Assembly to render our Church Extension scheme more efficient. The subject is one of great importance, and is becoming more and more so every day.

CHURCH EXTENSION.

We are in the receipt of many communications urging the necessity and importance of Church Extension; but as we have already published so much on the subject, we will only insert the following extracts from a letter recently received from a Pastor.

Your remarks respecting the importance of raising a fund for the Church Extension cause are seasonable. I trust you will keep urging it. In one of our congregations, the sum of $300 was hardly raised for the support of the pastor; but when, by the timely and liberal aid of some individuals who felt a deep interest in their welfare, a commodious and tasteful house of worship was erected, the pews were at once rented for $900 per annum.

We ought to raise more than $100,000. There are one hundred persons surely in our Church who could give $1000 each, and certainly the whole Church besides can raise as much more. What a noble plan! J. D.

AN INTERESTING SEASON.

Rev. G. W. Musgrave, D. D.

Dear Brother—I have recently had an interesting season in one of the churches in my field of labour. Hoping that a brief account of it may prove interesting to the readers of the Record, I herewith transmit it for publication.

For many years, a few of that "sect that is everywhere spoken against," living in ——, and vicinity, have been anxiously praying for the establishment of our Zion among them. The Lord seemed to try their faith. A church was organized, and after a lingering existence of several years, went down. During this time, an attempt was made to build a house of worship, but the friends of the enterprise were told by some in the community, that "they would not give anything to a church that required its members to give a tenth of all they possessed for religious purposes;" and they met with so many discouragements that the project was abandoned.

Some five or six years ago, the Presbytery of ——, regarding the place as an important point, listened to the prayers of the remnant, who remained true in heart to the Lord, and organized a church a second time. A little more than two years ago, with a commission from your Board, I commenced labouring among them, spending one Sabbath in each month in that part of the field. They have gradually increased from fifteen to forty-two, and now have a neat and substantial frame house, forty by fifty.

It was on the occasion of the dedication of this house, that the Lord smiled again upon them. Last Sabbath week, the 22d, the interesting services took place. I was assisted by brother ——, who preached the dedication sermon, from 2 Chron. xi. 4. Though the weather was very cold, the house was filled with young and old. After the services closed, five were received to the communion of the church, four on profession, and one by certificate; and on Tuesday, seven more were received on examination, making twelve in all. Our meeting closed on Wednesday evening, and we left next morning, feeling that "the Lord had done great things" by us, for that feeble church, whereof both we and they "had reason to be glad." Yours in the service of Christ,

M.

CALIFORNIA.

We were much gratified in receiving the following letter from our esteemed brother, recently commissioned by the Board, informing us of his safe arrival in California. He will prove, we trust, by the blessing of God, a valuable accession to the number of missionaries sent thither by our Board. We are glad to learn that he was so well pleased with the appearance of the country, and the hospitable reception he met with from his brethren labouring there. We hope he will soon be able to locate and commence his labours, and that God will grant him abundant success.

San Francisco, Feb. 15th, 1854.

Rev. G. W. Musgrave,

Dear Sir—I send you only a few lines by the steamer which sails to-morrow, for the simple purpose of informing you of my safe arrival in California. In New York, January 5th, I took passage on the mail steamer Ohio, and after a favourable voyage of eleven and a half days, arrived at Aspinwall on the 17th of January. Two Sabbaths were spent on the Atlantic, but I was too sea-sick to hold religious services. One day was consumed in taking in coal at Kingston, Jamaica.

We passed from Aspinwall to Gorgona, (thirty miles) by railroad, and spent the night at Cruces, on Chagres river, seven miles from Gorgona. The next day we took mules, and reached Panama at three o'clock, P. M. The road was dry and romantic in the highest degree. The day following, we went on board the steamship California, and arrived at San Francisco on Saturday morning, February 5th, the thirtieth day after our departure from New York. The Pacific was exceedingly placid during the entire voyage, with the exception of the two days we were crossing the Gulf of Tehuantepec. The two Sundays spent on the Pacific I preached to the passengers and crew on deck, and distributed tracts.

After reaching San Francisco, I called on the Rev. Albert Williams, who received me with the greatest cordiality, and insisted on my making his house my home till I should be permanently located. I also made the acquaintance of the Rev. Mr. Speer and the Rev. Frederick Buel, both of whom offered to assist me in every way possible. Both these brethren, especially Mr. Williams, have been exerting a powerful influence for good in California.

Sunday, February 6th, I preached for Mr. Williams, and on Monday he accompanied me to Benicia to consult with the Rev. Mr. Woodbridge in regard to choosing a field for my future operations.

I expect to preach next Sabbath at Santa Clara, and after that, shall visit other places. So soon as I shall be permanently located, I will write you fully.

We need two additional churches in San Francisco. Dr. Scott is expected to visit the city in April; but whether he will conclude to settle here is a matter of uncertainty.

California is the most charming country the eye of man ever beheld. I seem to be living in a fairy land—a land of dreams—more beautiful than a painter's pencil ever delineated, or the pen of romance ever described.

I am well and happy; and bless God that he ever put it into my heart to labour for his cause in a region so lovely, that it is marred by nothing but sin. W. C. Mosher.

CHRISTIAN SYMPATHY.

Nothing is more precious than sincere sympathy between brethren who are engaged in a common cause. We often receive communications from our missionaries, in which they express their generous sympathy with us, but we are not in the habit of publishing them. Occasionally, however, it may be well to do so, in order to show that our brethren are not only grateful for our efforts to assist them in their self-denying and arduous labours, but that they also appreciate our difficulties, and sympathize with us in our official trials. We return our thanks to the venerable and esteemed writer of the following letter, for all his kind wishes; and will only add, that, by the blessing of God, our constant aim shall be to promote the comfort and usefulness of all our beloved missionaries.

Wisconsin, April 5th, 1854.

Rev. G. W. Musgrave, D. D.

Dear Sir—Please accept my thanks for your kindness and sympathy, and I hereby tender sincere thanks to the Executive Committee for the tender interest they manifest for our personal comfort, as well as for our usefulness. Be assured, dear brethren, your kindness is appreciated, and I shall cherish a grateful remembrance of you at the throne of grace.

Dear sir, I often think of you and your official associates with deep interest. Have we trials? so have you. We are sometimes almost overwhelmed with the ungodliness of a single heart; how your hearts must often sink within you, in view of the wide-spread iniquity that comes to your knowledge! Still I trust you have much in the numerous reports to cheer and encourage you in your arduous work.

Yours is not only a calling of high responsibility, but it must often be peculiarly trying to your feelings. The daily care of so large a portion of our glorious Master's vineyard is indeed a solemn trust. If any of your missionaries suffer, you suffer with them. If in any part of the wide field ungodliness is gaining ground, you are compelled to sigh over the desolation. Sometimes a missionary asks for more aid than you can consistently bestow, and he is embarrassed, and suffers privation in consequence. Let not the missionary repine, for you not only bear the privation with him, but you sympathize most keenly with all the missionaries in like circumstances.

Could the members of our churches see what you see, and could they hear all that comes to your knowledge, our moral wastes would soon be supplied with the means of grace. The poor, who knock at the door of the Mission House, and ask for the bread of life, would not then be sent away in such crowds, to perish of starvation.

May God cheer and strengthen you, dear sir, and your associates in your blessed work; and may all who profess to love the cause of Christ, manifest their attachment to the Redeemer by devising liberal things! Long may you be permitted to fill the station you occupy, and may you and your associates see the work of the Lord prosper gloriously in your hand.

For the Home and Foreign Record.

MY JEWELS.

Jewels are precious and beautiful things. Their beauty is intrinsic, their rarity renders them precious. The etymology of the word connects with it the idea of joy. The mild and finely-tinted lustre of some, and the dazzling brilliancy of others, constitutes their attraction. Jewels are elegant decorations of the person, and even enhance the glory of golden diadems. Whose jewels do we speak of now? The Lord's: "They shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts." He values them, guards them, wears them.

And what are these jewels? They are God's chosen ones, the souls that he hath sanctified. He hath gathered them from the dark caverns; his hand hath washed and polished them. It is the sun-light of his holiness reflected, that constitutes their radiance; their beauty is but the beaming back of his benevolence. Specially are those casketed as his jewels, who are "faithful among the faithless found;" who have their hearts on Christ and heaven, while the loud and eager cry of the worldly many is, "Who will show us any good?"

In the days of Malachi, an epidemic contagion of impiety spread widely among people and priesthood. The forms of religion were indeed observed, the doors of the sanctuary were opened, the fire still burned upon the altars, offerings were presented and immolated, but a sordid and parsimonious spirit pervaded all the work. Ah! was it worse then than now? Does the service of the Lord engage the chief consideration of those who go to his courts? Is the due measure of knowledge flowing from the priests' lips? Is a competent subsistence furnished to those who serve at the altar? Wherefore, then, are the windows of heaven closed, and the blessings of the Spirit withheld? Declining and vacant churches, embarrassed and desponding ministers of Crhist, bear witness, that the old contagion of covetousness is working still. But now, too, there are some who "love not the world, neither the things that are in the world;" these fear the Lord, and think upon his name; they speak often one to another of his interest in this world, of his grace, of his Church, of his truth; and the Lord hearkens and hears; "And they shall be mine, saith the Lord, in that day when I make up my jewels."

Such a prospect should assure the hopes and stimulate the zeal of Christians, in a time of prevailing worldliness. Self-denial we can afford to practice, in hope of our high destiny! What is the honour that cometh from man, what is wealth, compared with the glory of Jehovah's jewels? And there is a remedy referred to for declension: humiliation, honouring God's ordinances, earnest prayer, he will regard; and he will open the windows of heaven, when he shall see these tokens of penitence, and pour out a blessing till there shall not be room enough to receive it. J. F. M.

ENCOURAGING REPORT.

January 12th, 1854.

Rev. G. W. Musgrave, D. D.

Dear Brother—It is with peculiar emotions that I address myself to the duty of preparing a report of my field and my labours for the inspection of the Board of Missions. During the last twelve years, I have been a pastor in the Presbyterian Church, and now, for the first time, I find myself a missionary. I have often plead the cause of Domestic Missions in the field which I left in coming to these destitutions, and sympathized with the missionary in those trials which are connected with his self-denying position. Now I am mingling with the scenes which I once endeavoured to describe, and see with mine own eyes how white the fields in the great West are unto the harvest.

When I was a student in college, it was my intention to make the West my field of labour, and when in the seminary, I still had my face set in the same direction. After I was licensed, I purchased a horse and a pair of saddle-bags, and started with the view of making the State of Iowa my home. I travelled thirty miles, and stopped to attend a meeting of the Presbytery by which I was licensed, when I found a worthy elder with a call for me from his congregation. This, by the advice of my brethren, I accepted, and gave up all my expectations in relation to the West.

But here I am at last in the West, a missionary of your Board, and amongst a people that have suffered greatly for want of a pure gospel and the stated means of grace. I trust I am now where the Lord has sent me, as I have been truly led in a way that I knew not of. Six months ago, I had no thought of being in this place; and, indeed, I did not know of its existence.

On the 13th of September, I left the scenes of my former labours and a people whom I loved, and whom I still love, with a very sad heart. I drove away from the manse with my eyes overflowing with tears, and while a number of those to whom I had often broken the bread of life were weeping around me, because they should see my face no more. Oh! these partings here below of ministers and people, how sad, how solemn, how affecting to all the finer emotions of the soul! What, then, will be the effects of an everlasting separation?

After a quick, safe, and pleasant journey, I arrived here with my family on the 16th of September. After entering upon my labours in this place, I was made to feel the peculiarity of my situation. I found here the fragment of a Congregational church. It wore, however, the name of Presbyterian. The congregation owned a house of worship of some value, but it had never been finished, and it was in rather a bad condition. This congregation, for the last two years, had been without preaching by a minister of their own denomination. During that time they had given the use of their house to the Methodist congregation, and had assisted in the support of their minister. I arrived here just as the Methodist minister left to enter upon another field of labour. As there is but one church edifice in the place, I preached for two months to the whole town. During that time I said nothing about myself from the pulpit, but endeavoured to adapt myself to my anomalous position. I had for my hearers Presbyterians, Methodists, Congregationalists, Baptists, Disciples, Swedenborgians, and the world's people. In our Sabbath-school, of which I was elected superintendent soon after I came here, we had the same mixture, also in our prayer-meetings. The forms of worship were almost all different from what I had been accustomed to, but I did not attempt to change any of them, except sitting in time of prayer. This I set myself against at once; and, by the grace of God, this disrespectful practice is seen no more amongst us. In all other respects, I became all things to all men; I treated all kindly and respectfully, and endeavoured to preach the truth, not having the fear of man before my eyes.

During the two months that things remained in this state, I endeavoured to become acquainted with as many of the people as possible in town and country. I stated to all, in my private intercourse, in a frank manner, that I was an Old-school Presbyterian minister, and that I had come to the place to endeavour to do good in the way of building up a congregation in connection with that body. I met with nothing but kindness from all with whom I had intercourse. All admitted that the place was behind in point of preaching, and that the destitution of the town and neighbourhood was great, and hoped that I would succeed in building up a church.

Accordingly, on a certain Sabbath, after preaching, I stated publicly who I was ecclesiastically, and what my intentions were. I at the same time gave notice that on a special day I would preach to the people, and afterwards proceed to the organization of an Old-school Presbyterian church. I invited all who wished to unite in such an organization to meet with me prepared to do so. When the day came, after preaching, I, with the approbation of the Presbytery, organized a church, to be under the care of that Presbytery. Our number was small—only nine. But all was done in such a kind spirit, and with the countenance of such a number of the leading men of the place, that I felt encouraged. It was at least a beginning, and the ground secured, I felt, too, that the little vine, with the blessing of God, could be made to grow and become fruitful. I felt a strong assurance that the eye, and heart, and presence of the Lord would be with it.

A few days after our organization, the congregation decided that they would lay three hundred dollars salary on the pews and rent them. A committee of business men was appointed to make the assessment, and to appoint a time to rent the pews. This fact was announced from the pulpit. Our Methodist brethren thought the time had come for them to dissolve partnership with us, and accordingly they went off in a body and rented a room as a place of preaching. Since that time, we have seen but little of them. We are now by ourselves, and I have introduced Presbyterian modes of worship, and feel once more at home. The ladies have had the sanctuary cleansed, the inside neatly painted, the aisles and pulpit carpeted, and a number of those who rented pews have had them carpeted and cushioned, so that our church building is now neat and comfortable.

We have had the sacrament of the Lord's Supper administered since our organization. The season was solemn and refreshing, and, I hope, was attended with good results, though only two united with us. Upon the whole, I feel encouraged. If my labours here were now to end, I feel that something has been done. A foundation has been laid, which you know is a great matter in all our Western towns. Our village contains about twelve hundred inhabitants, and is increasing rapidly. There seems to be a great amount of business done for the size of the place. We have the advantages of two rivers, on which there is fine water-power, and of two railroads. The mass of the people here are neglecters of the gospel, and yet there is no bitter opposition to the preaching of it, or to the minister. I have received, as yet, nothing but respectful treatment. The field is abundantly large for all my labours, and hence I devote my whole time to the one place, preaching in the town twice on the Sabbath, and in the country occasionally in school-houses. We have organized a Sabbath-school in connection with our own church, and are about making an effort to raise some funds to purchase books for the use of the school. W. E.

SUGGESTIONS TO EMIGRANTS.

Would it not be well for Presbyterian families, emigrating to the West, to locate in the same neighbourhood, so as to be able to support the gospel among them, and ultimately organize a Presbyterian church? And if they cannot emigrate in sufficient numbers to form a new Presbyterian settlement, let them locate in the neighbourhood of some Presbyterian congregation already organized. We are glad to learn from the following letter, that some are beginning to act upon these principles.

"Presbyterians are beginning to learn the advantages of settling together in some of our new settlements, for the enjoyment of religious privileges, the advantages of which they have hitherto been very slow to learn. Many Presbyterians are looking forward to, and seeking a location within the bounds of the little churches under the care of this Presbytery, notwithstanding so many of them are now vacant. Could these vacancies be supplied, there is reason to believe, that instead of feeble congregations, most of them would soon become strong and efficient churches. May the Great Shepherd send some one to feed these now feeble flocks."

HONORARY MEMBERS.

The sum of Fifty Dollars constitutes a person an Honorary Member of the Board of Missions.

Honorary Members have a right to sit in the meetings of the Board, and engage in their deliberations, but have no right to vote. A copy of the Annual Report is sent to them every year.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST.

☞ Persons making bequests to the Board of Missions are requested to be careful in adopting the above form.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

DEFICIENCY OF CANDIDATES IN FOREIGN CHURCHES.

We have already called attention to the remarkable fact, that the diminution of candidates for the ministry seems to be general in the Christian Church, at home and abroad. For the purpose of impressing this fact upon the minds and hearts of our readers, and of awakening them more fully to its contemplation, we add some additional testimony.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCHES OF ENGLAND.

"Turning to the evangelical denominations in England, we find their leading organs of opinion complaining, as in the language of the Christian Witness of January last, that 'while the theological colleges of Great Britain were never in such a state of professorial efficiency,' and while 'it were no very difficult matter to train in them three times the number at present attending, there is a lack of students to an extent calculated to awaken the most serious anxiety regarding the future prospects of the Church. Referring for minuter information to the Congregational Year-Book for 1854, the recognized exponent of Independency, we learn that, while the number of Congregational colleges is ten, and of professors thirty, the number of theological students is but 194, giving an average of less than twenty students to a college, and of under seven students to a professor. The term of study being four years, an annual supply of only forty-eight students is left to meet the wants of that most influential denomination, with its three thousand congregations at home, and its wide-spread fields of missionary labour throughout the world. In the new college, St. John's Wood, an institution lately formed by the merging of three seminaries into one, which is adorned by the names of Harris in theology, W. Smith in classics, and Lankester in natural science, and reckons altogether seven professors, the total number of students is thirty-five. In the Lancashire Independent College, which boasts of a Vaughan, a Davidson, and a Halley, the students in attendance are only thirty: while in the Springhill College, Birmingham, where Henry Rogers fills the philosophical chair, but seventeen students are at present to be found."

IRISH PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The Irish Presbyterian says:—"Strange, indeed, that at a period of such thrilling and momentous interest in the period of the world's history, when in every region the fields are whitening to the harvest, the paucity of labourers should be a theme of general remark and lamentation. * * * In our own Trinity College, Dublin, we are assured on competent authority, that there has been a diminution in attendance in the several departments to a very large extent."

Surely the existence of so wide-spread a calamity should thoroughly arouse the attention of the Church, and especially of Christian ministers, parents, and young men.

From the Presbyterian.

WANT OF CANDIDATES FOR THE MINISTRY.

PARENTS PROMINENTLY RESPONSIBLE.

The great cause of the deficiency in the number of candidates for the ministry, I believe is, not that the Church withholds from her ministers a competent support, (however deficient she may be in that respect,) but that parents do not solemnly dedicate their sons, from infancy, to the service of God, with special reference to the work of the ministry. They do not train them up, and pray for them, with the earnest desire that God will prepare them for, or employ them in that great work. This is not the duty of one Christian parent more than another—it is the duty of all. I do not mean that parents should select one of their sons—in infancy at least—more than another, and set him apart for that work, and educate him for it, and, as they sometimes do, it is to be feared, almost force him into it—thus making their own will the interpreter of God's will. Such a course is preposterous. Many Christian parents, confounding this mistake with their whole duty on this subject, conclude that they are under no obligations to consecrate their children to the ministry, and so leave the whole matter, as they honestly think, in the hands of God himself. Were they in the habit of making such a consecration of their children, thus bringing their own minds to contemplate the work, with all its responsibilities, its trials, and privations, would not this of itself lead them to feel more the importance of a proper sustenance of the ministry, and thus tend to a removal of the evil which now helps to thin its ranks? Could parents neglect to care and provide for those engaged in a work for which they were training their own sons, and with a view to which they had solemnly dedicated them to the service of their Master?

But I fear it is true with many of God's people, that so far from seeking it as a favour from him, that he would employ their children in the service of his sanctuary, they are unwilling to have them thus engaged, especially if they give promise of superior talents. Some may be disposed to ask, "Can such things be," while the united voice of the Church is proclaiming that the world needs a far more numerous and efficient ministry? Yes, it is undoubtedly and lamentably true, that professing Christians are unwilling, even amid such calls, to give up their sons to this work. Whatever may be their theory on this subject, the practice of many of them is radically wrong. They may be ready to acknowledge, in general, that the Church, as a body, ought cheerfully to give her sons to this work, even the most gifted and promising of them the most cheerfully. But when it comes to be a personal thing with them, they find the whole aspect of the subject so changed, that they refuse to do what conscience dictates to be duty. They seek out reasons for concluding that, in this case, there is an exception to the general principle. In many instances, it is to be feared, these reasons are made up for the occasion.

The writer has had considerable opportunity for personal observation upon this point, and has availed himself, frequently, of the best means of information with regard to it, and the result is the conviction, that a large number of those who enter the ministry, do it in opposition to the wishes and feelings of their parents, or near friends. He knows of one who spent many months in meditating upon the subject of preparing for the ministry—praying for light and guidance, often in tears and anguish of spirit, before he dared whisper to any one his desires. When, at last, he opened his heart to his parents—those parents who had once and again professedly offered him up to the Saviour, they could scarcely be persuaded to allow him to obey the call which the Head of the Church had sent to him. Never can he forget the painful silence that followed the announcement of what he had it in his heart to do, nor the touching import of the first words that broke the silence. They fell from the lips of his mother—uttered with a faltering voice. She had set her heart on his being the stay and solace of her declining years. It was hard for her to give him up. And at last it cost her a terrible struggle to give her consent. Now, is it a hard thing to believe, that a young man who desires to be rightly guided in this matter, when he has thought, and prayed, and wept over it, as he looks abroad over the fields white to the harvest, and again shrinks back, in agony of spirit, at the magnitude of the work, exclaiming, "Who is sufficient for these things?"—is it a hard thing to believe that, when he finds those who have led him to the house of God, unwilling for him to enter the holy calling, he should take it as an indication of the will of his divine Master, that he is not to serve him in the sacred office?

But are parents doing their duty, when they simply acquiesce in the will of God, when he calls their sons to the ministry? Are his dealings with his people in this matter so different from what they are in all others, that he does not require their agency at all? Do their duties cease, when they pray "the Lord of the harvest to send forth labourers into the harvest? Or, do they extend no further than to assist in preparing the children of other parents for the ministry? Is it enough, that they should be merely willing for their sons to go into the harvest?" When Hannah had dedicated her son to God, did she wait for him to declare his will in the matter, by calling him to the sanctuary? No, she took him by the hand, and led him up to the house of the Lord herself. I believe there is a great sin on the part of God's people in this thing. So long as this evil exists, the cry will not cease to go up, that "the labourers are few." May God open the eyes of his people, and show them where the fault is, and give them grace to remove it. A.

PARTING ODE.

FOR THEOLOGICAL STUDENTS.

Girded we stand with sandals on,
And wait the signal to be gone,
Glad tidings to proclaim;
Our weapons tempered from above,
Upheld by faith, constrained by love,
And strong in Jesus' name.

The home-field, 'neath our own fair skies,
Bids us to where her harvests rise;
The reapers are too few;
Our native land, which must send forth
The streams which purify the earth,
Calls for our aid anew.

O'er lands towards the setting sun,
The tides of life are rolling on,
Wave pressing hard on wave;
They call us forth to lands of gold,
To tell that truth of price untold—
"Jesus alone can save."

And far beyond the ocean's tide,
Where fields of conquest open wide,
We hear the earnest cry;
Broad Asia's millions stretch their palms,
And Afric's sable sons—for alms—
For life! life! ere they die.

Our brothers, in those distant lands,
Who toil alone with wearied hands,
Call us; we hear them say,
"Come, gather with us for the sky,
These plants of immortality,
Ere they forever die."

Then lead us forth, our Glorious King,
Give us, where'er our feet thou'lt bring,
Strong hands, and hearts of love,
To toil with patience as we go;
And when our work is done below,
Receive us all above.

From the New York Observer.

TO PIOUS YOUNG MEN.

"Young men for action." Action is needed, more energetic and extensive than there is at present, in behalf of the heathen. Let one recalled from among them and detained here by afflictive providences, speak to you for them. Some of you have never attended, as Christians, to a call in their behalf, for you have lately become Christians. They perish rapidly. They die unprepared, at the fearful rate of forty or fifty thousand a day.

God has provided means for staying this rush of souls to ruin. He has committed the gospel, that might save them, to us, the people of Christian lands, and bidding us give it to the heathen. But the present degree of effort will not carry it to half of them ere they die. Cannot you do something to hasten the giving of the gospel to them?

There is a great responsibility resting on somebody in respect to this matter. God has committed to us the means of salvation for our fellow-men. Shall we withhold from them the bread of life, or will we give it? On whom does the responsibility of answering this question chiefly rest? On whom, if not on you? Who can do more for the heathen than our pious young men? Where are the needed missionaries to be found, if not among them. Whose hearts are to be moved with a more beneficent compassion, and fired with a nobler zeal, if not theirs? What class of persons can be expected to go before them in enterprise for doing good?

If I mistake not, the responsibility rests chiefly on you. Let me, then, ask you, shall the heathen receive the gospel more rapidly, or shall they not? How will you decide the question? Think of their situation. They are sinners; they are lost; they hasten towards an eternity of misery. Look at the fearful doom awaiting them in the course they tread. Thousands, millions, billions of years are but the small beginning of their life of woe, if they die unsaved. The means of saving them are in your hands more than of any else among us. Will you not use them? Surely you will not refuse: Do, then, your utmost to save them; and may God speed your efforts!

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

TRAIN UP.

Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old, he will not depart from it.—Prov. xxii. 6.

A critical examination of the Hebrew of this text gives the following results:

"Train" means 1. To consecrate; 2. To instruct, to initiate. "Child" primarily means, a child, even a suckling; and, secondly, a young man. But the force of the passage obviously requires us to understand this word in its primary meaning. "Old" is not a substantive, but a verb, in the original (Hiphil, intransitive,) and therefore means not old absolutely, but relatively; that is, waxing old, or older than he was. These being the shades of signification of the terms in the Hebrew, the following is a correct, though somewhat free translation of the passage:

Thoroughly instruct or initiate a child from his birth in the way he should go, and as he grows older he will not depart from it.

The three prominent ideas inculcated here, are these:

1. The necessity of the most thorough teaching of children in their whole duty to themselves, to the world, and to God.

2. The necessity of commencing this course of instruction with the earliest dawn of intelligence in the infantile mind.

3. That when this thorough course of instruction is commenced early enough, and faithfully followed up, it will ordinarily plant such principles in the mind, that, in all his subsequent life, in youth and manhood, as well as in old age, the subject will be influenced, preserved, and governed by them.

This exposition of the passage, we believe, is the correct one; and if so, it suggests very important matter for reflection and practice to parents, Sabbath-School and other teachers, metaphysicians, framers of systems of divinity, and ministers of the gospel.—N. E. Puritan.

JEFFERSON AND PRINCETON COLLEGES.

It was stated in the Record of last December, that the Synod of Pittsburgh had appointed a Committee to confer with the Trustees of Jefferson College, in regard to placing that Institution under Synodical supervision. We learn from a communication published in the Presbyterian Banner, that after a fraternal interchange of sentiment, the Trustees of Jefferson College have declined the contemplated arrangement, for the following reasons.

1st. Fidelity to the commonwealth of Pennsylvania, under which the charter is held, and from which considerable donations in money have been from time to time received.

2. The interest of other religious denominations which have from the beginning been largely concerned in the patronage and control of the College.

3. The past and present prosperity of the College on its existing basis.

4. No necessity is supposed to exist for the proposed change, either on the ground of a demand for a more sanctified education, or for greater security as to the faithful and unperverted use of the funds in future years.

These points are calmly and forcibly stated; and the Trustees then make the following proposition to the Synod of Pittsburgh:

"But while we do not feel at liberty, for the reasons already stated, to place the Institution under the direct control of the Synod, yet in order to satisfy those who think that the Church is the safest depository for funds, we are willing and would propose that any funds which the Synod of Pittsburgh may see proper to raise for the endowment of a Professorship, or for scholarships, in this Institution, shall be held under the care and control of the Synod, and be subject to withdrawal whenever applied in a way that does not meet the approbation of that body. We are likewise willing to enter into a similar engagement with any of the other ecclesiastical bodies represented in this Board.

"In thus declining the proposals of the Synod, we wish it to be distinctly understood that we do not undervalue the patronage and maternal care of that venerable body."

We may here add, that the Board of Education have endeavoured to occupy a position on this subject free from extreme and ultra views, viz: that whilst Church supervision of Colleges—which is the policy now commonly adopted by all denominations—is deemed the best, both for securing the inculcation of distinctive religious truth, and for guarding the funds from perversion, yet that Colleges on the basis of Jefferson and Princeton, which are under the management of Presbyterians, and which teach religion with satisfactory prominence, are entitled to the cordial support and patronage of the friends of education and of the Church. In order that this position may be understood, we will quote a few passages from the last Annual Report of the Board of Education.

[After giving the number of students at Princeton, Washington, and Hampden Sidney, Virginia, and Jefferson, the Report goes on to say:]—"All the above Colleges teach religion, and are under the superintendence of religious instructors; and it is obvious, therefore, that the simple question of ecclesiastical supervision ought not to disturb the harmony between these and strictly ecclesiastical institutions. The earlier colleges in our Church were not so distinctly denominational as those more recently established, although their connection with the Church was closer then than it is now. The policy which at present prevails in this country, is that of denominational colleges; and this policy is believed to possess decided advantages over every other. At the same time these supposed advantages create no necessity of warfare with religious colleges under other forms of management. On the contrary, their common basis of Christianity imposes the obligation of peace. All may freely co-operate in the great work of Christian education. Our Church has never designed to interfere with any supervision that practically answers a good purpose, and that is in accordance with the local public opinion. The great aim of our Church is religious education; and although ecclesiastical supervision has been considered the best means of securing and perpetuating it, there ought to be no hostility, but harmony, between all institutions that inculcate true religion, whatever be the form of their charter."—Annual Report, 1853.

These views are believed to be entirely fair to both classes of institutions; they are conciliatory, and they make prominent the great principle of Christian education.

In our remarks in the last Record, we had no design whatever of misrepresenting our two brethren at Princeton College. There is one paragraph in our article, in which we beg leave to alter a word, and modify the structure of a sentence, in order to remove misunderstanding. The paragraph corrected would read: "Entire unanimity on educational matters is out of the question. But it is asking a good deal of the Church, especially in view of the growing prosperity of new colleges under ecclesiastical care, to change her present collegiate policy." The word was originally simply, and the sentence was liable to misinterpretation. We have no doubt that our brethren wish well to other Christian institutions, and desire to see them do all the good they can. And yet the effects of ecclesiastical supervision seem to have caused alarm. Lafayette College has in some way or other led to the apprehension, or has been the occasion of it, that Princeton College is to suffer injury, or be placed in a false position. The same apprehension, as we have supposed, existed on the part of Jefferson in relation to Washington. We might quote extracts from a pamphlet, published at Princeton last year, in proof of the existence of these apprehensions. And we infer that these feelings, at least in part, have led an anonymous writer (reported to be Dr. Hope) to publish an attack on the general policy of the Board of Education, in some prefatory remarks to an article by Dr. Breckinridge. As education must necessarily come before the General Assembly, we deem it a duty to allude to the subject in an open manner. The Board of Education have the deepest interest in Princeton and Jefferson colleges. At no time, since the election of the present Corresponding Secretary, have there been so many candidates of the Board at these two colleges as at the present time. No controversy can make the Board unfriendly to either institution. We claim sympathy with both, and a warm interest in their prosperity. Our purposes and plans stand on record; and we are prepared to vindicate our action under all the circumstances that have hitherto occurred. It is the sincere desire of the officers of the Board that all matters pertaining to their operations may have a thorough examination. Let the truth prevail!

SCRAP OF EDUCATIONAL HISTORY.

PROFESSOR HOPE ON COLLEGES.

In 1848, a Presbyterian convention was called in New York, to devise measures to assist feeble colleges in the West. Dr. Hope, the former Secretary, and the two Secretaries of the Board, were commissioned to attend that convention. The drawing up of the views of the Board in the form of resolutions, when required, commonly devolves upon the Corresponding Secretary, but his right arm having been disabled by a fall, Professor Hope consented to draw up the resolutions, after the subject had been a matter of private consultation. The resolutions are in the following terms:

1. Resolved, That the Presbyterian Church, having through the last General Assembly arranged a system of education, in which Christian truth, as held by herself in what she deems its purest and most scriptural form, shall receive its full share of attention, and be practically inculcated as a system of doctrine and duty, in the instruction of her youth in parochial schools and Presbyterial academies, it seems to be her duty, in the Providence of her Great Head, to extend the system to the higher departments of professional and educational training.

2. Resolved, That every stage of the process should be subject to the influence and control of the Church, in some one of its ecclesiastical courts, in conformity with the resolutions of the last Assembly.

3. Resolved, That every provision for the pecuniary support of the higher, as well as of the lower institutions, involves so much influence over their religious and ecclesiastical character, that it can be best entrusted to a body in organic connection with the Church herself, and through which the life of the Church may flow directly into all her efforts to train up her youth in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

4. Resolved, That the recent movement in New York in behalf of feeble colleges in the West, renders it imperative on this Board, as the natural and constituted organ of the Presbyterian Church, to take immediate measures for proposing a plan to the General Assembly for the efficient prosecution of the great object in view.

5. Resolved, That the Committee previously appointed be requested to present these resolutions to the meeting to be held in New York on the 19th inst., and to request the brethren there assembled to concur with the Board in the reference to the Assembly.

The great principles, first, of religious education, secondly, of religious education in colleges under the care of the Church, and thirdly, of the agency of the Board of Education in reference to the whole work, are thus set forth with great precision and force. We have ever rejoiced that the Board had the benefit of Dr. Hope's assistance at the New York convention. It is not probable that any one else would have drawn up resolutions so strongly and thoroughly vindicating the great principle of ecclesiastical control over colleges.

ALEXANDER COLLEGE, DUBUQUE, IOWA.

The following report, just received from Alexander College, Iowa, will be read with interest.

DUBUQUE, IOWA, April 3d, 1854.

Rev. and Dear Sir—The third term in ALEXANDER COLLEGE having closed with an examination and exhibition of the students, on the 31st of March, it becomes my duty to report, through you, the condition of the Institution, to the Board of Education, to whom we are indebted for very important and essential aid in establishing and maintaining our Synodical College.

The number of students on the roll for the last term was sixty-eight. Three of these were in the Freshman class, and the rest in the preparatory department. The proportion between the classical students and non-classical, has been about the same as the previous term, excepting that we have had several more irregular students, who attend only the winter session. For this reason we do not look for as many students next term as we have had this.

One of the students of the Freshman class, is a member of our church, and looking forward to the ministry. Another has made a profession of religion during the past term, and united with the Methodist Church, as the family are all Methodists. Two of the young men who entered the preparatory department last term, are also professors of religion, and one of them is looking forward to the ministry. The influence of these young men on the deportment of the students generally, has been very good.

The last Thursday in February was observed with appropriate religious exercises, and with very marked beneficial results. The day was also observed by the church, and a deeper interest awakened in the members for the cause of Christian education than had existed before. Since that day the young men have observed a prayer-meeting every Sabbath morning, the influence of which is exceedingly benign, both on themselves and others.

The Freshman class recite every morning in the New Testament. In the preparatory department, the Shorter Catechism is recited by all whose parents are willing, and a Scripture lesson from all. In this department of study, which we esteem the most important of all, and which is also the most difficult in such a heterogeneous mass as is found in our preparatory department, we hope to become more and more systematic and thorough every term; and our observation and experience thus far shows that this is the most effectual way of accomplishing the desired end.

Our income this term, including the amount we expect from the Board, will meet the current expenses of the College, and leave us nearly one hundred dollars towards paying what we fell behind the two previous terms. And if we are prospered another term, we hope to pay all that is behind, and thus close the year without any debt.

It is now nine months since we opened our Institution, and though some may still think it "an experiment," we see, as yet, nothing to discourage; but on the contrary the providence of God, so far as we can discover, indicates a future proportionately prosperous with the past. But in order to success, it will be absolutely necessary for us to have something of an endowment. The expenses of the College will never be less than this year, and it is very doubtful whether the income, at least for the next year, will equal this, for the reason that we teach this year the year around without any vacation, making four terms instead of three, which it would neither be advisable nor practicable for us to do again. It is the expectation of the Synod and of the Trustees, that something will be done to raise an endowment during this coming summer. If we had some $10,000 dollars, either in the way of scholarships or donation, it could be so invested here now as to bring in at least 15 per cent., and that would place us at once above the necessity of asking the Board for further assistance. A part of this can be raised within the bounds of our own Synod, and all of it ought to be. But after considering the matter carefully, I fear that not over one-half can be raised in Iowa. Almost every church of any strength, is engaged in erecting or enlarging its house of worship, or just about commencing the work of erection. Then again, but very few of our churches are self-sustaining. Under these circumstances, a few thousand dollars given to us by the friends of education at the East now, would be better for the College and for the cause of Christ, than double the amount one or two years hence. There is wealth enough in our Church to carry forward efficiently all the departments of benevolent operation in which she is engaged, were it but consecrated to God in the true spirit of that religion we profess. May the Lord give his Church abundantly of this Spirit! * * * *

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,

No. 23 Centre Street, New York.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE BOARD.

The Annual Meeting of the Board of Foreign Missions will be held at the Mission House, New York, on Monday, May 8th, at 4 o'clock, P. M.

The Annual Sermon before the General Assembly will be preached by the Rev. John C. Backus, D. D. The Rev. J. L. Kirkpatrick, D. D., is the alternate preacher.

A Sermon for the Board will also be preached in the Scotch Presbyterian Church on Fourteenth street near Sixth Avenue, New York, by the Rev. Alexander Duff, D. D., of Calcutta, and an abstract of the proceedings of the last year presented on Sabbath evening the 7th of May.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

Mission House, April 13, 1854.

China.—Our latest dates are, Canton, January 15th; Ningpo, January 5th; and Shanghai, January 19th.

The mission families of all these stations were in the enjoyment of their usual health, and the various departments of missionary labour were carried on without interruption, except at Shanghai. Mr. Wight had returned from Ningpo to Shanghai, and, as it was thought, in improved health. The brethren at Ningpo speak of dwelling in peace in the midst of revolution. Their audiences had increased in consequence of their being better understood in the use of the language of the country, and in consequence also of having better places for holding religious worship.

After preaching, the missionaries are in the habit of retiring to a private room, where they read and explain portions of Scripture to such of their hearers as seem to be more impressed with the public preaching, and are disposed to avail themselves of this more familiar kind of instruction. Mention is made of the reception to the church of a native by the name of Zi, who had been a teacher of the boys' school for several years, and who, it was thought, would be a decided Christian and a great blessing to the boys of the school.

Shanghai was still in a state of siege, and there was no hope of relief, unless tidings should arrive of the fall of Pekin. It was supposed that there was very little sympathy between the insurgents who hold Shanghai and those of Nankin. A French steamer had just arrived at Shanghai from Nankin, and communicated much interesting and some curious information about the insurgents of the latter place. The officers of the steamer report their having seen a fleet of two thousand native boats, which it was thought would take a reinforcement of forty-eight or fifty thousand men to join the insurgent army in the North.

The use of opium is interdicted, and the French saw six bodies that had been decapitated and hung up in public places for violating the law. But the most interesting information was, that the insurgents were going on printing the whole Bible. Genesis, Exodus, and Numbers, of the Old Testament, and Matthew of the New, having on the first page the imprimatur of the insurgent chief, were brought down by the steamer. The translation was that of Medhurst and Gutzlaff, and it is said that a large number of persons were engaged in printing it.

India.—The latest intelligence from the missions in India, is, Agra, February 8th; Lodiana, January 21st; Futtehgurh, February 4th; Allahabad, January 23d; Mynpurie, February 5th; and Saharanpur, February 4th. With the exception of Mrs. Janvier, whose health is still feeble, the missionaries and their families were in the enjoyment of their usual health. The school at Agra had been reopened, the male department with ninety pupils, the female with fifty, and others were expected soon to be added to the list.

Mr. Walsh had gone as far as Allahabad, to place his children in the care of Mr. Warren, to be brought to this country. In relation to this separation, he says, "It is a bitter trial to part with children under such circumstances; but few can understand it without personal experience." Mr. Hay mentions the death of one of the Hindu compositors by the name of Benjamin. He is spoken of as "a humble and pious Christian, always attentive to his work, and setting a good example to others. His piety was above the average; he was truly a man of prayer, attached to God's word, and ready, so far as he could, to beseech others to listen to the message of mercy. He seemed quite prepared to die—for several months, expecting this termination to his illness, and looking forward to it without fear. It is a great comfort to us all, that he left us such good ground for hope that his name was written in the Lamb's book of life."

The school at Banda had been visited by Mr. Owen, who mentions that the number of pupils, in the course of two months, had increased from 10 to 120. The mission college at Allahabad contained as many as 350 pupils, and was doing well.

Mr. Campbell gives an account of an interesting movement among the native population of Saharanpur. He says, "A number of Hindus, about twelve, they say, have renounced idolatry, and are in the habit of assembling daily to read our Scriptures, and to inquire about Christianity. They are headed by a learned Pandit, who has often told us that the Hindu shastras are false, and that Christianity is the only true and rational religion. He has sometimes attended at our preaching place, and proclaimed these views before crowds of Brahmins and Hindus. Surely the leaven of the Gospel is working its way into this corrupt mass, and we hope it will go on until the whole is leavened. In the midst of many discouragements, we have no reason to be cast down, but ought to go on sowing the good seed as widely as possible. Will not the Board send us a large reinforcement of labourers?"

Siam.—Our latest intelligence from Bangkok is a letter from Mr. Mattoon, of the 19th December. The members of the mission were well. Dr. House had left on a journey to Korat, an inland town in the eastern part of the kingdom, that had never been visited by a missionary. He had asked and received the permission of the king, and in consequence had been treated with marked kindness as far as he had progressed in his journey at the date of our letter. Mr. Mattoon concludes his letter by saying: "We are looking anxiously every mail to see if any are coming to our assistance. Those of us now here have already spent more than the average life of missionaries in the field; but if in the providence of God we should be removed, it would be almost like beginning anew, to send in new men unacquainted with the language. We ought to enlarge our operations; but if we are to keep our present stations alive, we must have a reinforcement."

Indian Tribes.—Letters have been received from the Choctaw Mission, March 3d; from the Chickasaw, March 4th; from the Creek Mission, March 20th; from the Seminole, February 13th; from the Iowa and Sac, March 19th; from the Otoe and Omaha, March 10th; and from the Chippewa, February 18th.

Mr. Reed had opened a weekly religious service at a place called Six Towns, where the attendance had varied from 24 to 80 persons. He says: "I feel much interested in this people. They give good attention to the gospel, and I hope the Lord will make it mighty unto the salvation of many souls among them." A small house of worship had been built for the purpose of holding religious meetings, and chiefly by the people themselves.

Mr. Irvin speaks of several children in the boarding-school among the Iowas, who were desirous of uniting with the church at their next meeting, and from the orderly conduct and serious deportment of the pupils generally, it was hoped that the Spirit of God was operating silently upon many of their hearts.

Papal Europe.—Letters have been received from the Secretary of the Evangelical Society of Geneva, as late as the 25th February, and from the Secretary of the Central Protestant Society of Evangelization of Paris, 8th March, from which we learn that the work of evangelization, though bitterly opposed in some parts of the country by the Roman Catholic priesthood, is nevertheless making most satisfactory progress in France, Switzerland, Italy, and Algiers.

Arrival.—The Rev. A. H. Seeley, of the Furrukhabad Mission, arrived at New York on the 9th of April. We are glad to see that his health has been benefitted by the voyage.

MINISTERS AND FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The following letter from one of the ministers of our Church, in a distant part of the country, contains a suggestion which it would be well for many of our ministerial brethren to ponder.

"Enclosed please find a draft for one hundred and forty-one dollars, ($141.00,) for the cause of Foreign Missions—113 dollars to be credited to the Presbyterian church of * * * *, monthly concert collections, and 28 dollars to the Sabbath-school of this church. This is quite an increase on the amount given last year, yet not equal to what this church might and ought to do. May the Lord visit us and all his churches with the true missionary spirit. I am more fully convinced, by every year's experience and observation, that the fault is not so much in our churches and church members, as it is in the ministry. I condemn myself in this, and feel that I deserve it. Whenever I have endeavoured to discharge my duty in this respect, and set the cause of missions, or the cause of benevolence in connection with any of our Boards, before the people of my charge, I have always found them ready cordially to respond to it, at least in some measure. And if all our pastors were to do this, I am sure the Boards would not be depressed, as they now are, for want of means to carry forward the great work of extending the Redeemer's kingdom.

OTTOWA AND CHIPPEWA MISSION.

The following extracts from the journal of one of the ministers of our Church who visited the missionary stations among the Chippewa Indians in Michigan last summer, throw some light upon the state and prospects of those missions, and will be read with interest.

Thursday Morning, Aug. 11.—We took a steamer for Mackinaw. I arrived at Mackinaw, Saturday morning, August 13th, and found a sloop ready to sail for Grand Traverse. I made an arrangement with the captain to land us at Mr. Porter's at Little Traverse. He said, with a favourable wind, he could carry us there in ten or twelve hours, which would have given us ample time that day. We did not, however, get in till the next morning, the 14th of August. The Indians, with Mr. Rodd, the interpreter, came off to meet us; found the family at Mr. Porter's all well and glad to see us. That afternoon, at Mr. Porter's request, I preached to the Indians, Mr. Rodd interpreting. It was the second sermon, Mr. Porter said, they had ever heard there. The Sabbath services usually are in the morning, religious exercises, reading the Scriptures in Indian, with familiar remarks by Mr. Porter, interpreted by Mr. Rodd; singing also in Indian, and prayer both in Indian and English. The Indian prayers are by the native members of the church. These members are generally very interesting persons, and exemplary in their lives. The chief of the band is one of them. He was formerly a member of Mr. Dougherty's school at Grand Traverse; he also sets his people an excellent example in the industry with which he cultivates his farm. He was labouring upon this nearly all the time I was there. He is very anxious for the advancement of his band, and, although it would be of course at the sacrifice of his own office as chief, is very desirous to have them become citizens of the United States.

The afternoon of the Sabbath is occupied in a Sabbath-school, which is attended by young and old. I heard one of the classes of boys about ten or twelve years old, who read simple sentences in English very cleverly.

Monday, 16*th*.—In the morning I went with Mr. Porter to visit the sick, for whom he is constantly called to prescribe; afterwards attended day-school, and heard all the scholars read by turns. Some, of course, are in the alphabet, and some read remarkably well for the time they have been under instruction. The school is taught by Mr. Porter, assisted by his mother, who is of the most valuable assistance to the mission. The scholars numbered, while I was there, from twenty to thirty.

On Wednesday evening (17th) I preached again. Some sixty were present. The preaching occupied about an hour, and I have seldom had a more attentive audience. After service, the chief requested that another might be held on Saturday evening. As my movements, however, were uncertain, the appointment was not made.

On Thursday, in company with two Indians as boatmen, and Mr. Rodd as interpreter, I started for Middle Village, Mr. Turner's station. Having a head wind, it was three o'clock in the afternoon when we landed at the lower part of the village.

Leaving our boat in charge of the Indians, Mr. Rodd and myself walked up through the village to find Mr. Turner. We had gone, I should judge, a mile, when I discovered through the trees, and a little distance off the path, a group of bare heads, whose occupation I could not make out at all. The interpreter seemed as much at a loss as I was. I struck off towards them, and found a company of some twenty-five Indians, of various ages, surrounding Mrs. Turner, who was teaching them to read. They were not expecting us, and beyond a momentary surprise, were not all disturbed. They resumed their books with an attentiveness and decorum that would have been creditable to a perfectly civilized school.

Thus they had commenced their school. The house was not up; but in the meantime the Indians were anxious to begin. The missionaries were no less so, and while Mr. Turner was engaged upon the house, Mrs. Turner had gathered and opened the school under the trees. Notice was given to the scholars that there would be preaching in the evening, and although many of the men were absent from the village, there was a good gathering. It was probably the first sermon ever heard here from a Protestant minister. They were very attentive, and at the close, notice was given that I would preach again before leaving in the morning.

Sabbath, 21*st*.—Preached in the morning in Mr. Porter's school-house. It was filled, some twelve or fifteen being over from the village where I preached last night. In the evening preached again, from Matt. xxv. 31—33.

This closed my services among these bands. The Indians have seemed much interested, and are now anxious for a permanent preacher. A judicious man could, I think, obtain access not only to the bands at Bear River (Mr. Porter's place) and Middle Village, but to those at Little Traverse, and probably soon to those of Cross Village, a few miles below Middle Village. The population of these places, as near as I could ascertain, may be stated perhaps as follows:

Bear River,	say 25	families, and	80	souls.
Little Traverse,	" 60	"	250	"
Middle Village,	" 60	"	200	"
Cross Village	" 75	"	300	"
In all,	220		830

Of Cross Village I learned only by inquiry. The other places I saw.

When I came away, the chief, in behalf of his band, wished me to present their thanks to the Board, and to express their satisfaction with the teacher that had been sent them (Mr. Porter.) He also said that after this year the Indians of Cross Village purposed to apply for a teacher.

Monday, 22*d*.—Started in company with the chief for Grand Traverse. At 9 o'clock at night we ran with a heavy gale into Mr. Smith's Station, about six miles from Mr. Dougherty's. Here we spent the night, and the next day went on to Mr. Dougherty's. Here I stayed four days. Mr. Dougherty had moved over from the old mission on the other side of the bay, the week before I arrived. Miss Isbell had also arrived a week in advance of me.

The new boarding-school house was nearly finished. The school was expected to open in about two weeks.

Miss Isbell and Miss Cowles were both on the ground, ready to commence work. No farmer had been obtained. Before I left the Bay, Mr. Cooley had arrived, and was spending some days with Mr. Dougherty. He was willing to come himself, but had some doubts in reference to his wife.

Mr. Dougherty had several acres of the land in crops of potatoes, barley, oats, &c. The soil of the mission land I think as good any I saw in Northern Michigan, and a recent survey adds a considerable quantity to it. The old survey was erroneous.

What the result of the new school will be, of course cannot be told. Both Indians and whites regarded it with much favour. Some of the latter inquired whether it could not be arranged to receive white children also, as paying scholars. They would prefer it to any other school that is accessible to them.

Saturday, 27*th*.—Went over to the village at the old mission. Here I was detained above a week waiting for a passage out. In the mean time, I preached two Sabbaths in the mission church. The congregations were good, and very attentive. They have had no regular preaching since Mr. Dougherty left. There were, I judge, some seventy-five whites present, and a number of Indians. Mr. Dougherty's removal seems to have aroused some of the professing Christians to a sense of responsibility that they have never before had. He will still aid them in their services from time to time, as he may be able.

INDIA.

NARRATIVE OF A VISIT TO BHURTPUR.

Historical sketch of Bhurtpur.

The following account of a visit to the Raja of Bhurtpur by the Rev. James Wilson, when he was stationed at Agra as a missionary of the Board, will be read with pleasure by all those who feel an interest in the peculiar customs of that country.

Bhurtpur, or, as the natives call it, "Bharatapura," i. e., the city of Bharata, the brother of Ram, lies about thirty miles west of Agra. The Raja is one of the principal chieftains of the Jauts, who began to attract attention in Hindustan about the year 1700, having migrated from the banks of the Indus, in the lower part of Moultan. They were permitted to settle, in the avocations of husbandry, in several parts of the "Doole," or country "between the two rivers" (Ganges and Jumna.) Their subsequent progress was very rapid. During the civil wars carried on by the successors of Aurangzebe, (ornament of the throne,) the Jauts found means to secure to themselves a large portion of the country, in which they erected forts and accumulated much wealth.

During Aurangzebe's last march to the "Deccan," (the South,) Churamun, one of the Jaut princes, pillaged the baggage of the army, and with part of the spoil erected the fortress of Bhurtpur.

In the summer of 1803, Lord Lake, on the part of the British Government in India, concluded a treaty of perpetual friendship with Raja Runjeet Singh, the Jaut ruler of Bhurtpur. Two years after this treaty, Runjeet embraced the cause of the Mahratta chief, Jaseuant Holkar, with whom the British had been carrying on a protracted and sanguinary war. This led to a siege of Bhurtpur by Lord Lake in 1805, which will be memorable for a long time in India for the sanguinary obstinacy displayed both in the attack and the defence. It resulted in a treaty, proposed by the Raja, and accepted by the British, in which the supremacy of the British was acknowledged, and the Raja permitted to retain his throne.

The place was again besieged and taken by assault, after much hard fighting, by Lord Combermere, in 1826. At that time the present Raja, who was then but six years old, was raised to the throne. He has been nominally independent, but really under the British control ever since.

A bungalow erected for the use of Europeans—Hunting with tame leopards.

The present Raja lives on very friendly terms with the English. He frequently invites his acquaintances out from Agra to spend a few days at his capital, and entertains them in magnificent style when they accept his invitation. He has erected a travellers' "bungalow" (a house with five or six rooms) just outside the walls of the city, and has it furnished with a full complement of servants, and all things deemed necessary to the comfort of Europeans. This house, and furniture, &c., is at the service of any European, who, travelling that way, is willing to stop and use it. He also keeps up a "jungle," or "royal hunting-ground,"—a region of some six to ten miles in diameter, of real jungle in its American sense. In India any waste or uncultivated land is called "jungle," whether there be any brushwood growing on it or not. In America it is generally understood that "jungle" implies "thicket." Not so in India. The Bhurtpur forest or jungle is a regular thicket of closely knotted and tangled brushwood, in which are found numerous herds of wild deer, wild hogs, wolves, hares, &c., &c. Hunting these is a favourite pastime with his Majesty, and he keeps a standing invitation before the English gentlemen at Agra to come and hunt as much and as often as their hearts desire. He keeps about a dozen of tame leopards for the purpose of hunting and sporting in true royal style. When his royal heart feels inclined to betake itself to the jungle in quest of sport, he fits out a bullock-cart for each of these tame leopards, and setting up a leopard on a kind of elevated platform on each of these carts, with a rope fastened to the platform, and a slip-knot around his neck. Thus accoutred, he has these carts driven silently along the skirts of the jungle, until a leopard gives signs that he has caught sight or scent of a deer, a hog, a hare, or some kind of animal; the noose is then slipped from his neck, and away he bounds with the speed of the wind, and in a few seconds lays the affrighted animal lifeless at his feet. In this way his Majesty can pick up a half a dozen or a dozen of deer, or wild hogs, or something of the sort in a day, without himself or any one of his five hundred retainers having had to stretch a muscle, other than those brought into action in uttering the most unmeaning and unmeasured flatteries of his Majesty's greatness, goodness, and unmatched and unmatchable prowess.

Visit to the Raja—Reception—Deference which the people of India feel for the English Government and people.

I visited Bhurtpur in company with P. B. Reid, Esq., Deputy Magistrate of Agra. He went on government business, and I in the more unassuming pursuit of my missionary work. We spent some four or five days at Bhurtpur.

On the day of our arrival the Wakil—i. e., Prime Minister of the Raja—waited on us, and very kindly and politely arranged that Mr. Reid and myself should visit the Raja at his "Durbar," or hall of audience, that afternoon at four o'clock. At the appointed hour, our party set out on two elephants sent by the Raja—our wives and children (for we had our families with us) to take a general survey of the city, and Mr. Reid and I to visit the Raja in his "Durbar." After a tedious trip through narrow, curving, crooked, dirty streets, we approached the citadel, which stands near the centre of the city, by a bridge over a moat or ditch of some fifty or sixty feet wide, and almost as many deep, filled with water to the depth of twenty or twenty-five feet. The walls of the citadel are firmly built of stone, and, surrounded with such a ditch, must be a formidable place to attack if it be even tolerably manned and managed within.

When we reached the Raja's palace, we dismounted from the elephant at the outer gate, and entered on foot. The Raja himself, surrounded by about fifty of his chief officers and attendants, met us some distance outside of the palace, and conducted us into the Durbar, which was entered by a flight of stone steps some four or five feet high. The Durbar is an open hall, i. e., a large hall enclosed on three sides by the walls of the palace, the fourth side open, looking out upon the city. The Durbar was carpeted with a very coarse and common kind of cloth. About twenty chairs (English) were set in the centre in the form of a hollow square, i. e., forming three sides of a square, leaving the fourth side open. The Raja seated himself on the central chair, and beckoned us to be seated on his right hand. Then his principal men seated themselves on the vacant chairs, so far as they were available, the rest squatted on the floor in ordinary Hindustani style. All things thus adjusted for a royal "mulágát," (interview of ceremony,) it remained that we make something of it. The conversation was dull and commonplace, the Raja apparently making no effort to lead in it, or having no storehouse of invention from which to bring any thing forth. I was in doubt whether to ascribe it to indifference or incapacity on his part. He answered civilly any questions proposed by either of us, and seemed interested in any suggestions made by us; but he seemed unable or disinclined to originate anything himself.

Mr. Reid, as Deputy Magistrate of Agra, introduced the topic of opening up a road through his territories from Futtehpore-Sikri to Deeg, passing through the city of Bhurtpur. To this his Majesty was all attention. He had applied to Mr. Jackson, the Magistrate of Agra, to take up and perform that work for him. He had requested him to carry a road of that kind through the entire breadth of his territories, running it through his imperial city, widening and straightening the main street, which is at some places so narrow that two elephants cannot pass each other. He was anxious to have a wide, open street pass through the centre of the city, but has not the firmness or moral courage to meet the complaints of his people, if he should do it himself. He said "if he should do it, his people would complain of him, and charge him with doing that for his personal gratification which his ancestors did not think it proper to do. But if Mr. Jackson would do it, then he could say, in answer to their complaints, that the English government had done it of their own good pleasure, and what could he do to prevent them?" I mention this, to show the inefficiency of Rajas and other native officials in India, and the place occupied by the British government in their estimation.

Description of the Raja's person and character—Palace and its ornaments.

The Raja is a dark, fat, heavy, dull-looking man, about thirty years of age. He has been from his childhood a protege of the British government. His face is deeply marked with small-pox, his eye dull, and altogether about as uninteresting a man, in appearance, as I have ever seen. His dress was green velvet, trimmed with yellow satin, and a yellow turban or head-dress. His Majesty, his courtiers, and we, all seemed oppressed with the weight of effort to keep up to the dignity of a courtly interview. I had occasionally "stood before kings" before that time, but seldom have I found an interview with royalty, or even with a respectable and intelligent native of any class, which brought forth so little of interest—so little worth even trying to relate. After a half hour of this sort of dragging, heavy, heartless conversation, in which none of his courtiers presumed to participate, the women and children of our party joined us, and we were politely shown through the principal apartments of the palace by the "Wakel." The different apartments were well—rather profusely—furnished with pictures, looking-glasses, chandeliers, &c., generally in English style, and of English manufacture, but all crowded together without order or taste, much more resembling the crowding of a tradesman's shop than the arrangement of a Raja's palace. Everything relating to the position and arrangement of the costly and magnificent furniture, which was there in prolific abundance, seemed to say that there were almost unlimited means to purchase, but the absence of all taste to arrange. Everthing seemed to say that woman's taste had not been permitted to have its presiding influence there. The ladies of the palace were all shut up in the "zanána," (harem,) and are permitted, I suppose, only to walk through these apartments occasionally, as strangers, like ourselves.

In all native houses which I have been permitted to visit in India, from the palace of the Raja to the hovel of the peasant, taste, symmetry, proportion, are words which have no meaning in them. The most gorgeous greatness is seen in immediate juxtaposition with something that is parsimonious, contracted, and mean. A magnificent hall, where the rays of the setting sun are thrown in ten thousand sparkling forms by the pendulous prisms of magnificent chandeliers on walls bedaubed and besmoked with little earthen lamps set in niches in the wall, where a halfpenny lamp sends parts of its muttard oil dripping down the wall, and diffuses its heavy, sooty smoke along the wall, up towards the ceiling.

Preaching—Description of the city—The Raja's tame leopards and their keepers.

During the few days which we spent at Bhurtpur, I spent part of every day in the bazars of the city, with the two native Christian brethren who accompanied us, in preaching the gospel, and unfolding the Bible scheme of redemption to a people proverbially blind and besotted; and part of the day in riding through and around the city, on elephants furnished by the Raja, to view the city and environs. The outer wall of the city is just an embankment of earth, heaped up to the height of some fifty feet, and some sixty feet wide. The top and sides of the wall almost everywhere show traces of the water cutting them away, and cutting its way through them so as to form sharp and deep ravines, which the authorities fill up in a clumsy manner, when they get so deep as to be inconvenient crossing them. The circumference of the city, on the wall, is said to be seven miles. The appearance of the city, when viewed from the top of the wall, suggests the idea of great poverty, and slovenliness, and indolence. It makes one think of some of the cities destroyed by Joshua and the Israelites, in the conquest of Canaan; and certainly the manners and habits of the people, to a painful extent, correspond with theirs. We witnessed scenes in nearly all the more public streets, which bespeak the inhabitants to be a more than ordinarily debased and besotted people. This is uniformly the case in India. The residents of a town or city, in which a native prince, either Hindu or Mohammedan, has a petty court, have more of dissipation, and debauchery, and demoralization in every form, than in an ordinary city of equal size.

In Bhurtpur, the Raja has his tame leopards accommodated in one of the principal streets, in the most public and best built parts of the city. As you pass along the street, you see about a dozen of lazy, independent-looking leopards, lying on as many charpoys, or native bedsteads, each covered with a blanket, and their keepers or attendants seated on the ground beside them. These attendants wait upon their respective leopards with almost as much of ceremonious servility as upon the Raja himself. As the curious foreigner passes by them, they look upon him with an air of half-curiosity, half-contempt, as much as to say, "It is worth a journey from Europe to Bhurtpur to look at us, and our noble leopards." And with an air and aspect which intimate that each of them regards the Raja of Bhurtpur as the first personage in this world, and either himself or his leopard the second.

We found very few persons around our preaching stations in the bazars who were capable of reading. This accords with all my previous observation, that the presence of a native court has a tendency merely to debase and debauch the community, but nothing to give any taste for reading or education.

Bhurtpur is, on the whole, one of the poorest, dirtiest, most crowded and ill-looking cities which I have seen in India. There is one rather small bazar, in which a small variety of ordinary native merchandize appeared in ordinary quantity. All, or nearly all, beside this, seemed but a rude mass of very inferior houses, built of mud, and covered with grass. The whole seemed so rude, and primitive, and common, that two hours might suffice to level the whole city to the ground. At the base of the outer wall, near one of the bastions, lay an immensely large gun of wrought iron, which had been mounted on the wall, up to the time that the city was taken in 1826 by Lord Combermere. The gun is about sixteen feet in length, and three feet in diameter at the larger end. The calibre is about eight inches. It must have been capable of throwing a ball to an immense distance when in its place on so high a bastion.

Bhurtpur exhibits a very small number of temples, or of the ordinary indications of Hindu places of worship. I have seldom seen a Hindu city of such a population which had not a much larger number of temples claiming the attention of the passer-by.

I suppose this is indicative that it has never been the favourite resort or residence of Hindu priests.

Visit to Rumere and Deeg—Character of these cities—Palace—Summer-house, with its water-works.

We also visited Rumere and Deeg, both fortified positions belonging to the Jauts, the former ten miles north of Bhurtpur, and the latter ten or twelve miles north of it, and both taken from them in 1803 by Lord Lake.

At Deeg, the outer wall, like that of Bhurtpur, is made of earth, and very extensive. The citadel in the centre is of stone, very high and strong, and surrounded with a broad, deep ditch. The bastions at the corners were very high and strong. Three of these are now much dilapidated. The fourth is in pretty good repair. We went to the top of it, to obtain a view of the ruins of the city and surrounding country. There we found another immensely large gun, of the same size and capacity as the one at Bhurtpur. It is still in the position it occupied before the place was taken by the British.

At this place there is a splendid garden and palace, built by the Jaut princes, now in possession of the Raja of Bhurtpur. The garden, palaces, and general fitting up of the place are immensely superior to that at Bhurtpur occupied by the Raja. It is hard to conjecture what may be the reasons which induce the Raja to occupy the palace at Bhurtpur, in preference to these. The large garden in which the palaces are, is fitted up in a most superb style, furnished with a great variety of the richest fruits and flowers, with fountains, jets, &c., &c.

There is a superb summer-house [bárah-darí, or house of twelve doors, as the natives call a summer-house,] on the edge of an artificial lake, which is fitted up with three hundred jets of water, supplied from a tank or reservoir of water raised to a great height on one side of the garden. When these fountains are opened, and the jets brought into play, they produce all the effects of an immensely heavy fall of rain on and around the summer-house. They played for a couple of hours for our entertainment. The effect is indescribable. The jets of water are of great variety as to size, shape, and position. They are placed all around the seats in the summer-house, so that look which way you will, an immensely heavy shower of rain is all that addresses itself to the eye or ear.

In a country withered and dried up with long continued drought and heat, as this part of India is for many months every year, a summer-house with fittings up like these must be regarded as a rare luxury. It is not strange that gardens of this description are used by the natives to illustrate their highest conceptions of Paradise.

The splendour and extravagance of the fittings up inside of such a place, contrasts painfully with the squalor and poverty, and absence of everything which can be fairly called comfort outside. The luxurious enjoyments of a physical kind within these places, is, to a native mind, heightened by the squalid and disgusting poverty which presents itself everywhere without; and the poverty and discomfort outside are aggravated by the contrast with the splendour, and ease, and voluptuous enjoyment within.

Preaching at Deeg—the disposition in relation to hearing preaching.

We spent a few days at Deeg, part of each day with the native Christian fellow-labourers in the bazar, preaching Christ and him crucified, as the only foundation on which an awakened sinner can rest a sure and sustaining hope. A few seemed to hear with an attention and interest which showed that they knew something about the struggles of one who has inquired with some sincerity as to "what he must do to be saved." But to the great mass of the people, all that which referred to another life, or preparation for it, seemed "like a root out of dry ground, having neither form nor comeliness," nor anything which could elicit interest. We found very few persons capable of reading. The people in these towns generally seem to think that "if the Pandits (the learned Brahmins) can read a little, that is all-sufficient; there is no use in any other parties troubling themselves about it." In all this region, west and south-west of Agra, until you come down into the northern districts of Bombay, there has been exceedingly little done in the way of bringing Christianity to the knowledge of the people. The "fallow ground" is, in this respect, as yet unbroken. I might say something about Gobudheen, and other places of Hindu resort in this region, but I fear that my communication is already more tedious than interesting to your readers.

An expedient to reform bad monkeys.

One anecdote I must relate here before I leave this subject, illustrative of Hindu feeling and public sentiment. At Deeg and Gobudheen there are large numbers of monkeys allowed to live, in a state between wild and tame, among the trees around their tanks and villages. A few years ago, there were two large monkeys at Deeg, which grew so fierce that they destroyed the lives of several citizens. The people complained of them to the Raja of Bhurtpur, as the paramount authority in the region. He authorized them to construct, at his expense, two large, firm cages, set on wheels, and to decoy them into these cages. These they soon made, and after a large amount of toil and labour, they got each of them decoyed and fastened in one of the cages, and reported to the Raja. He sent a police force, and had the cages, with the captive monkeys in them, run over to the village of Gobudheen, eight miles distant, where there are some very holy tanks of water, and a large number of sacred monkeys, and there set loose to take care of themselves, and their neighbours too, as they thought proper. He did not dare to kill them. That would have raised the whole Hindu population in wrath, if not in arms against him. And he thought that if set loose at Gobudheen, at a sacred place, and among sacred monkeys, the better association there would reform their vicious habits.

CHINA: NINGPO MISSION.

REPORT OF THE NINGPO MISSION FOR THE YEAR ENDING SEPTEMBER 30, 1853.

In laying before you a review of the state of our mission during the year, it is necessary to commence by referring to a painful providence, which met us almost on its threshold. Our brother Coulter was last summer attacked with dysentery, a disease often fatal in this climate; and though the native vigour of his constitution long resisted its progress, a voyage home was finally recommended as affording the only prospect of recovery. In case his health should be restored, brother Coulter contemplated spending some time at home, in fuller preparation for that good work which he desired so earnestly. But God chose to forestall his wishes, by calling him to a holier ministry in the upper sanctuary.

In the removal of brother Coulter we individually mourn a friend, endeared to us by years of harmonious intercourse, and as a mission deplore a member under whose superintendence many of the leaves of the tree of life have been scattered for the healing of this nation, and who had just begun to preach the gospel in their language.

The other members of our mission have been favoured with good health. Every department of labour has been carried on with even less than usual interruption, and some have been considerably extended. For the sake of distinctness I will enter into some detail.

1. Conversions.

While we grieve over the fewness of conversions compared with the multitudes who have opportunity of hearing the gospel, it is still not without a strong feeling of encouragement that we report six cases, being more than we have ever before received in a single year. They are all fruits of long and patient instruction, and were not admitted till they had given the fullest evidence of sincerity.

The first received was a young woman brought up in Miss Aldersey's school. She was married last fall, and though not at that time a professed Christian, patiently endured beating, starvation, and other harsh treatment, rather than perform the idolatrous rites connected with the marriage ceremony.

Having thus proven her faith by her works, she was soon after admitted to the fellowship of the church, and is now located on the North Bank, near enough for regular attendance at chapel on the Sabbath.

Three of the others are boys in our boarding-school, and will be noticed more particularly in connection with the school. The remaining two, a teacher by the name of Lu, and a printer named Dzing, have for several years enjoyed daily instruction in one of our mission families, and were not brought to take up the cross without struggles and trials such as clearly to evince the sincerity of their profession. They both possess talents and education sufficient to make useful preachers of the gospel; and though that office will, more than any other, expose them to the contempt of their countrymen, are desirous of entering it as soon as they can be prepared for its duties. Lu Seentong is for the present employed in teaching in the boys' school, both as a preparatory discipline for an office in which aptness to teach is a chief requisite, as well as in the hope that he may in the meantime exert a wholesome religious influence over the boys in the school.

With the same view we will probably make Dzing assistant teacher in a day school, which we design opening with the ensuing year.

2. Preaching.

All of us have been engaged on Sabbath, and most of us on several days of the week, in preaching the gospel to audiences varying from ten to two hundred, and we believe not without a real and permanent effect.

The completion of a neat and commodious chapel in one of the most public parts of the city, has made a large accession to the number of our hearers. The new chapel is generally well filled, and often crowded; and furnishes in the upper rooms accommodations for a large school. This neat building, erected at a cost (exclusive of the ground) of less than six hundred dollars, bids fair to become one of our most important centres of influence.

Of the multitudes to whom we have during the past year made known the message of mercy, the greater part have been drawn to hear us by mere curiosity, and none that we know of has cordially embraced it; yet we believe that the influence of the dominant superstitions is very much weakened, and that the people, though not prepared for the voluntary renunciation of idolatry, would acquiesce in any act of authority which should abolish it, and establish the worship of the true God in its stead. I will mention a few facts corroborating this view.

The Buddhist religion has long been proscribed by the laws of the empire, but its influence over the people became so great that it has now for ages been tolerated. Still, however, certain low officials occasionally make use of these defunct proscriptions for the purpose of extorting from rich temples a part of their revenue. This year, the priests demurring to the large per centage demanded on the expected profits of an annual festival to be held in the eighth month, the mayor settled the dispute by interdicting it altogether. This act, though it has excited murmurs in some quarters, is with the better classes decidedly popular. And we have perhaps a less doubtful indication in the fact, that the people of this city, while they know that the Kwangse insurgents profess our religion, and propose at once to effect a religious as well as a political revolution, still continue to hear our preaching with respect, and instead of suspicion, regard us with growing confidence.

And to this I may add, that though the insurgents are known to be inexorable iconoclasts, demolishing with unsparing hand the objects of immemorial veneration, this is so little to the prejudice of their cause, that the imperialists, though they industriously circulate all kinds of fictions, have never, that we know of, dared to employ their hatred of idolatry as an argument against them.

3. Printing and distribution of books.

Our preaching is usually accompanied with the distribution of books, that our hearers may possess the truths to which they listen in a more permanent form. Many of them, too, are strangers from adjacent districts or distant provinces. After trying in vain to get an idea of the gospel from a discourse in the local dialect of Ningpo, they readily comprehend when they read it in books written in the common language of the empire, and when they return home carry with them these silent preachers to publish the glad tidings in places inaccessible to the living missionary. A missionary returning from a tour to Chin-keungfu last spring, found in a town in that vicinity, a copy of the ten commandments, with notes, issued from our press, which was regarded by the inhabitants as a public treasure.

A demand for Christian books seems also to be springing up in Shuntung and other northern provinces, so that the missionaries at Shanghai, where there is a considerable northern trade, are often besieged by companies of men from that quarter, begging for tracts. The publications of our press are thus diffused over a vast area, and a time seems to be coming when they will no longer be thrown aside with neglect. And if, in the providence of God, such a period does arrive, we will realize more than ever the value of our presses; and our method of printing, which appears to the Chinese, compared with their own simple process, to be both complicated and expensive, will then stand out in manifest superiority. The wooden blocks of the natives are worn out with the printing of a few thousand impressions, and were the demand for books great, the expense of cutting would need to be repeated for every district, while a few fonts of metallic type would send forth a stream sufficient to irrigate the whole empire.

During the year our press has issued 82,750 volumes, containing 2,840,800 pages.

Something has also been done in printing the Romanized colloquial. A version of the Gospel of Luke has been issued from our press, and the Gospels of Matthew and John have been printed on Chinese blocks at the joint expense of our mission and the members of the Church Missionary Society.

The number of those who are capable of reading these books is as yet small, not much exceeding two hundred; but as they are written in the vernacular spoken alike by the learned and the illiterate, they cannot but be intelligible when read in their hearing, and this influence will not, therefore, be confined to the few who may learn to read the alphabetic system. Indeed, the boys and girls from our schools may do much good by reading these books to their parents and friends, who, though they know nothing of the characters which they contain, are already familiar with the words. And our native catechists may read the Bible in our chapels, not as heretofore in a language which requires to be accompanied by an extempore translation, but already clothed in words simple and appropriate, so that the multitudes of unlettered poor to whom their own books are sealed, may hear in their own tongue the wonderful works of God.

4. Schools—Boys' School.

The Romanized colloquial is now taught to most of the pupils of both of our boarding-schools. Their other studies continue much as heretofore. The number of pupils in the boys' school at the close of the year was twenty-six, having been somewhat reduced by the dismissal of several unpromising cases; and though applications for admission have not been wanting few have been received, as it is desired, if possible, to introduce pupils of a better class. Three of the boys have been admitted to the privileges of the church. This unexceptionable conduct gives pleasing evidence that they have undergone a real change, and their talents encourage us to hope that they will yet be extensively useful. Several other pupils have exhibited some concern for their souls, and we trust that this little plot of ground thus hedged in for peculiar cultivation, will henceforth yield an annual harvest.

Girls' School.

The girls' school closed the year with twenty-eight pupils, who are generally prepossessing in appearance, and respectable as to talents. Though not permitted to record any case of conversion among them, we believe that the labours of their instructors have not been in vain, and that principles have been implanted in their young minds which will grow with their growth, and ere long perhaps develope the ripe fruits of godliness.

Day School.

The day school, under care of Dr. MacCartee, and located in a part of his North Bank Dispensary, has had an average attendance of twenty-three, among whom are some promising boys, who may perhaps be got into the boarding-school.

5. Medical Department.

The medical labours of Dr. MacCartee have for the latter half of the year been divided between Ningpo and Chinhui, two days in the week being given to the dispensary in the former, and one to that in the latter place.

The dispensing of medicine is always accompanied by the offer of balm for the soul; but alas! few of those who are so eager in seeking remedies for bodily diseases, can be brought to realize their spiritual maladies.

The number of cases treated during the year has been above 6000.

6. Branch Station at Chinhui.

Within this department, there are, besides Ningpo, five other walled cities, each containing from ten to thirty thousand inabitants, and surrounded by innumerable villages and hamlets. Three of these are distant from Ningpo about a day's journey, and the other two may be reached in two or three hours.

Our attention has long been directed to these as inviting localities for branch stations, but our force is still too small to attempt the occupation of more than one of them. We have selected Chinhui. It is the largest of the five, and most convenient of access, being situated immediately on the river, so that we can go with the ebb, and return with the flood tide. Being moreover at the mouth of the river, and a common anchorage for vessels coming and going to and from Ningpo, it may almost be considered a part of the open port, and the magistrates, though they might be jealous of any farther progress into the interior, would hardly think of molesting us in the occupation of a place which is already practically open to foreign trade.

Early in the Spring, after much difficulty, a house suitable for a chapel and dispensary was rented and refitted; since which Dr. MacCartee has visited the dispensary once a week, and the chapel has at the same time been opened for preaching by other members of the mission. The attendance at both is highly encouraging.

At the beginning of the year, we contemplated detaching one of our brethren to that station, but afterwards thought best to delay the measure till we shall be reinforced from home.

7. Itineration.

Besides our labours at Chinhui, which have been a kind of periodical itineration, little else has been done in this way. Omitting excursions for health and relaxation, which we always endeavour to improve as opportunities for tract distribution, and sometimes preaching, I need only mention two excursions of greater extent. In one of these, books were distributed and the gospel preached in parts of the Ysz-byi district, seldom, perhaps never, before visited by missionaries. The other was a tour through the district of Funghwa, in which the people welcomed the missionary, and threw open their examination-hall and temples for him to preach in. They also listened with attention, and received books gladly. In this tour, more than a thousand volumes were distributed, and the missionary was painfully impressed with the want of labourers, not to reap, but to sow with the first seeds of truth, the vast regions already open to the gospel.

In conclusion, we would beg to send through you to our entire Church, one more earnest appeal for more missionaries. Twelve years ago, when China's outer wall was broken down, the Church recognized it as the Lord's doing, responded to the call of Providence, and the five ports were soon occupied by more than seventy Protestant missionaries. But what if God, by a more signal providence, should utter a louder call? What if he should suddenly and at once prostrate all the barriers which still restrict us to the coast, and allow us but a few points of that? What if he should before the lapse of another year lay open the whole interior of a country as vast in extent as our confederated States, and teeming with more than ten times their population, is our Church ready to come up and possess the land? The present is a crisis for China. The revolutionary party owes its strength to a Christian element derived from the labours of missionaries. Its chiefs and generals, with all the armies under their command, abhor idols, believe in one God, receive the Bible as his word, and profess their faith in his Son Jesus Christ as the Saviour of the world. And it is not impossible that this revolution may issue in the total subversion of idolatry, and the recognition of Christianity as the religion of the empire. But whether so glorious a result be accomplished or not, it is almost certain that the fate of the Manchu dynasty is sealed, and with its overthrow we may expect the downfall of that exclusive system which the Tartar Emperors have been the chief agents in upholding. In that event, is our Church prepared to enlarge the scale of her operations in China? Has she men? We think she has. Even though the candidates for the ministry be few, and the number of them offering for the foreign field small, cannot our Church send out some of her two thousand pastors to gather new flocks among the lost sheep of China? Years of pastoral experience in a Christian land are not a hinderance, but on the contrary an important qualification for the missionary work. And it is not impossible for men of sound mind and studious habits, though somewhat advanced in life, to acquire enough of the language to be very useful. Matthew Rica was nearly fifty years old when he entered China, and none of his successors has exerted a wider influence, or left behind him a higher reputation.

Finally, we would entreat the earnest prayers of all God's people for us in our work, and for heathen China, now travailing in the pangs of her national regeneration.

MISCELLANEOUS.

NARRATIVE OF THE STATE OF RELIGION WITHIN THE BOUNDS OF THE PRESBYTERY OF LODIANA FOR THE YEAR 1852–53.

The Presbytery of Lodiana do not find in the reports of their churches, and the general tenor of events for the past year anything very striking to record. They have not been favoured with any special refreshing from on high, nor have they been left entirely without tokens of the divine favour.

The principal facts that seem to require attention in this narrative are as follows.

There has been a small increase in each of the three infant churches within our bounds, and one new church (at Lahor) has been organized.

Cases requiring discipline have been few; and those that have occurred have not been of the grossest sort. There have been several inquirers, some from among the heathen community, and some from the number of nominal Christians, who compose a part of all our congregations. The cases of some of these are deemed hopeful. The opposition which the preaching of the gospel meets with among the natives seems diminishing. Some who once opposed violently, now listen quietly, or content themselves with an occasional remark.

It is farther to be observed that the increasing interest manifested by the European community within our bounds, in the evangelization of the heathen, is to be taken as an evidence of an improved and elevated tone of religious feeling, and therefore not improperly a matter of remark here.

On the other hand, we are compelled to admit, and we would not disguise the fact, that there is among ourselves, and among our church members, a palpable want of zeal and fervour in the Lord's work, and great deficiency in self-denial, self-devotion, and a spirit of prayer. We cannot but see and feel that this is unquestionably the case. In our native church members, it manifests itself in the lifelessness of their performances, when they take part in public worship, as well as the imperfect manner in which they discharge the great duty of labouring for the salvation of those around them; some of them, as we fear, seldom doing anything of the sort. A result of this again is, that there are few whom we find fit to set apart to the work of catechists; and our operations, from the deficiency in this department, are much limited. As another legitimate consequence of this low state of piety, we see that they are much wanting in a spirit of brotherly love and forbearance toward one another; by reason of which, difficulties easily and frequently arise among them. They also seem to have little idea of denying or exerting themselves, in order to be able to give for the promotion of the gospel.

The little fruit as yet realized in our schools is also a painful and humbling circumstance. While many of the dear youth under our care seem convinced, and some of them would perhaps find it a real relief, were circumstances favourable, to profess Christianity, yet they do not reach the point of renouncing all for Christ. The same remark may, as we suppose, to a considerable extent, be made with reference to many of those to whom we preach the gospel in the towns and villages within our bounds. The fact, that the servants in our families continue, almost without exception, in the modes of belief in which they have been brought up, though they have long been with us, (some of them almost from the time that the preaching of the gospel in this region first commenced,) is also a circumstance that may well lead us to inquire whether the Lord has not a controversy with us. Another important and painful fact is, that several of those who have formerly come under the censure of the Church, and been suspended from its communion, still continue under discipline, not having given any satisfactory evidence of repentance. Some of them, we grieve to say, have continued in their sins, on account of which they were originally dealt with; and others, although in a measure reformed, yet do not bring forth fruits meet for repentance.

In view of all these things, we have evidently much cause for humiliation; and we would desire to take that low place before God which becometh us. But we feel constrained to say also, that we fear there is a very serious deficiency in a spirit of prayer, on the part of the Church at home, in our behalf; and we would, as in the Lord's name, beseech our brethren to be much more instant and earnest at the throne of grace, pleading with God, that he would pour out his holy Spirit on us, and on those to whom we minister.

Finally, we have to acknowledge the Lord's chastening hand, in his having just now removed a beloved brother and diligent fellow-labourer from among us. The Rev. J. Porter, who was one of the little company that first constituted the Presbytery of Lodiana, and who from year to year peculiarly delighted to meet with his brethren, and take part with them in their councils and efforts for Zion's advancement, is now no longer among us. He has gone, as we believe, to the Zion above. It is a blessed change for him, but we are left enfeebled. The harvest is great, and the labourers were few, but now they are still fewer. We look with solicitious longing toward our Zion at home, while we inquire, is there any one on whom has rested a double portion of our departed brother's spirit, about to join us, and take his place?

J. H. ORBISON, Moderator.

THE CLAIMS OF OLD CALABAR AND ITS VICINITY.

[Concluded from p. 60.]

3. The responsibility of conveying the gospel to the nations lying on the east of the Niger devolves on us, as we occupy the gate of access to them.—Episcopalians, Wesleyans, and other religious bodies, have formed missions in various parts of the African coast on this side the Niger, and they propose to carry their stations inland by successive posts till they reach that river; but in doing so they will have to cross the Kong mountains, a range of considerable elevation, and which forbids the idea that this is the pathway to the tribes on the east of the Niger. We have just shown that the entrance by the Delta is all but impracticable, and have quoted the words of Mr. Petermann to prove that the best road to inner Africa is by the Tchadda. Now, the way to the Tchadda is, as we have stated above, by the Cross river, which empties its waters into the Calabar Frith. We thus occupy the gate of entrance to these extensive regions. If we were not there, other churches might take possession of this important place, and perform the work. But our being there excludes them. We did not, when we began the mission in 1846, know that Old Calabar is the key to Central Africa, and therefore we could not foresee the vast responsibilities which this fact imposes on us. But since it is so, it is right that the church be made to see the stupendous nature of the enterprise which we have undertaken, and to regard all these nations as directing their eyes to us for that gospel which alone can save their souls. A circumstance has lately occurred which tends to place this matter in a proper light. A number of Ibos who were rescued from slave ships, put ashore at Sierra Leone, and there converted, asked their spiritual instructors if it was possible for them to return to their country on the Niger, and teach their friends the precious truths which they had learned. The Rev. Mr. Jones, of the Episcopal Mission in Sierra Leone, accompanied with three of the converts, visited last year the Bight of Biafra and Fernando Po, with the view of getting information on this subject. He was told that it was not practicable to ascend by the Delta except in a steam vessel, and that to attempt to go by Bonny would, on account of the savage character of the natives, expose them to certain death. He then visited Old Calabar, and had an interview with King Eyo of Creek Town, who said that there were Ibos among his people, and that he would be glad to see them, "Let them come here," he at once said; "I glad to see them and to give them land. I will look at them as white man, because they have learned white man fashion. Let them come and teach my people. Nobody will trouble them." "I was greatly encouraged," Mr. Jones adds, "by his conversation. Here was evidence that I had not come in vain, and that the Calabar country was open to receive any of her children who might be disposed to return;" and he concludes his paper with the statement, "that any number of Christian Ibos or Calabars might safely settle on the Calabar river, where the Scotch brethren would welcome them." Here, then, is additional testimony that the way by the Delta is at present barred, that the best course for the converts at Sierra Leone, who may wish to return to their native countries on the Niger, to take, is to go to Old Calabar; and that there is a prospect that numbers of them may return and aid our missionaries in the work of the Lord. We repeat the assertion, that we occupy the gateway and exclude others, and the Lord expects that we discharge the duties which our position involves. Not only the people of the six stations named by Mr. Waddell, but all the millions situated in the extensive regions east of the Niger, must, in all human probability, receive the gospel from persons who shall go from Old Calabar. Oh, what shall we say to the Lord in the great day if we neglect these millions, and "forbear to deliver those that are drawn unto death, and those that are ready to be slain?" One thing is certain—we shall not be able to say THAT WE KNEW IT NOT. And

4. The extension of the mission will facilitate the success of the work. It will do so in three respects. In the first place, persons are constantly coming in from the surrounding towns and districts, and counteracting, by their heathen feelings and habits, the efforts of our missionaries; but when these places are also brought under the gospel, this neutralizing influence will cease. In the second place, the people of Calabar have much intercourse in the way of trade with neighbouring tribes; and when they are converted they will, by their conversation and conduct, make the gospel known to these tribes, excite their interest, and induce them to ask for teachers.

And, in the third place, the missionaries will become acquainted with the people of more remote districts, conciliate their kindly regards, and prepare them for receiving instructors. The Africans are jealous of the interference of Europeans, and are not friendly to their exploring the country; but those missionaries who occupy advanced posts will, as those residing at Calabar have done, overcome such prejudices, gain the confidence of the natives, and gradually enlarge the sphere of their geopraphical knowledge. In all these ways the extension of the mission will conduce to its prosperity and success; and it ought specially to be added, that, as high lands exist in the interior, there is good reason to hope that inland stations will be found, which will be much more healthful than those on the coast, and which will serve as places to which the other missionaries may retire for the purpose of recruiting their weakened strength.

These considerations, which we fervently recommend to the attention of our readers, clearly show that the Calabar mission is an enterprise which is enough of itself to occupy all the resources of our Church. Though we had no other foreign field of labour whatever, it would adequately employ all the men and the means which we could furnish. And we ask, respectfully but earnestly, if there is a people in the whole world more truly destitute than the negro tribes are, situated on the east of the Niger, and inland from Calabar; and if, seeing that we stand in the door of access to them, there is any other people in all the wide fields of heathenism that have in the providence of God such claims upon our sympathy and aid as they have?

THE "CIRCULAR" TO THE CHURCHES.

It is with great pleasure we record the fact that the recent appeal of the Board to the churches for contributions to the colporteur fund has met a very encouraging response. During the month of March and one week of April, about seventy churches sent in contributions amounting to about $1200. Many of these would have contributed had no circular been sent. But we conceive this to be equally encouraging. There is an increasingly healthy state of public sentiment on the subject of regular systematic contributions among our people.

Our Board labours under the disadvantage of being regarded as independent. We received a few days since a liberal contribution from a church within two hundred miles of the office, accompanied by the statement that it was the first contribution ever yet made to the colporteur fund by that church, for the missionary department of our Board had not heretofore been properly understood and appreciated.

Not the least gratifying fact connected with many of the donations sent, is that they come in small sums from some of our smaller and weaker churches. We wish all to give as God prospers them, not grudgingly nor of necessity, but cheerfully; but we do not undertake to say how much each church or member ought to give. We regard as auspicious of a better time, that so many of what are called feeble churches are engaging in the work of systematic benevolence. Let the habit of giving be fixed, irrespective of the sums, and then let pastors and agents present those considerations which will open the hearts—the purses will not remain closed.

Still we are far from being relieved of embarrassment. We trust that our Presbyteries will be inclined to take such order on this subject that in a few years every church will be found regularly and annually contributing, the rich of their abundance, and the poor of their poverty, to sustain all our enterprises liberally and uniformly.

HOW OTHERS REGARD OUR WORK.

We publish the following entirely voluntary testimonial to the importance of the work in which we are engaged, from a pastor of a church in connection with another branch of the Presbyterian family in our country. We commend it to the attention of our readers. Such testimonies are by no means singular.

Dear Sir—We have now in our midst one of your colporteurs, distributing the valuable books of your Board. The people gladly receive him, and consider it a great privilege that such excellent books are brought to their firesides. This is only the second time that your agent has visited this section, and I must say great good has followed his agency here; and there is not an orthodox Presbyterian minister in the land, who does not wish to stand in the way of his own success, but ought to use all his endeavours to have the volumes of the Board widely spread in the community in which he labours. I look upon the Board and the spread of its publications as one of the most powerful engines, next to the gospel ministry, to tear down the ramparts of error and iniquity, and I am only astonished that this institution is not more countenanced by other orthodox sections of the Presbyterian Church in this country. I have never seen an exceptionable book on its catalogue, and the tracts put forth by it are more precious than gold. May it prosper! God will certainly smile on every endeavour to spread his own truth.

From another clergyman of the Congregational Church we receive the following:

The box of books, all in the best order, reached me to day. I assure you that all is more than satisfactory. I never opened a box with more complete delight. Every book is a treasure. I feel that with reference to your publications, it may properly be said, "ex uno disce omnes." I have never seen any thing in any book which I consider unscriptural or trashy.

OUR CAUSE IN THE SOUTH.

It will be seen from the following extracts from the Southern Presbyterian, that the interests of our Board are receiving increased attention among our Southern brethren.

We augur successful results from this effort of the Charleston Presbytery, both from the ability of the churches interested in the movement, and the eminent capacity for the service to which he has been appointed, of the gentleman to whom its execution has been entrusted.

Charleston, February 21*st*, 1854.

The undersigned begs leave to call the attention of the pastors and churches of Charleston Presbytery to the extract which will be found below, from the Minutes of the Presbytery at their last regular meeting. Mr. W. Wilson, who has been engaged for nearly two years as colporteur within the bounds of Harmony Presbytery, and who comes highly recommended for his efficiency and success in the work, has been employed for the same service within our bounds. He is hereby recommended to the churches and families which he may visit in the discharge of his duties. J. L. Kirkpatrick.

EXTRACT.

"1. That a Superintendent of Colportage, to reside in Charleston, be appointed, who shall co-operate with the Board of Publication at Philadelphia, in the employment and direction of an efficient colporteur within our bounds.

"2. That a collection be taken up at an early day, in all our churches, to defray all the expenses of this movement.

"3. That while the general direction of this colporteur must be left to the Superintendent, in conjunction with the Board, Presbytery would suggest that the winter and spring months be spent by the colporteur in the city of Charleston and adjacent islands and country; and the summer and fall months in the other parts of our territory.

"4. That while the colporteur makes his report of sales to the Board, the Superintendent shall make a full and written report of his operations to each meeting of Presbytery.

"This report having been previously accepted, it was now adopted; and the Rev. J. L. Kirkpatrick, D. D., was appointed the Superintendent of this work within our bounds."

AGENCY IN THE SOUTH.

The Rev. W. Baird having accepted an agency for the Board of Publication in the South, addresses the following letter to the churches in his field. We publish it not only for the information of those who may not otherwise see it, but also for the excellent suggestions it contains as to the importance of the work in which we are engaged.

To the Ministers and Ruling Elders of the Presbyterian Church in the Synods south of Virginia:

Dear Brethren—As the Annual Meeting of the several Presbyteries is near at hand, the undersigned begs leave to address you in relation to an important department of Church enterprise.

The Presbyterian Board of Publication, established by our General Assembly, have been pleased to commission me as Superintendent of their operations within the several Synods south of Virginia. The field, you perceive, is very large, and an immense work is to be done in it. The difficulty or facility of performing that work, will depend much upon the interest the Presbyteries feel in it, and the action they take respecting it. I hope to visit, during the year, the several parts of this field; but as it will be impossible for me to attend many of the meetings of the Presbyteries, and yet nothing should be done without their approbation, I would earnestly request that this business be taken up at the approaching meetings, and such action taken as may, in the judgment of each, tend most to the accomplishment of the ends desired—the supply of funds, the selection of suitable colporteurs, and the full supply of all the congregations and Sabbath-schools of our Church with the valuable literature now prepared by the Board. Duty to ourselves as office-bearers of the Church, duty to the flocks of which Christ has made us overseers, duty also to the world at large, demands at our hands vastly increased zeal and energy in this work of diffusing gospel truth—"feeding with knowledge" those who lack, adding to the strong greater strength, supporting the weak, and especially nourishing with suitable food "the lambs of the flock"—surrounded as they now are by the tempting baits of the enemy of souls.

It has occurred to me that the appointment of a committee, ad interim, on the part of each Presbytery to whom this business might be entrusted, would, in many cases, greatly facilitate operations. But of this you can better judge.

Praying that the God of all grace may greatly bless you, and crown this work undertaken for the glory of His name, with abundant success, I remain, most truly and fraternally, yours,

Washington Baird.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Cecil's Remains, pp. 353. 35 and 40 cents.

This is the reprint of a well-known book. It is full of excellent thoughts, evincing its author's possession of manly and evangelical views of Christianity, equally removed from the stiffness of formalism in faith or worship, and the whining pretensions of cant. It is a truly suggestive book for thinkers, and an excellent summary of godly truths, pleasantly and instructively spoken, for those who have not leisure for more extended reading. We give a few specimens. Here is the celebrated illustration of Faith, which, however, may be new to some of our readers.

Children are very early capable of impression. I imprinted on my daughter the idea of faith at a very early age. She was playing one day with a few beads, which seemed to delight her wonderfully. Her whole soul was absorbed in her beads. I said, "My dear, you have some pretty beads there." "Yes, papa!" "And you seem to be vastly pleased with them." "Yes, papa!" "Well now, throw them behind the fire." The tears started into her eyes. She looked earnestly at me, as though she ought to have a reason for such a cruel sacrifice. "Well, my dear, do as you please; but you know I never told you to do anything which I did not think would be good for you." She looked at me a few moments longer, and then, summoning up all her fortitude, her breast heaving with the effort, she dashed them into the fire. "Well," said I, "there let them lie; you shall hear more about them another time; but say no more about them now." Some days after, I bought her a box full of larger beads, and toys of the same kind. When I returned home, I opened the treasure, and set it before her: she burst into tears with ecstacy. "Those, my child," said I, "are yours; because you believed me, when I told you it would be better for you to throw those two or three paltry beads behind the fire. Now that has brought you this treasure. But now, my dear, remember, as long as you live, what faith is. I did all this this to teach you the meaning of faith. You threw your beads away when I bid you, because you had faith in me, that I never advised you but for your good. Put the same confidence in God. Believe everything that he says in his word. Whether you understand it or not, have faith in him that he means your good."

Here are some golden sentences on Family Worship.

Family religion is of unspeakable importance. Its effect will greatly depend on the sincerity of the head of the family, and on his mode of conducting the worship of his household. If his children and servants do not see his prayers exemplified in his temper and manners, they will be disgusted with religion. Tediousness will weary them. Fine language will shoot above them. Formality of connection or composition in prayer they will not comprehend. Gloominess or austerity of devotion will make them dread religion as a hard service. Let them be met with smiles. Let them be met as for the most delightful service in which they can be engaged. Let them find it short, savoury, simple, plain, tender, heavenly. Worship, thus conducted, may be used as an engine of vast power in a family. It diffuses a sympathy through the members. It calls off the mind from the deadening effect of worldly affairs. It arrests every member with a morning and evening sermon, in the midst of all the hurries and cares of life. It says, "There is a God!"—"There is a spiritual world!"—"There is a life to come!" It fixes the idea of responsibility in the mind. It furnishes a tender and judicious father or master with an opportunity of gently glancing at faults, where a direct admonition might be inexpedient. It enables him to relieve the weight with which subordination or service often sits on the minds of inferiors.

The following is appropriate to the times—on authors.

"Have you read my Key to the Romans?" said Dr. Taylor of Norwich, to Mr. Newton. "I have turned it over." "You have turned it over! And is this the treatment a book must meet with, which has cost me many years of hard study? Must I be told, at last, that you have 'turned it over,' and then thrown it aside? You ought to have read it carefully, and weighed deliberately what comes forward on so serious a subject."—"Hold! you have cut me out full employment, if my life were to be as long as Methuselah's. I have somewhat else to do in the short day allotted me, than to read whatever any one may think it his duty to write. When I read, I wish to read to good purpose; and there are some books which contradict on the very face of them what appear to me to be first principles. You surely will not say I am bound to read such books. If a man tells me has a very elaborate argument to prove that two and two make five, I have something else to do than to attend to this argument. If I find the first mouthful of meat which I take from a fine-looking joint on my table is tainted, I need not eat through it, to be convinced that I ought to send it away."

NINEVEH. Square 16mo, pp. 54. 15 cents.

This is just the right kind of book for children. It is a Bible story, with illustrations from Bible history and geography, and oriental travel and discovery. There is no effort to dilute the brief statements of Bible fact with the mixture of human imagination. Such books are calculated to interest children in Bible history, as given by the inspired penman. They are worth cart loads of namby-pamby baby books. They awaken thought and excite effort. Let all the children get "Nineveh" and read it.

THE FAITHFUL MOTHER'S REWARD. Pp. 369. 40 and 45 cents.

This is a reprint of the work already noticed and so favourably received by the public, that an edition of two thousand copies has been exhausted in a few months.

This edition contains some excellent letters addressed by the authoress to an elder son, and is at once embellished and improved by a fac-simile of the hand-writing of the sainted little boy.

There is a sweet mingling of the tenderness and faith of a true piety through all the pages of this work that produces a most pleasing effect on the mind of the reader, while its instructions are invaluable alike to mothers and children.

Tract No. 167—CHURCH ATTACHMENT AND SECTARIANISM. Pp. 8.

This Tract, by the venerated Dr. Miller, presents in a very clear and discriminating manner the difference between Sectarianism and a pious, strong attachment to our own Church. It is a very seasonable production, and, we trust, will be much read. Here is a most sensible paragraph on the subject of false liberality.

"The fact is, that what many call their liberality—their charity for professing Christians of other denominations, is nothing more nor less than indifference to truth, or that blind persuasion, which many semi-infidels cherish, that all forms of religion are very much alike, and equally safe. As long as any believe this, they can surely have no rational motive for striving to defend and maintain the truth. Truth, according to this mode of thinking, is no better than error. But can it be an act of fidelity to our Master in heaven thus to abandon what he has commanded us to hold fast; or to carry our complaisance to those around us so far as to suffer the enemies of truth and righteousness to have everything, without resistance, their own way? Is this reasonable, or in accordance either with the word of God, or the welfare of society? Surely not."

Rev. John Goldsmith, D. D., departed this life on the 6th of April, in the 60th year of his age, and the 33d of his ministry in the Church of Newtown, Long Island.

Rev. Francis S. Sampson, D. D., Professor of Biblical Literature in Union Seminary, Virginia, died on the 9th of April in the —— year of his age. One of the ripest scholars, the ablest preachers, the most finished gentlemen, and the humblest and most devoted Christians, has thus been called from a most arduous, responsible, and useful post in the mid-day of life, bereaving in his death a young family, an admiring circle of friends, a most important Seminary, and one of our largest Synods. "I was dumb with silence—I opened not my mouth, because thou didst it." The sympathy of the Church at large with the bereaved Seminary and Synod will excuse this departure from the usual conciseness of our "Record" of deaths.

The Rev. Joshua Moore, pastor of the Presbyterian Church of East Kishacoquillas, Mifflin county, Pennsylvania, departed this life on Saturday the 15th inst., at six o'clock, A. M.

Rev. James T. Lapsley has been appointed city missionary by the Board of Church Extension, Louisville, Ky.

RELIGIOUS STATISTICS OF THE UNITED STATES.

The Census gives some interesting statistics of the external religious condition of our country. A writer in the Daily Times, who dates at Cincinnati, has grouped these in an interesting article, which we have preserved. We give a summary of a part, and an extract of the remainder.

Using five great divisional principles, Trinitarian and Unitarian, Papal and Protestant, Baptist and Pædobaptist, Episcopal and Presbyterian, Evangelical and Anti-Evangelical, the writer gives the following results:

1. Trinitarian and Unitarian.—Aggregate of Unitarian churches, including one-third of Universalist, and all the Christians, we have 1271 churches, or 3 per cent. of the churches. The population represented is about 500,000.

2. Papal and Anti-Papal.—The census gives 1221 Papal churches. But these, unlike the Unitarian, are crowded, and services are held several times each day, for different audiences. The Catholic Almanac gives their population at 2,100,000, which raises the per cent. to 10 or 12 on the whole population of the United States.

3. Baptist and Pædobaptist.—There are 9375 Baptist churches, or 25 per cent. of the whole number.

4. Episcopal and Presbyterian.—Strictly non-Episcopal would be a better word than Presbyterian, though reckoning as to views of ordination, with very unimportant exceptions, all other Protestant churches practice a Presbyterian ordination. The Episcopal proper, are Roman Catholic and Episcopalian churches, giving together nearly 7 per cent. of the number of churches, and perhaps 15 per cent of population. If the Methodists are included, these proportions would be much increased, as they alone represent over 25 per cent. of the churches, and fully that proportion of population.

Evangelical and Anti-Evangelical.—The writer says: "This is the most important distinction, for it involves two great principles: first, the onward movement of the Church; and secondly, that movement in accordance with the standard of Protestant Orthodoxy. Evangelism is the dissemination of the Gospel; but, in the modern language of the Church, it is the dissemination of a free Gospel—without responsibility to a special Church hierarchy, and adhering only to the fundamental articles of Protestant faith. Hence, it rejects the Papal Church on one hand, and the Unitarian on the other; and its work is mainly carried on by voluntary societies, and voluntary effort. The Evangelical Churches, so called, are all the Protestant Orthodox Churches—although some of them (jealous of voluntary societies) choose to disseminate Bibles and missionaries by their own organization.

The Evangelical Churches stand thus:

Presbyterian churches,	4,824
Congregational churches,	1,706
Dutch Reformed churches,	330
German Reformed churches,	338
Three-fourths Lutheran churches,	913
Three-fourths Baptist churches,	7,040
Episcopal churches,	1,459
Friends' churches,	726
Methodist churches,	13,280
Moravian churches,	328
Evangelical churches,	30,944
Aggregate churches,	38,061

Evangelical churches, . . 80 per cent.

I have excluded a small portion of the Baptist and Lutheran Churches—the former, as opposed to all missions, and the latter, as Rationalists. I have included all the Episcopalians, and the Society of Friends, because, though acting in their own mode, they are nevertheless Protestant Evangelists. It will be thus seen, that four-fifths of the churches of the United States belong to the Protestant faith, which is the general type of the American Church. In this respect, they belong to the Religious Democracy;—which has been evidently modified by the Political. Its great characteristics are, the love of religious liberty, and the zeal of propagandism.

In regard to the number of people attending church, we have these data. One-third of the whole number are either small children, sick, or infirm. These must be excluded from the church-goers. We then have this result:

Two-thirds population, about	16,000,000
Number of churches,	38,061
Number of people to each church,	421

It thus appears that there is a church provision for each four hundred and twenty persons able to attend.

Cost of Preaching.—Some people talk a great deal about ministers, and the cost of keeping them, paying their house-rent, table expenses, and other items of salary. Did such persons ever think that it costs thirty-five millions of dollars to pay the salaries of American lawyers; that twelve millions of dollars are paid out annually to keep our criminals, and ten millions of dollars to keep the dogs in the midst of us alive; while only six millions of dollars are spent annually to sustain six thousand ministers in the United States. These are facts, and statistics will show them to be facts. No one thing exerts such a mighty influence in keeping this mighty republic from falling to pieces, as the Bible and its ministers.—Western Christian Advocate.

A SERVANT OF THE CHURCH.

Phebe is a name that should not be forgotten in the Church, and the Holy Spirit in two of those brief, lucid sentences, which so gloriously distinguish the word of God, has portrayed the features of her character, worthy of our admiration and imitation. She was a "servant of the Church," and "a succourer of many."

A servant of the Church. She did not enter the Church merely to find in it pleasant associates, or personal comfort. She did not seek the fellowship of the saints merely to promote her own spirituality, or to prepare for heaven. Not that the Church might serve her, but that she might serve the Church, was she a member of it. This is a distinction that needs to be understood by multitudes of professors of religion in the present day. They seem to think that the Church is merely a school in which they are to learn, or a hospital in which they are to be nursed; that it is an institution, the design of which is to administer comfort in trials, and to fit its members for heaven, while they passively attend upon its ordinances. Let us learn from Phebe's example that we are brought into the Church, not as guests, but as servants; not merely to enjoy, but to serve; not simply to receive good, but to do good.

A servant of the Church. Humility and labour are implied in the appellation. We are servants hired, nay, bought. "Ye are bought with a price." Humbly, then, should we fulfil the duties of our position. Nothing is more unbecoming in a servant than pride. Nothing more essentially unfits him for the proper duties of his calling. But labour, too, is expected from a servant. Member of the Church of Christ! are you living to serve the interests of that Church? Is its prosperity and efficiency the object of your earnest solicitude, of your ardent prayers, of your persevering endeavours? Are you found among its servants when plans are to be devised, and labour performed for its enlargement and spirituality? Is your voice heard in its counsels and petitions? Is your purse always open to its pecuniary claims? Are you striving to fit the opening minds of the young to receive and obey the truth by your service in the Sabbath-school? Is the knowledge of the beauty and the blessedness of the Church increased by your circulation of tracts and publications, and by your own personal instructions and appeals to your kindred and friends? What department of labour is entrusted to you as a servant of the Church? There is service for every one. To what position are you appointed? Have you not yet found it? Oh! on your knees, before the Master, implore him, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" and obey the indications of his will furnished by his word, his providence, and his Spirit, that there may be truly inscribed upon your tombstone this epitaph: "A SERVANT OF THE CHURCH!"

From the Presbyterian Witness.

"IT IS I!"

MATT. xiv. 27.

Tossed with rough winds, and faint with fear,
Above the tempest—soft and clear,
What still, small accents greet mine ear?
'Tis I; be not afraid.

'Tis I who washed thy spirit white;
'Tis I who gave thy blind eyes sight;
'Tis I, thy Lord, thy life, thy light:
'Tis I; be not afraid.

These raging winds, this surging sea,
Bear not a breath of wrath to thee;
That storm has all been spent on me:
'Tis I; be not afraid.

This bitter cup, I drank it first,
To thee it is no draught accursed;
The hand that gives it thee is pierced;
'Tis I; be not afraid.

Mine eyes are watching by thy bed,
Mine arms are underneath thy head,
My blessing is around thee shed;
'Tis I; be not afraid.

When on the other side, thy feet
Shall rest, 'mid thousand welcomes sweet,
One well-known voice thy heart shall greet;
'Tis I; be not afraid.

From out the dazzling majesty,
Gently He 'll lay his hand on thee,
Whispering, "Beloved, lov'st thou me?
'Twas not in vain I died for thee;"
'Tis I; be not afraid.

DANCING.

The following solemn and well-timed admonition on this subject, addressed by an affectionate pastor to a daughter of parents belonging to his flock, who was also in communion with a Christian church, presents a very serious and pointed rebuke, which we commend to all in like circumstances, and which may be well worthy of perusal by those who do not properly appreciate the danger of popular amusements of this description. We trust it may be more effectual to others than it proved to the young lady to whom it was originally addressed.

H——, February 23, 1854.

My Dear Friend—I have been this morning informed that you have been solicited to attend the gathering at Mr. H——'s this evening, and that you have determined to comply with the solicitation. Is it so? If that is your determination, perhaps nothing that I can say at this late hour can alter it. I should rejoice to find that I have been misinformed; yet, if it is true, and you are expecting to be there, and by your presence as a spectator, or by assisting in any way, thus to give countenance to such unchristian practices, will you allow me to make one small request? I say small request, because you are a professing Christian, and according to my views of the spirit of Christianity, it is a request with which all true Christians would gladly comply. I take it for granted, you are accustomed to daily secret prayer; and my request is, that before going, you will retire, and earnestly offer up that petition of the Lord's prayer, "Lead us not into temptation," and try and maintain the spirit of that petition when you go, and while you are there; and when you return, just retire again, and see what there has been in the scenes through which you have passed that calls for gratitude and thanksgiving to God, and be sure and render it. And as the true Christian finds that there are things in his best services for which he needs forgiveness, I trust you will not fail to search for these also, and crave that forgiveness which we all so much need for our daily sins.

And now, my dear friend, I beg of you that you will not deny me this request. I do feel that, before God, it comes from a heart that loves your soul. If the course you have determined on is right and consistent, you will not pretend that there is anything improper in your earnestly asking the blessing of God upon it. But if you think there is something wrong and incongruous in the idea of praying, "Lead us not into temptation," and at the same time rushing deliberately into temptation, then would it not be better for you to stop, before you go any farther in the matter? Which course would you be the least likely to regret in the dying hour? O my dear friend, decide now as you will then approve, and as will be approved at a coming judgment! Decide as shall do honour to your parents' piety and wishes, as shall honour your own profession, and above all, as shall honour the Saviour whose name you bear. Will a right view of these important ends lead you to be there to-night? May God bless and guide you to his glory and his kingdom, is the prayer of your unworthy friend. * * *

THE CRADLE AND THE DEATH-BED.

It is better to throw a guard about the baby's cradle than to sing a psalm at a bad man's death-bed; better to have a care while the bud is bursting to the sun, than when the heat has scorched the heart of the unguarded blossom.—Sterne.

BEWARE OF TWO THINGS.

Philip Henry said, "There are two things we should beware of—that we never be ashamed of the Gospel, and that we may never be a shame to it." These two things remembered by professing Christians would exert a most happy influence on their lives.

THE BLESSING HEREDITARY.

The Reformation in Luther's time made considerable progress in Italy, and among the converts were some of the first families of Lucca. Among these was Michael Burlamacchi, who, with others, took refuge in France from the persecution that followed. Among his descendants are named Diodati, author of the Protestant Italian Bible now in use, and Professor Gaussen and Merle D'Aubigné of Geneva, the Monods of France, and many other active evangelical ministers.

MEETING OF THE BOARD.

The stated monthly meeting of the Board was held in the Mission Rooms, on Monday, the 8th of May, 1854. In the absence of the President and Vice-President, the Rev. Joseph H. Jones, D. D., was called to the chair; the Rev. Henry Steele Clarke was appointed Secretary pro tem. The meeting was well attended, and the usual business of the Board transacted with interest and unanimity. The missionary appointments during the past month were very numerous, and the amount of appropriations quite large. The affairs of the Board are in a very prosperous condition, and we have reason to believe that its extended and extending operations are accomplishing immense good. The Church has great cause for thankfulness for what has been done, by the help of God, and should more constantly and fervently pray that the labours of her missionaries may be accompanied by the influence of the Holy Spirit, and rendered still more successful.

In our next number, we hope to be able to give an Abstract of the Annual Report of the Board to the General Assembly.

SOUTH-WESTERN AGENCY.

Annual Report to the Board of Domestic Missions.

We commend the following Report to our respected brethren of the Presbyteries which are specially referred to. The remarks of the writer are made in a kind spirit, and we trust they will be as kindly received. It is certainly desirable that all our Presbyteries, and particularly those which are able to contribute largely to the benevolent schemes of our Church, should freely and liberally co-operate with our Ecclesiastical Boards.

Louisville, April 1st, 1854.

Rev. and Dear Sir—The service I have been called, by the Western Executive Committee, to render the Board of Missions in the South-Western Synods, has embraced sixteen months of the last two ecclesiastical years. At an expense to the Board for that time, I have tried to accomplish results equivalent to the labour of two years.

The churches are scattered over a vast territory, and are difficult to reach, yet, when applied to, generally respond with liberality. In large part, the work must be done by correspondence; and to present the cause in person to a moiety of the churches, demands a ceaseless activity. Our most laborious pastors preach not as often, nor perform as much pastoral visitation, as is required in the efficient prosecution of this work.

Notwithstanding a part of our churches gave with unprecedented liberality to the Danville Theological Seminary, and in the Southern field, the business of the country was totally deranged by the great epidemic, yet there has been a decided increase in the contributions of most of those churches which were accessible; and the aggregate of funds would have been greater than last year, had access been permitted to all the churches that contributed during the previous year. No people are more richly endowed with blessings than our people; and our prosperity, and the necessities of our own and all lands, is the measure both of the ability and duty of the Church. And yet how far in advance of the hosts of Israel is the pillar of cloud that invites us forward.

The Church is beginning to appreciate the importance of our great work. We are just at that point in our national history, and in most important providential dispensations over the world, when the Church must rapidly advance, to accomplish the object of her vocation. The man who has finished his threescore years and ten, has seen his country triple her population and wealth, in the ratio of a geometrical progression. Should the future reveal an approximation to the same progress, the idea is sufficient to appal into activity the energies of the Church; not only to meet the magnitude of the work at home, but to sanctify such masses and such influence for a co-ordinate work abroad.

It is not possible that any part of the Church should willingly oppose the advance of the Church in this great work. Yet the position assumed by a few judicatories greatly retards its progress. In the field assigned me by the Western Committee, the Presbyteries of South Alabama, Tuscaloosa, and Louisiana, have, for a number of years, restricted their operations, in the main, to their own bounds. When they succeed in finding missionaries for their own destitutions, they make collections, which are apt to be graduated by their own necessities. After sustaining their own men, they sometimes send us whatever surplus remains in their treasury. It is clear, in this state of the case, that there are no adequate motives before these churches to draw out their resources. It is true, their destitutions are great; and could they procure the missionaries, they would need all the funds they could raise, and, no doubt, could raise all they would need. But they cannot obtain the missionaries. These brethren are seeking other wide-spread desolations; and these Presbyteries, therefore, withhold the co-operation of their churches, in order to supply destitutions at home, and then cannot supply them. The brethren have pursued this course for years; and have neither supplied their own waste places, nor assisted us in supplying those that cannot supply themselves. They might open their doors, and enable us to advance with confidence, by the liberality of their co-operations. This service could be rendered, and this impulse be given to the work, without the loss of a missionary in their bounds; yea, doubtless, with a return of blessings on themselves, and gladness to the hearts of the destitute.

In these Presbyteries are found some of the oldest and strongest churches in the South-West, and their exhibit on the Minutes of the Assembly would doubtless be as liberal as any other portion, if they were permitted to feel the great pulsations of the heart of the Church, as she is advancing to the conquest of the whole land, in order to the conquest of the world.

That there may be local objects demanding all the efforts of our city churches and others, for one, and even two years, is readily admitted. But that this state of things should continue for a series of years, and in that time, the agents of voluntary associations, doing, in some respects, the same work with ourselves, should be welcomed, and those of our own Board be repelled, is what might not be expected. It is thus that the enlarged plans to build up our Zion are frustrated, and by those who love her walls, and take pleasure in the dust thereof. I am, dear brother, yours, in the work of the Gospel,

B. M. Hobson.

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY.

The following extract from the report of one of our missionaries, is in the right spirit. An habitual sense of their official responsibility and personal accountability to the final Judge, cannot fail to make ministers serious and earnest in their ministrations and lives. With the retributions of eternity steadily in view, how faithfully and earnestly should we all labour to secure the salvation of our own souls and that of others!

With what an amazing speed does time roll away, never to return! Three months more of my ministry here is at an end, and what have I done for God, and for precious souls? I often think of the words of our blessed Lord, "Give account of thy stewardship." This is a solemn sentence, indeed, and must soon be realized by every minister of the gospel. "Blessed will be the state of that steward, who, when his Lord cometh, shall find him so doing."

CHURCH DEDICATION.

Madison, Wis., January 3, 1854.

Rev. G. W. Musgrave, D. D.

Dear Sir—I bid you a hearty welcome to the responsible, but exceedingly useful post to which you have recently been called. May the Lord give you strength for the arduous labours of your office!

Our new church edifice was dedicated last Sabbath, January 1, 1854. The house will hold four hundred when seated full, and five hundred could be crowded into it. It was filled so full in the morning, that many had to stand all the time. We had services at half-past ten o'clock, A. M., at two and at seven o'clock, P. M. The Lord's supper was administered in the afternoon, and we received eight new members by letter, making our whole number now twenty-nine. The Rev. J. M. Buchanan preached in the morning and evening, and Rev. M. A. Fox in the afternoon. It was an exceedingly refreshing day to my little church and myself. The Spirit of the Lord seemed to be with his own ordinances, melting, comforting, and quickening the hearts of his people, and producing in others deep and serious attention. It was altogether one of the sweetest and happiest days of my life; and for our little church it was a day of great gratitude and rejoicing. Mr. Buchanan gave us two admirable sermons, which were listened to with the deepest attention. He preached the dedication sermon from the words, "The Church, which is the pillar and ground of the truth." Mr. Fox gave us one of the strongest and most glowing sermons on "The sufferings of Christ, and the glory which should follow," to which I ever listened. It was an extremely cold day, and the congregation was not so large in the evening; but the house was three-quarters full.

The edifice is entirely completed, and no debt remaining but what the appropriation from the Church Extension Committee will cancel. In order to bring our financial affairs to this condition, I was obliged to make a trip to St. Louis, where I obtained aid from Dr. Rice's church, the Westminster, and the Central churches. One church there has since kindly made us a present of a communion set. It has not yet arrived, but we expect it every day, by express.

The Lord has greatly prospered us. Our church edifice is by far the finest, most commodious, and most attractive in the town. The renting of pews was begun to-day. I have not seen or heard anything of the result. You will learn of it in my next report.

What our congregation will be, we shall not be able to tell for a Sabbath or two; but what we need now, and what we have needed all along, is the outpouring of the Spirit in connection with the ministrations of the sanctuary. For that I trust God will enable us to pray, as a people, until he bless us and the place. There are several who intend to unite with us next communion, who were prevented from uniting at this time by sundry circumstances. I am very glad we have got our house completed before the assembling of the Legislature which convenes within a fortnight. Do you know of any young men of vigorous and well-balanced minds who could be induced to come and labour in this State, in the ministry? We need several, and could place them at once in very important fields. Yours in the cause of the gospel,

H. B. G.

NOBLE SELF-DENIAL.

From the following report, it appears that one of our missionaries lived during the past year upon $125.00, the amount appropriated by the Board towards his support, in order to assist his people in the erection of a house of worship. He does not regret the sacrifice he made, and doubtless will receive his appropriate reward. But is it right that our poor missionaries should be obliged to make such sacrifices when there is such abundant wealth in the Church at large? Ought they not to be more liberally assisted by their richer brethren?

March 7th, 1854.

Rev. G. W. Musgrave, D. D.

I am a little behind the time with this, my third quarterly report. My only apology is, pressure of duties.

No changes of importance have occurred since my last report. The field at —— seeming to require it, my labours there have been doubled, giving them a sermon every Sabbath. A few in that region are hoping that they have found the Saviour, also a few in this place. The prospect brightens.

Our annual meeting, which occurred the first of this month, was very encouraging. I could write you a long letter on the great advantage already gained by having a house of worship. The Board did us a great favour when they gave the $150 to encourage. But for this house, I very much doubt if we would now have had an existence. For the sake of aiding them, I lived for one year on the $125 given by the Board, and now I greatly rejoice in the sacrifice. Already I have been more than rewarded. To any and all inquiries that may rise in your mind concerning us, the general answer may be given, "The morning cometh." Yours, fraternally,

A. C.

SELF-SUSTAINING.

Every now and then we are informed of a church having become self-sustaining, and we rejoice in the intelligence, chiefly because it is an evidence of healthful progress. The following report is unusually interesting, and shows what good may be accomplished by the Board in sustaining weak and feeble churches, until they are able to sustain themselves; and every church aided by the Board ought to endeavour to become, as soon as practicable, self-sustaining and contributing churches.

Rev. G. W. Musgrave, D. D.

Rev. and Dear Sir—Another six months' labour brings us to the expiration of my commission, and I am happy to inform you that we are now able to sustain ourselves. The congregation have made arrangements to raise the full amount themselves. In the aid given the infant congregations of S—— and P——, we have an example on a small scale of the proverb, "There is that giveth, and yet increaseth."

In the three years past, being the first pastoral labour they have enjoyed, they have contributed, to the Board of Domestic Missions, $72; Board of Foreign Missions, $100; Board of Publication, $40; Board of Education, $15; Miscellaneous, $50; and payed off the debt incurred by building neat and comfortable houses of worship. We have not experienced a special revival, but have been encouraged by receiving, from time to time, small numbers on profession of their faith. The number of members in L—— church has been nearly doubled by the reception of twenty-six on examination, and sixteen by certificate—forty-two in all. Our present number is about eighty-six. We make these statements, not in self-complacency, that we have done all our duty—far from it; but it is intended, and we think it does show, that it is not only right, but also expedient, to aid (in some cases) young churches which are almost able to stand alone. It is also a great advantage in our attempts to cultivate the spirit of benevolence, as it is a practical example of the great truth, "that the Church of God is not only nominally, but really, one great family, who care for and sympathize with each other." Your obedient servant in the gospel of the Lord, T. S. L.

ENCOURAGING REPORTS.

Dear Brother—During the last quarter, there has been a manifest increase of interest among my congregation at this place. There are now several inquirers, and the church is more united and earnest than heretofore. Two weeks ago, three new members were received at our winter communion meeting. It was the most solemn and interesting season of the kind which the church has ever enjoyed. It will long be remembered, by the irreligious, as well as by God's people. I am much encouraged by the condition and prospects of the church here. There is no reason for despondency, but much reason to "thank God and take courage."

My fourth year's labours in this county close to-day. When I came here in January 1850, there was no Presbyterian church in the county, there never had been one, and no Presbyterian minister had ever lived in the county. There were but two Presbyterians at A——. Literally, I had to begin at the beginning, and to build on no man's foundation. Now, we have a neat, comfortable house of worship, and we have received thirty-six members. The church is in a growing state. Its doctrines and mode of worship are becoming popular, and the intelligent class are beginning to manifest greater interest in its prosperity. By the blessing of God, it will eventually become a numerous society.

I am endeavouring to build up a church at a point eleven miles distant from A——, in the south-eastern part of the county. The work goes on slowly, and it will require time, patience, and prayer, to ensure success.

For a few months past, I have been preaching once a month at E—— church, about thirty miles distant, in M—— county. The congregation were destitute, owing to the removal of their minister, and they requested me to supply the pulpit till a pastor could be obtained. I consented to make a temporary arrangement, so as to comply with their wishes, and, at the same time, not interfere with my labours in this county. It is probable that they will soon procure a supply, and need my services no longer. The church was blessed with an extensive revival in August. Between thirty and forty were admitted to membership on profession of their faith, and all, so far as I can learn, have been consistent in their walk. Yours, in the Gospel ministry,

G. M. N.

Ohio, January 5th, 1854.

Rev. and Dear Sir—This report is for six months past, during which we have been enabled to march forward with far more enlarged congregations than usual. The public mind, during the last six months, has been more or less awakened on the subject of religion, in this whole region. I am happy to report, that there is now in our village and neighbourhood, a better state of religious feeling than there has been since I have been labouring here. Our last communion was a delightful season indeed. All the evangelical denominations of the place and neighbourhood, sat down together around the table of their common Lord and Master. Each one, we humbly hope, arose from that table with the determination to live more to the honour and glory of the Saviour than he had ever before done.

When I look back upon my labour during the past year, I have reason to be truly thankful for the health I have enjoyed. I was able to meet my appointments without interruption through the whole year, and a manifestation of God's presence with us in the ordinances of his house. Quite a number have been added to our church during the year, some of which were the worst characters in the neighbourhood. They were brought into the house of God entirely through a mild treatment, to hear his word dispensed. One man particularly, of no ordinary influence in wealth and talent, and such an advocate of the Universalist religion that he influenced the whole village more or less, as he owned most of the village. This man is now a member of our church, and such an humble Christian he is, that often you will see tears rolling over his cheeks, in view of his past life, and of the grace of God preserving his immortal soul from everlasting ruin. He is also a man of prayer, and has erected a family altar in his own house. We live in hopes of a better time. Presbyterianism is gaining ground here fast, and error is diminishing before the pure doctrines of the gospel of Christ. Yours, affectionately, in the bonds of Christ, S. H.

January 12th, 1854.

Rev. and Dear Brother—To-day closes the third quarter of my missionary year, and it becomes my duty to report to you my labours for the same period. Though it is not my privilege to report any special work of grace, yet I feel confident that the good work is advancing throughout the entire field in which I labour. My congregations are large in all the places where I preach, and the people are everywhere becoming more favourably impressed with the doctrines and order of our Church than formerly. I have held a sacramental meeting in each of the churches during the quarter now closed, when two persons were added to each of the churches upon examination. I have three missionary stations around the church, where I statedly preach, all of which are promising points. I have only one such point in the bounds of S—— church, which is W——, a distance of nine miles from my residence. I hope by the close of my year to be able to report a state of things still more encouraging. Yours truly,

J. P. M.

February 8th, 1854.

Rev. and Dear Sir—At the expiration of another three months I again write you to say that I have been preaching regularly at my station since the time of my original appointment.

There is nothing remarkable in my field of labour. Everything seems to be harmonious and peaceful. The gospel, as preached from Sabbath to Sabbath, is respectfully and attentively listened to by all who attend, and, I have reason to believe, received in its saving efficacy and power by a few. The members of our little church are gradually increasing. At our last communion there was an addition of seven. The church was organized with sixteen. We have at present on our books about forty; and there is every encouragement to hope for a continued manifestation of the divine favour amongst us. Presbyterianism, and with it, we trust, Christianity, is taking root and growing far beyond the anticipations of all. Both the papers of our Church are receiving a wide circulation among us. We carry on a Sabbath-school, a prayer-meeting, and a Bible-class, all of which are attended very well. We are still worshipping in the hall, but hope by the spring to have the basement of our new church edifice prepared for worship. Yours in the gospel, J. S.

Dear Sir—In compliance with the request of the Board of Missions, I will endeavour to give you a brief history of the state of affairs in the churches in which I have been labouring for the last six months. The churches of S—— and M——, where I am labouring, are weak churches. Both are important points to be occupied. M—— is the county seat of W—— county, and it is the only place in the county where there is any Presbyterian preaching. S——, though not a county seat, yet on account of its location on the O—— river, it is the most important town in the county, and it is the only place in the county where they have Presbyterian preaching. Below S——, there is no Presbyterian preaching for more than fifty miles, and back from the river for a great distance, I know not how far; for as yet I have been unable to ascertain where the nearest point is that they have preaching. There is a large scope of country back from the river, where they have very little preaching, and what they have is Campbellite, or something no better.

At S—— there has been but one communion since I came, and that was in five or six weeks after I came amongst them. At that time there was no one admitted to the sealing ordinances of the church; and as yet, I see no fruits of my labours, only that there is still an increase in the attendance upon the means of grace, and the attention during the services is very good, much better than when I first came amongst them. At M—— the case is somewhat different; there the Lord has manifested his willingness to return and pour out his Spirit. The sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered there by the Rev. J. R. D., on Sabbath, April 9th, and at that time there were twelve persons united with the church; eleven on examination, and one on certificate. Of these, five were males, and heads of families. The sacramental occasion was a very solemn, and, I hope, a profitable one to many. The people of God there are very much encouraged. The prospects for the church had been very dark, but God has manifested his willingness to return, and we hope, and, I think, earnestly pray that he will continue to pour out his Spirit in more copious effusions than ever before. I preach one half of my time in each place; preach twice every Sabbath, and during the week I have several times gone out into the country and preached. Every time that I have done so, I have been encouraged by the numbers that turned out to hear me. I have prayer-meeting in L—— regularly once every week. In M—— there is also a prayer-meeting, but I have not been able to meet with them very often. Sabbath-schools are now organized in both places. I have made it my business to visit and converse with my hearers about their souls' eternal interests, as far as in my power, and think I have reason to say that the Lord has smiled upon these efforts.

Yours, &c. J. S. M.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

INCREASE OF CANDIDATES.

The Board are gratified in being able to report to the Assembly the fact of an increase of new candidates during the year. The total number received last year was 81; this year the number is 104. This is the largest number received in any one year since the official connection of Dr. John Breckinridge with the Board. If the Church wants the number of her candidates to increase more and more, she must enter more into the spirit of the divine injunction, PRAY YE.

"THE FIELD IS THE WORLD."

Zion, rejoice, thy prayer is heard,
Behold the open door,
Hark to the voice from every land,
And every island shore:—

"Tell us of God who made the world,
And Christ who died for all;
Give us the word of truth and life—
It is for LIFE we call."

Lo! China waits; her millions crave
The bread which thou canst give;
Send them the saving WORD OF LIFE,
That they may read and live.

Armenia stretches forth her hands,
Imploring for the light;
Go, preach the Word, "Christ crucified,"
And give the blind their sight.

Go, teach again the wondrous truth
Where once the Saviour taught—
Show mercy where Almighty power
Such works of mercy wrought.

The Islands of the distant seas
Are waiting for the Law—
Let the first breeze that travels there
Proclaim what Calvary saw.

Canst thou not give thy choicest sons,
Thy daughters and thy gold,
To them, for whom Christ gave his blood
To bring them to his fold?

HINTS TO THEOLOGICAL STUDENTS.

Written while a student, by the late Rev. James McEwen, formerly missionary at Allahabad.

The Lord hath sworn that the knowledge of his name shall cover the earth, as the waters cover the channel of the sea. That this promise shall be fulfilled to its full extent, we cannot for a moment doubt. Although, when we reflect on the present state of things—when we consider the difficulties that stand in the way—the high, towering mountains of idolatry, superstition, and infidelity, on the one hand, and the low valleys of ignorance and brutish sensuality in which many nations are involved, on the other, unbelief is ready to say, How can it be? But faith can take hold of the promise, and believe that when the Lord shall appear in his glory to build up Zion, every valley shall be filled up, and every mountain and hill shall be brought low, and every opposing difficulty shall be removed, "for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."

We have no reason to believe that these things shall be accomplished by miracle, but by the diligent use of those means which God has appointed; the reading, but especially the preaching of his word. The Bible and living preachers must be sent into all lands, and these, being accompanied by the divine blessing, will prove effectual for convincing and converting sinners, and bringing the nations to the knowledge and love of the truth.

That the time is fast approaching when these predictions shall be accomplished, is evident. Many are now running to and fro, and knowledge is increasing; the fields seem white for the harvest; and many young men have already gone forth as labourers, and many more are preparing; and we trust their number will continue to increase, until they become an host. For the use of those who are thus employed, the following hints are intended.

The office of the gospel ministry is certainly the most important and responsible that can be conferred on man; and it certainly becomes those who are looking forward to it, seriously to examine themselves, whether they are possessed of a competent share of those qualifications which are necessary for a proper discharge of its duties. The necessity of real and devoted piety in ministers of the gospel, few will question. The very nature of their office demands it; its duties are entirely spiritual, and how can they perform these with pleasure to themselves, or profit to others, unless the Spirit of God has enlightened their own minds, and enabled them to discern spiritual things? How shall those who have never felt the burden of sin, or seen the excellence and suitableness of the character of Jesus, as a Saviour, be able to direct weary and heavy laden sinners to where they can find rest for their souls? How can that man lead forth the Christian army, and direct them how to war a good warfare, who himself has never put on the armour?

But although personal piety is absolutely necessary in a Christian minister, it is not sufficient. A competent share of natural endowments is necessary; and these must be brought into active operation by a liberal education. Because the apostles, the first preachers of the gospel, had no human learning, we must not infer that ministers now should not seek after it. The apostles, indeed, were men who had not been brought up at any of the schools or seats of learning; but yet they were neither foolish nor unlearned. When they received their commission from their ascending Lord, to "go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," it was accompanied with this injunction, to "tarry at Jerusalem until they should be endowed with power from on high:" as much as to say, "I now give you a commission to go forth and preach in my name, but you are not yet prepared; you will meet with much opposition from the wise and learned of the world, and unlearned and simple as you are, you are very unfit to withstand the devices of Satan and wicked men; but tarry at Jerusalem until I send my Spirit, who shall in a miraculous manner furnish you with all necessary qualifications; and thus equipped, you shall go forth in my name, and assert my cause, and spread the glory of my cross; and lo, I am with you always." In obedience to this injunction, they waited the appointed time, and when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place, and the Spirit came, and they were endued with the gift of tongues, and went forth everywhere preaching the word. The same injunction is still laid upon every one who receives a commission to go and preach the gospel, only what was communicated to the apostles by a miracle, is now to be attained in the use of means. We must tarry at some institute or seminary until we obtain the necessary knowledge of languages, and this cannot be done without much labour and attention. We must apply to study with all diligence, assigning to each part its proper place, and due proportion of our time. Our time is very precious, and we ought to lay it out in such a manner as that no part may be lost. We must be careful not to allow trifles, or even many things important in themselves, to break in upon our fixed rule. If the time allotted for one part of study is taken up in giving or receiving friendly visits, or otherwise, the time allotted for another must necessarily be infringed upon; and thus the whole system is thrown into disorder, and what otherwise would be comparatively easy, becomes an insufferable burden. The hours which are allowed for relaxation from study ought to be employed in such a way, that while the mind is relieved it may be improved and instructed. Our companions ought to be few and well chosen; our favourite books ought to be those which give us the most clear and comprehensive views of truth, and at the same time tend to give an elevation and refinement to the taste.

But, after all, we must remember that our success entirely depends upon the accompanying influence of that same Spirit which so richly furnished the minds of the apostles for their work; and as the same injunction is laid upon every one who is called to the gospel ministry, so the same promise is given to all. Let us, therefore, imitate the example of the apostles. While they waited patiently for the accomplishment of the promise, they were earnest in prayer, and in due time received an answer. So let us endeavour to live near to the throne of grace, accompanying all our labours with earnest prayer for the divine blessing. The difficulty of maintaining a devotional frame has perhaps been in some degree felt by all who have been engaged in classical studies. We have the greater need to be watchful. We ought to pray that our minds may be duly impressed with a sense of the importance and awful responsibility of the office to which we are looking forward; that we may feel more and more of the influences of his renewing and sanctifying grace upon our own hearts; that our understandings may be enlightened; that we may attain to more full and comprehensive views of the mysteries of divine truth, and of the Redeemer's fulness; that we may feel more of the constraining influences of his love; and that our souls may be richly furnished for a proper discharge of ministerial duties. Every branch of study—all our reading, especially the word of God, ought to be accompanied by prayer. Our teachers also claim an interest in our prayers. They are the instruments, in the hand of God, for communicating to us necessary instruction; and in proportion as we are earnest in prayer for a blessing upon their labours, we may expect to be benefitted by them. Our fellow-students ought not to be neglected by us: we are connected together by very close ties: we profess to be one in Christ Jesus, to have devoted ourselves to the same good work, to have one end in view, and we ought to assist each other, to bear up one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ. We must endeavour to do all with a single eye to the glory of God. We ought to consider that we are not our own, but solemnly devoted to Christ and to his service, and that to promote his cause and interest in the world, ought to be the main business of our lives. This one grand object ought to be kept steadily in view, and to it all our attainments ought to be rendered subservient.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION
IN SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

From the Southern Presbyterian.

YORKVILLE FEMALE COLLEGE.

This Institution, under the care of the Bethel Presbytery, was opened in January of the present year. Thus far, it has had an unprecedented measure of success—there being at the end of the first two months between eighty and ninety pupils! It is located in the very healthy and pleasant village, Yorkville, at the head of the railroad, in the midst of a dense and thrifty population. The value of such an Institution, considered either as a means of widely diffusing important knowledge and wholesome moral influence, or of promoting the intellectual and social qualities, as well as the pecuniary interests of a people, cannot be easily estimated. In all these respects, Yorkville is rising rapidly. Property has greatly risen in value; houses are going up in every part of the village. An appearance of thrift and content is everywhere apparent. In every countenance a stranger may read this expression, "Now Yorkville is destined to become a vastly important place." And no traveller, unless he be a stranger to common sense, will have any inclination to dispute the supposed fact.

The Bethel Presbytery, at its late session, authorized the erection of a large and magnificent brick edifice for the accommodation of the school—the building at present occupied being wholly inadequate to the purposes intended. In this, both the wisdom and the proper appreciation of education, on the part of the Presbytery, are clearly apparent. It is to be hoped that other Presbyteries and Synods will profit by this example—that other villages also will learn how they can most effectually and permanently promote their prosperity.

X.

PRINCETON COLLEGE.

AN EXPLANATION.

We hope that our readers will exercise a little patience in attending to an explanation made by our Princeton brethren and ourselves. In our first article on this subject, we had not the slightest intention of imputing unchristian motives to our Princeton brethren. Finding that they so misinterpreted our remarks, we expressly disclaimed the purpose in the next number. Our view of the case, as between Princeton and Lafayette, was not that the Professors of the former wished to injure the latter; but that the prosperous endowment of the latter was the occasion of stimulating these gentlemen to their present course. The following communication from Dr. J. McLean of Princeton is inserted with great pleasure.

College of New Jersey,
Princeton, April 1854.

My Dear Sir—I am altogether unwilling to believe that you designed to make an erroneous impression in your article in the Record; and I take it for granted that you will at once disavow any such design. Yet, if I do not greatly mistake the fair inferences from some of the language employed, you do us in Princeton great injustice. You represent us as "alarmed at the effects of Church superintendence," as seen in the present prosperity of Lafayette College; and as "asking the Church to change her present collegiate policy, simply in view of the growing prosperity of new colleges under ecclesiastical care." Thus you leave your readers to infer, that to our fears, or to our jealousy of Lafayette, lest that College should yet prove a rival of Princeton, they are to look for the motives which prompt us "to agitate still further the whole subject of ecclesiastical supervision." Surely, you might have imagined, at least as a thing possible, that we were influenced by a higher motive.

Again: your readers would very naturally infer from your remarks upon Professor Hope's letter, that it was designed to embarrass the efforts to endow Lafayette College; and in so presenting it, you do Professor Hope great injustice. Knowing his views, and believing with him, that the mode of endowment discussed in his letter was one that would eventually be injurious to all our Colleges, I urged him to write upon the subject. The plan discussed by Professor Hope was not, as you well know, peculiar to Lafayette, but had been acted on by numerous other literary institutions. In regard to his letter, the only thing to be regretted is, that it did not make its appearance long before. In that case, it might have saved more than one institution from embarrassments, which must almost inevitably follow from that mode of endowment.

The real motive for all we have done, or intend to do, is simply this: We believe that the policy of the friends of Church supervision for our Colleges, is an unwise policy, and one that must ultimately prove hurtful to the Church and Colleges both. And as we are not satisfied with their arguments, we are desirous that this policy should be more thoroughly examined than it has ever yet been. It is a very ungracious task for any one, and I feel it to be so, to oppose the favourite schemes of men who are aiming to do good; and their very object often saves their schemes from the rigid scrutiny which every great enterprise should receive. Had all the friends of Church supervision for Colleges gone on as the earlier friends of this scheme began, seeking merely to obtain the good-will and patronage of the friends of piety and learning, in behalf of their institutions, it is more than probable that no voice would have been raised against their measures; but when, in order to accomplish their ends, they lay a claim, if not to exclusive patronage, at least to precedence in the benefactions of the churches, and also claim, in behalf of the Colleges under the Church courts, that they alone are to be regarded as furnishing a guaranty for the proper religious training of our youth; and when they are seeking to propagate opinions in regard to the duty of the Church in the matter of education, which opinions, if generally adopted, cannot but work to the detriment of the older institutions; and add to this, that the officers of the Board of Education are, in their official capacity, doing all in their power to enforce these opinions, was it our duty to sit down quietly, and raise no voice in our own defence, content with the privilege of our College being the last one to be devoured? If the opinions to which we refer should hereafter gain ground in our Church, how long will it be before attempts will be made to persuade the Synod of New Jersey to take the course which the Synod of Pittsburg did, in reference to Jefferson; or even to go further, and establish another College at our very doors? Had we at Princeton no connection with the Colleges, still, as members and as ministers of the Presbyterian Church, it would be our right and our duty to discuss this subject of Church supervision fully and freely; and no man has a right to take us to task for doing so, provided we do it temperately and courteously. Most respectfully,

Yours, JOHN MACLEAN.

P. S.—Permit me to add, that when Dr. James W. Alexander, in 1846, wrote the report on parochial schools, he could have had no reference to the question at issue between us; and I am confident that he does not favour your opinions in regard to the best supervision for Colleges.

A few remarks are added, and, we trust, "temperately and courteously." If the former articles have been interpreted as impeaching motives, we again disclaim all intention of doing so. The aim was to explain, in part, the policy of the present action of some of the Princeton Professors. As a faithful minister is sometimes roused up to new activity by the establishment of a second church in the same town or vicinity, so the new College under ecclesiastical supervision operated (as we supposed) in arousing the old institution. This fact was intended to show our readers that the Preface to the Princeton pamphlet was to be taken with some grains of allowance.

Dr. J. Maclean says that Dr. Hope's opposition to cheap endowments was "not designed to embarrass the efforts of Lafayette College." But the effect, so far as it had any effect, was just in that direction. That our brethren had some apprehensions about the Lafayette plan, seems pretty clear; for the second objection, stated by Dr. Hope, was that "it is likely to interfere injuriously with the prosperity of other colleges. . . It may be regarded as certain that a portion of the students destined to other institutions, will be drawn off by the lure of cheap education. And this in its turn cannot fail to curtail, to some extent, the resources, and to cripple the strength of such institutions. . . . . It is the liability to this disastrous result which gives other institutions, and the friends of a higher education, the right of remonstrance; and even makes it their duty to meddle with the new experiment, because it first and inevitably meddles with them." p. 30, 1. Can anything be plainer than that the Lafayette plan of cheap endowment was distasteful to the two professors at Princeton? Do they not openly avow that it had a tendency to draw off students destined to other institutions, and that thus they had a right to "meddle with the new experiment?" However much they may have charitably desired, and we do not question their intentions, "to save more than one institution from embarrassment," it is very certain that they wished to save one from that "disastrous result."

Again, Dr. Hope, in his anonymous preface, repeats the idea, and objects that "these endowments are to be procured in a form that is expressly intended to carry the students along with them;" p. 5. We might add other testimonies. But why add more, when the point is so distinctly admitted, that the endowment efforts of Lafayette (the success of which was owing to the influence of the Synod of Philadelphia,) have led some of the Princeton Professors to make counter efforts? We omit all reference to the apparent change of their views about the principle of ecclesiastical supervision. It is true that the pamphlet does not mention Lafayette College by name; but the reason was a good one. Nevertheless, Dr. Hope does make an obnoxious mention, on p. 30, of "an endowment of $100,000, in the form of scholarships of $100 each," which is the very plan of Lafayette, the only College which has fixed upon precisely those sums!

Dr. Maclean, we think, makes a mistake in stating that the friends of ecclesiastical supervision claim that such colleges "are alone to be regarded as furnishing a guaranty for the proper religious instruction of our youth." So far from this being the case, the last Annual Report of the Board of Education particularly asserts the contrary: "On the contrary, their common basis of Christianity imposes the obligation of peace. All may freely co-operate in the great work of Christian education. Our Church has never designed to interfere with any supervision that practically answers a good purpose, and that is in accordance with the local public opinion. The great aim of our Church is religious education; and although ecclesiastical supervision has been considered the best means of securing and perpetuating it, there ought to be no hostility, but harmony, between all institutions that inculcate true religion, whatever be the form of their charter."—Annual Report, 1853.

The officers of the Board of Education have always endeavoured to express and to act out these convictions. They are the steadfast friends of Jefferson and Princeton, as well as of ecclesiastical colleges. This is the position they intend to maintain. Dr. J. Maclean was kind enough to say in his pamphlet, in reference to one of these officers, "I do not know that we have a warmer friend of the College in this place, than the Rev. Secretary of the Board of Education." We thank him for this acknowledgment; and trust that we shall prove its truth more and more.

In regard to the apprehension that the Synod of New Jersey might propose Synodical supervision as expedient for Princeton College, we can only say, that we have never heard of such a proposition. We think, however, that the present course of some of the College Professors is strongly operating against themselves in the minds of at least some members of the Synod. We have heard of more than one distinguished member who has complained of their policy as objectionable and unwise. It is our earnest hope and our belief that that venerable institution will continue to prosper; and we cannot doubt that, when the present agitation has passed away, the wonder will be that it ever took place.

RELIGIOUS COLLEGES.

A writer in the "Southern Presbyterian" makes some interesting statements about the relation of Davidson and Oglethorpe Colleges; the first under the care of the Synod of North Carolina, and the second under the care of the Synod of Georgia. The three things required by a parent are reasonable conditions of college life. The writer alluded to says:

"In relation to the value of denominational colleges, and the duty of the Church in regard to them, I wish to state one significant fact, which Christians ought not to overlook—Davidson and Oglethorpe Colleges are contributing annually nearly half of the students that go to the Theological Seminary at Columbia—though they are yet in their infancy, and graduate, each, not more than one-third, at the most, of the number of students who annually receive diplomas from each of some half dozen older colleges, within the field to which the Seminary looks for its supplies.

A distinguished jurist of Georgia, one of the ornaments of his State and of the bench, informed me that he would not risk his sons in a college which could not guarantee three things:—1st, Pious teachers, whose examples were not counteracted by the conduct of irreligious officers. 2d, Sound religious instruction, not liable to be counteracted by contrary teachings from any Professor's chair; and 3d, The association of a goodly proportion of the sons of pious men, who had been properly trained at home. With these provisions he felt some security, although even then he trembled for his children whilst exposed to the perilous ordeal of college life. Under the relaxed system of domestic training—the early age at which boys are sent to college in this country, and the severe temptations attendant everywhere on college life, he felt that it was always a hazardous period.

These are weighty considerations, worthy to be seriously pondered by every pious and considerate father."

MONTGOMERY PRESBYTERIAL ACADEMIES.

The beautiful residence and grounds of Dr. H. McG. Kent, adjoining Christiansburg, have been purchased for the sum of $10,000, with a view of enlarging the Female College established in that village a year or two ago. This institution is now in a very flourishing condition, employing four thoroughly qualified teachers. The English Bible forms the basis of instruction. Two new streets are to be opened, one in front and the other in rear of the College buildings. Some twenty or thirty eligible building lots will be offered for sale during the Summer. The remarkable healthiness of the climate, the high moral character of the community, the immediate vicinity of two valuable and popular Mineral Springs, together with the advantages offered by the Male Presbyterial Academy, and the Female College, commend themselves to those who think of removing to the mountains of Virginia, or who have children to educate.

SCHOLARSHIPS.

The sum of Seventy-five dollars forms a scholarship to assist a student in the collegiate course, and the sum of One Hundred dollars in the theological course.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST.

All that the Board deem it important to furnish is their CORPORATE NAME, viz.

"The Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

Any person disposed to leave a legacy to the Board of Education, is requested to insert the right CORPORATE NAME. The State laws differ so much that no one Form will answer in all the States.

The following form may be used in Pennsylvania.

I give and devise to the Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America the sum of ——— dollars to and for the uses of the said Board of Education and under its direction.

[When real estate or other property is given, let it be particularly described.]

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,
No. 23 Centre Street, New York.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

Mission House, May 13, 1854.

China.—The latest intelligence from the missions in China is from Ningpo, January 25th; Canton, February 23d; and from Shanghai, February 13th.

At Canton and Ningpo, the brethren report themselves as dwelling in peace and safety, and are permitted to prosecute their labours without material interruption.

At Shanghai, the missionaries were generally well, with the exception of Mr. Wight, whose health still continues precarious, and serious fears are entertained that it will be necessary for him to return to this country.

No important changes had taken place in the relative position of the contending parties at Shanghai. The Imperialists had sprung a mine under the wall of the city, and effected a breach; but instead of rushing in, the insurgents were allowed to sally out, and not only repulsed the besieging party, but destroyed one of their batteries, and carried the guns in triumph to the city. It was generally expected that Peking would soon fall into the hands of the insurgents, as they were soon to be reinforced by an army of 40,000 men, who were on their way from Nanking to join them.

India.—Letters have been received from Allahabad, February 18th; Amballa, February 17th; and from Agra, March 7th. A letter has also been received from Mr. Warren, at Calcutta, on his way to this country, of February 16th.

At Allahabad, the great gathering at the annual Mela was in progress, during which the brethren had been able to preach much more than they had ever done on any similar occasion; and they felt very much encouraged by the unusually serious attention which had been given to their instructions. The pupils of the school had been kept at their studies too, which on previous occasions had been found almost impossible.

At Amballa, the new school-house and chapel had been opened for public use. The missionaries were generally well, with the exception of Mrs. Orbison, and her indisposition was not considered serious. More serious apprehensions are expressed in the same letters about the health of Mrs. Janvier of the Lodiana station. Her indisposition has been of longer standing, and has thus far baffled the ordinary remedies used for her recovery.

Siam.—The latest intelligence from this mission, is a letter of Mr. Mattoon of the 28th of January. He had just returned from a tour in the country, which he had made for the purpose of preaching and distributing tracts and copies of the gospel. He had had good audiences, and his books were received with great avidity. He had nearly finished the translation of the gospel of Luke, and hoped it would not be long before the translation of the entire New Testament would be completed. Dr. House was at Korat, (a city in a distant part of the kingdom,) and in good health, and was about to set out on his return to Bangkok.

Indian Tribes.—Letters have been received from Spencer Academy as late as April 12th; Wapanucka, April 7th; Iowa and Sac Mission, April 20th; Otoe and Omaha, April 8th; Kowetah, March 15th; Tallahasse, March 7th; Middle Village, March 20th; and from Grand Traverse, April 11th.

The missionary brethren at these different stations were generally well, and were prosecuting their various labours as usual. At the Kowetah station there was unusual seriousness among the pupils, two of whom had been received to the communion of the Church.

Papal Europe.—A letter from Dr. Revel, dated 1st of April, expressing heart-felt thanks for the remittance forwarded to the Waldenses' Synod by the Executive Committee, and giving an interesting account of the work of evangelization in Italy, has been received, and will be published at an early day in one of the missionary journals.

SEVENTEENTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The Board of Foreign Missions held their seventeenth annual meeting at the Mission House in New York, on Monday afternoon of the 8th inst. It was a cause of sincere gratitude that the Executive Committee were enabled to report decided progress in every department of missionary labour. The Annual Report, which gives a full account of the present state of the missions, will soon be sent forth to the churches, and will communicate such information as will gladden the hearts of the people of God.

One of the most interesting facts brought out at the meeting was the announcement of an advance in the receipts of the treasury over those of the previous year, of more than $20,000. This has resulted in part, no doubt, from the appeal which the Executive Committee were compelled to make to the churches last autumn, for increased contributions, to meet the expenses of the missions in India and China; but still more, we apprehend, from a growing conviction among our church members that their contributions to this cause ought to be increased from year to year.

This timely aid has saved the Board from a large, and what would have been a very embarrassing debt. At the same time, it has left the very pleasing impression upon the minds of those more immediately concerned in carrying on this work, that the churches are not only sincerely interested in it, but that they may be confidently relied upon to sustain the Board in any extraordinary emergencies that may arise in their prosecution of this work.

There is no reason why there should not be a steady increase in the funds of the Board. The general prosperity of the country, in which the members of our churches have their full share, enables them to do more each successive year. At the same time, the operations of the Board are every day becoming more extensive, and from the very nature of the work itself, require an increased outlay of funds.

The Board has its missions now among the Indian tribes of the North-west, among the Jews of our large cities, for the Chinese of California, in South America, in Papal Europe, Western Africa, Northern India, Siam, and China. And these missions are not only expanding themselves, but are becoming increasingly expensive, in proportion to their general prosperity.

The work assigned the Foreign Board is one of solemn responsibility and of immense magnitude. It requires the exercise of the profoundest wisdom in directing its affairs, and to be rendered effective, it must be sustained by ample means.

In prosecuting the work of evangelization in our own country, the agency employed is so varied and multiplied, and the channels through which the beneficence of the Church flows are so many, that we scarcely form any correct idea of the full amount of what is done.

But all that is done for the foreign field passes through a single channel, and consequently renders the duties and the labours of the Foreign Board alike complex and multifarious. They must see to it that the gospel is preached to the perishing inhabitants of the earth, but before they can do this to any considerable extent, they must provide the means and train the men who are to do it. It is their duty to circulate the word of God among all the families and kindreds of the earth, but before this can be done, it must be translated and printed in their languages; and in a large portion of the missionary field the people must be taught to read before they can appreciate the Bible, even after it is translated into their languages.

Besides all this, the Board is charged with a variety of duties, which do not properly come under the care of the Church in this country at all. The establishment and support of schools, the direction and supervision of printing-presses, the erection of school-houses and churches, the providing of medicines and dispensaries for the sick, and various other duties, too numerous to be mentioned, but all of indispensable importance to the evangelization of heathen nations, and all to be provided for out of funds placed at the disposal of the Board by the churches. We rejoice in the evidence we have, that our churches are beginning to appreciate the importance and the magnitude of the work, and we trust the day is not far distant, when our own beloved Church will be second to no other in the world, in carrying on this great work of love and mercy.

ABSTRACT OF THE SEVENTEENTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The receipts from all sources, including a balance of last year of $618.97, have been,	$174,453 02
Expenditures,	173,185 50
Leaving a balance in Treasury of	$1,267 52

PUBLICATIONS.

The Board have continued to occupy six pages of the Home and Foreign Record. Of the Foreign Missionary, 20,000 copies of the newspaper, and 3,500 of the pamphlet form, (enlarged to thirty-two pages,) have been published. Of the last Annual Report, 4,300 copies of the pamphlet, and 10,000 of the newspaper form have been issued; also a number of circulars and missionary papers.

A Manual of Missions, giving a brief and succinct account of the history and present condition of the Missions of the Board, has also been prepared by one of the Secretaries, and published, but not at the expense of the Board.

MISSIONARIES AND ASSISTANT MISSIONARIES SENT OUT.

Nine missionaries, (one of whom was a returned missionary on a visit to this country,) and twelve male and female assistant missionaries—making in all twenty-one—have been sent out.

AGENCIES.

The Rev. William S. Rogers spent eleven months, and the Rev. James Wilson five and a half months, as agents of the Board in the North-western States. One of the Secretaries spent two months in the autumn in meeting the Synods of the West and South, and in preaching to a few of the churches in that region. The clerical Secretaries have preached in as many of the churches in New York, Philadelphia, and their vicinity, at the time of their annual collection for missions, as was found compatible with their duties at the Mission House. At the present, and for some time past, the Board has not had a single agent in the field; and they have depended, therefore, upon the ministers of the churches to do this work themselves; and in a large number of cases it has been done with good effect.

MISSIONS AMONG THE INDIAN TRIBES.

The Board has seven missions among the Indian tribes of our own country, viz: among the Choctaws, Chickasaws, Creeks, Seminoles, Iowas and Sacs, Otoes and Omahas, and the Chippewas of the State of Michigan.

Connected with these missions are eight ordained missionaries, and sixty-one male and female assistant missionaries; eleven churches, and upwards of one hundred native communicants; eight boarding and three day-schools, in which there are about six hundred pupils in various stages of their education.

Additions have been made to most of the churches, and the prospects of these missions were never more promising than at the present time. Several of these tribes, especially the Choctaws, the Chickasaws, the Creeks, and the Chippewas, are making decided progress in almost every department of civilization; and the time is not far distant when they may be safely incorporated with our government, and be placed on a footing of entire social and civil equality with the white inhabitants of the country.

MISSIONS IN AFRICA.

The Board has two missions in Western Africa; one of which is in Liberia, and the other near the equator, and known as the Corisco Mission. Connected with these, there are six stations and outstations, six ordained missionaries, one licentiate preacher, and eight male and female assistant missionaries; five churches, and about one hundred and twenty communicants; seven schools, (one of which is a classical institution,) and embracing in all about two hundred and fifty pupils. All of the churches have received accessions, and one has experienced a season of special reviving.

The Alexander High School is in a flourishing condition, and is doing as much for the moral, social, and intellectual improvement of this infant Republic, as any institution that has ever been established in that country. The missionaries at Corisco have enjoyed good health, and one of their number has penetrated the country to the distance of one hundred and fifty miles, and has brought to the knowledge of the Church a new and most inviting field for missionary enterprise; and the Board hope that the day is not far distant, when the blessings of the gospel may be extended from this point to the very heart of this great continent.

MISSIONS IN INDIA.

In Northern India, the Board have four missions, viz: Lodiana, Furrukhabad, Agra, and Allahabad; thirteen stations and out stations; twenty-six ordained missionaries, (two of whom are natives of India;) one licentiate preacher; twenty-one female assistant missionaries from this country; twenty-five native helpers; nine churches, with about two hundred and sixty native communicants; four printing-presses, from which have issued nearly 3,000,000 pages; twenty-seven schools, (several of which are high-schools,) with nearly 3000 pupils.

The missionaries entertain the most encouraging views of their work. There is a more general and a more decided desire among the people to listen to the claims of the gospel. Hinduism is evidently loosing its hold upon the mind and heart of the people; and when the 3000 youths whom our missionaries have under religious and intellectual training, go forth among their countrymen, their influence must be felt, and be productive of immense good.

MISSION IN SIAM.

In Siam there is one mission—connected with which there are two ordained missionaries; one licentiate preacher; one female assistant missionary; one native helper; one boarding-school, with about thirty pupils. A large amount of labour has been performed in preaching, distributing religious books and tracts, and itinerating among the people. Mrs. Mattoon has free access to the female members of the royal family, and it is believed that her visits will result in good to those who would otherwise be inaccessible to the gospel.

CHINA.

In China there are three missions; Canton, Ningpo, and Shanghai.

Connected with these, there are twelve ordained missionaries; two physicians; thirteen female assistant missionaries; three native helpers; seven schools, with one hundred and seventy pupils; two printing-presses, from which have been issued eight separate volumes or tracts, and between 2 and 3,000,000 of pages. The missionaries have been actively employed in the various duties of preaching, translating, teaching, distributing religious books and tracts; and those of the medical profession in the duties of the dispensaries, in addition to their other labours.

The present posture of affairs in China is one of immense interest, and the conviction on the mind of the Christian public is growing stronger every day, that the country is on the eve of a great crisis, which, it is believed, will be eminently favourable to the spread of Christianity; and in view of this, it is exceedingly desirable that these missions should be strengthened and greatly enlarged.

CALIFORNIA AND SOUTH AMERICA.

The Board has recently commenced missions for the Chinese of California, and for the Roman Catholic population in South America; both of which, it is hoped, will be productive of great good to the communities for whose benefit they have been established.

MISSIONS IN PAPAL EUROPE.

The Board has no missionaries in Papal Europe under their immediate direction. Their appropriations have been made to Evangelical Societies, which are known to be prosecuting the work of evangelization with zeal, prudence, and wisdom; and the results of their labours, especially in France and Italy, are of the happiest and most encouraging nature. The appropriations made to these Societies for the promotion of the work of evangelization, including $7,786.73 invested for the endowment of the seminary at Latour, have been $14,973.22.

MISSIONS TO THE JEWS.

The Board has three missions to the Jews in this country, viz: in New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore; connected with which, are three ordained ministers, and one licentiate preacher. They have free access to their kinsmen according to the flesh; and in many instances, it is believed, with the happiest results.

SUMMARY.

The Board has under its direction, independent of what is done for Papal Europe, twenty-two separate missions; fifty-nine ordained missionaries; three licentiate preachers; one hundred and nine male and female assistant missionaries; twenty-nine native helpers; twenty-six churches, and about five hundred native church members; fifty-three schools, and 4050 scholars; six printing presses; and have published more than 6,000,000 pages.

In conclusion, the Board would express the hope, that this work of mercy and love, in which they are engaged, may continue to grow and expand, until the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ.

Mission House, New York, May 6, 1854.

MISSIONS IN EUROPE.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM DR. REVEL.

The following extract from a letter of Dr. Revel will be read with interest. Whilst there is occasion to rejoice in what the Lord is doing by the agency of the Waldenses' church, it is greatly to be regretted that so little has been done for the endowment of the Seminary at Latour. We trust our Christian friends will not forget this most important cause.

Your most welcome letter, and the bill of exchange for £124 15*s.* 6*d.* sterling, came to me soon enough to give us cheerful hopes for the new year—to foretoken to us a good year. I thank you very cordially for your kind remembrance, and for your readiness to extend to us a helping hand and extricate us from our embarrassment. I beg you to express, as occasion may be offered, our most sincere and lively gratitude to all the generous brethren who have so promptly responded to your appeal. We are fully convinced of your determined and active disposition to assist us in collecting the necessary funds for the endowment of our Seminary. The acceptance, so unanimous and touching, which that proposal received in Philadelphia from the numerous friends of the Lord who were gathered to deliberate in his presence upon the most weighty interests of his Church, cannot rest with a declaration of words and sentiments, but will certainly convert itself into deeds, (as has been the case already in part,) under the blessing of Him, in whose name I was sent to you, and in whose name ye received me with the most cordial affection and kind attentions, which are deeply engraven on my heart, and will remain among the most agreeable and precious remembrances of my life.

I have the pleasure to announce to you that the new church of Turin was solemnly opened for public worship on the 15th of December last. The services were most edifying, and gave rise to no hostile demonstration, although the Roman clergy had set everything to work in order to call forth opposition. The people of Turin, the town council, and the government have vied with each other in zeal to testify to us their favourable disposition. You will bless the Lord with us, to think that he has permitted us, in his infinite goodness, to erect in the capital of the Sardinian States, and in the most frequented part of the city, a church in which every Sabbath his pure gospel is preached, twice in French, and twice in Italian, to all those who hunger and thirst after righteousness. It is a remarkable event in the history of the kingdom of God in Italy. Whatever may be the vicissitudes which the future has in store for our peninsula, and for our European continent, it will remain as the testimony of a noble victory gained over the ignorance, malice, and bigotry of Rome, by the force of the truth.

CHINA: NINGPO MISSION.

EXTRACT FROM THE REPORT OF D. B. M'CARTEE, M. D., ON THE MEDICAL DEPARTMENT OF THE NINGPO MISSION.

The following extracts from the report of Dr. McCartee will be read with interest, not only on account of the singular customs and notions of the Chinese, which they bring to light, but for the important influence which this department of labour is likely to exert upon the moral, social, and religious condition of the people.

Since our last report, the dispensary operations at Ningpo have been continued at the same place, and on the same days of the week as then mentioned. The number of patients, and the nature of the diseases of which they have applied to be healed, have also presented but little variation. Surgical operations have been mostly confined to ophthalmic cases, although gunshot and other wounds which required operations have occasionally presented themselves. In attending the families of Mandarins, I have several times been called upon to prescribe for the ladies of the establishment; and on such occasions, the patient sat or had her couch placed behind a screen, which was turned aside just enough to allow her to put out her hand and wrist, (that the pulse might be felt,) while the rest of the person was invisible.

Gratitude of a father for the cure of his child.
